Gaining Levels: A companion character begins with experience points equal to the minimum amount that the character needed to attain his or her current level. Companion characters gain a full share of the experience points earned by the party.

When a companion character gains a level, he or she receives the following benefits:

Hit Points: Controller companion characters gain 4 hit points, leaders or strikers gain 5 hit points, and defenders gain 6 hit points.

Attack Bonus: A companion character's attack bonus increases by 1.

Defenses: Each of the character's defenses increases by 1.

Damage: When a companion character achieves an even-numbered level, increase his or her damage rolls by 1.

Powers: You can replace one of the companion character's encounter powers with a new encounter power from a class that has a matching role. The level of the new power must be equal to or lower than the companion character's new level.

Sample Companion Character

Orryn Glittercave is a gnome warrior, a knight, and champion for his people.

Orryn is big and tough for a gnome, and he walks with a limp (the result of an old injury).

Maybe he wants to join the party to help protect gnomes and other friendly fey creatures. Or the PCs could have rescued him from captivity at the hands of foul monsters, in which case Orryn swears to help the PCs complete their current quest. In either case, he aids the characters in a couple adventures before returning home.

Orryn displays fierce loyalty to his friends and risks his life to protect people he cares about. And he expects the same loyalty in return.

Unknown to the PCs, Orryn was briefly a member of an evil cult in his youth. When he discovered the truth about the cult, he quit the group, but its members still hold a grudge against Orryn.

Mechanically, you built Orryn as a 4th-level defender with fighter powers. His Fortitude is 2 points higher than normal, resulting in a corresponding drop in his Will. This adjustment reflects his tough but sometimes rash nature.

| Orryn Glittercave | Level 4 Defender |
|---|---|
| Small fey humanoid, gnome | XP– |
| Initiative +2 | Senses Perception +2; low-light vision |

MAKING THINGS LEVEL

Even though the Dungeon Master's Guide recommends that all characters gain levels at the same rate, you might have characters of different levels who want to adventure together. Perhaps an old gaming buddy drops in for a guest appearance and wants to play a character six months out of date, or a new player arrives with a character who doesn't measure up to the rest of the PCs. In such a circumstance, you might intentionally set up a situation in which one PC acts as a sidekick to a group of higher-level characters.

You can adjust a character to fit in with a group of characters of significantly higher or lower level. Use the adjustments described in this section as a temporary fix—if a character wants to join the group permanently, adjust the character's level according to the parameters in the Player's Handbook.

Use this approach for no more than one or two characters in a party and only as a short-term solution. Although a sidekick of this nature can keep up with higher-level comrades for a few encounters, he or she doesn't have a full range of powers and might quickly run out of options. Similarly, a character scaled down to adventure in a lower-level group still has advantages over his or her allies; such a character outshines the other characters if he or she hangs around for too long.

Don't use this system unless at least two levels separate the characters. A difference of just one level between characters is not enough to worry about.

Up from a Lower Level

If you need to temporarily boost a character's abilities and don't want to use the normal process, this section offers a simple system that keeps the lower-level character on par with the challenges in your adventure.

These adjustments might represent a short-cut abstraction of the abilities possessed by higher-level characters: "Garik is 12th level. His character sheet lists him as 6th level because I haven't had time to advance him yet." Alternatively, you might make the boosts temporary: The character draws on the talents and insights of his higher-level allies to survive battles in which the challenges are over his head.

To adjust a character's statistics, use the following guidelines. In each case, "level difference" is the difference between the level of the character you want to adjust and the level of the rest of the party.

Attacks: Increase the character's attack bonus by the level difference.

Defenses: Increase all the character's defenses by the level difference.

Skill Checks: Increase all the character's skill check modifiers by one-half the level difference (round down).

Ability Checks: Increase all the character's ability check modifiers by one-half the level difference (round down).

Hit Points: Increase the character's hit points by an amount equal to the level difference × the number of hit points the character normally gains per level.

Damage Rolls: The character gains a bonus to damage rolls with encounter and daily attack powers equal to one-half the level difference (round down).

If the party is 21st level or higher and the character is not, treat the character's at-will attack powers as if the character were 21st level.

What the Character Doesn't Receive: New powers, new feats, ability score increases, improved class features, paragon path benefits, epic destiny benefits, additional magic items, extra uses of daily magic item powers, or any other benefits normally gained by a character of the new level.

Experience Points: The character gains the same amount of experience from encounters as everyone else. This adjustment allows the character to rapidly close the level gap with the rest of the party.

Example: A visiting player brings a 5th-level fighter to your table, whereas the rest of the group has 10th-level characters (a level difference of 5). You give the character a +5 bonus to attack rolls and defenses, a +2 bonus (one-half the level difference, rounded down) to skill checks and ability checks, and 30 additional hit points (a level difference of 5 × 6 hit points per level). The character receives a +2 bonus to damage rolls with encounter and daily attack powers.

When the party overcomes a 10th-level encounter, this 5th-level character gains 500 XP. The 10th-level characters need eleven of those encounters to reach 11th level, whereas five encounters bring the 5th-level fighter to 6th level. After those five encounters, start with the base character again, advance the character to 6th level normally, and repeat this process (this time with a level difference of 4).

Down from a Higher Level

Although low-level characters more commonly tag along with high-level characters, the converse can also occur. If you need to add one character to a party whose level is significantly lower—perhaps a grandmaster joining the group for an adventure with his students—use the following guidelines to adjust statistics accordingly.

Attacks: Reduce the character's attack bonus by the level difference.

Defenses: Reduce all the character's defenses by the level difference.

Skill Checks: Reduce all the character's skill check modifiers by one-half the level difference (round down).

Ability Checks: Reduce all the character's ability check modifiers by one-half the level difference (round down).

Hit Points: Reduce the character's hit points by an amount equal to the level difference × the number of hit points the character normally gains per level.

Powers: The character loses all utility powers of higher level than the party level. The character also loses all powers gained from a paragon path or epic destiny if those powers are higher in level than the party level.

Damage Rolls: The character takes a penalty to damage rolls with encounter and daily attack powers equal to one-half the level difference (round down).

If the character is 21st level or higher and the party is lower in level, treat the character's at-will attack powers as if the character was 20th level.

Don't Change: Don't reduce the character's ability scores. Don't adjust any class features. Keep the character's paragon path features and epic destiny features (if any). Don't remove any feats. Don't change any magic items, and don't change the number of uses of daily magic item powers the character gains.

Experience Points: The character gains the same amount of experience from encounters as everyone else. This practice prevents the character from outpacing the rest of the party (and encourages the character to return to adventures more appropriate to his or her level).

Example: A 20th-level wizard tags along with a group of 10th-level characters (a level difference of 10). Impose a –10 penalty to the character's attack rolls and defenses and a –5 penalty to skill checks and ability checks. Reduce the character's hit points by 40 (a level difference of 10 × 4 hit points per level). Impose a –5 penalty to the character's damage rolls with encounter and daily attack powers. He loses his 12th-level utility power and all his paragon path powers (his 11th-level encounter attack power, his 16th-level utility power, and his 20th-level daily attack power).

The 500 XP award this character receives from completing a 10th-level encounter does little to help him reach the next level—he needs 64 such encounters to reach 21st level. Of course, during that time, the rest of the party gains several levels, decreasing the level difference. And as the rest of the party advances, the character looks forward to facing more challenging encounters that earn him more experience.

MULTIPLE CHARACTERS PER PLAYER

With each release of new player options, the expanding D&D game offers ever more possibilities—more than players can explore in the course of a normal campaign. What do you do if your players, excited by the classes and races in Player's Handbook 2, want to start new characters? Do you deny their requests? Do you throw your campaign continuity out the window and let a whole new party pick up where the old one left off? Or do you jettison your whole campaign and start again?

Using a solution less drastic than all of these can keep your players happy and your campaign stable.

If your campaign uses a "dungeon of the week" approach (see page 134 of the Dungeon Master's Guide), your players could bring different characters on different adventures. Perhaps the player characters (including multiple characters per player) belong to an exploration society. For any particular mission, they assemble a group of adventurers that changes from mission to mission. In this situation, a player could play a tiefling paladin in one session and a goliath warden in the next. Just make sure that the party remains balanced and that each of its different configurations includes a proper mix of roles. Whenever a character gains a level, all other characters of that player should also gain a level, so the player can swap his or her characters in and out of the group.

You might use a similar solution if you plan a campaign that's particularly lethal to adventurers. If you intend to formulate encounters and story lines that result in character death on a regular basis (and your players agree that this approach sounds fun), tell your players to keep a backup character on hand, of the same level as the rest of the party.

If your campaign involves world-shaking events unfolding in multiple places across the globe, you might invite your players to create two different parties of characters, and then switch the action between groups for different adventures. One group of characters searches for the hilt of the legendary sword Durindana while another group of heroes looks for pieces of the shattered blade. The goal of both groups is to reforge the sword and wield it against Vecna. You might run one group's adventure for a few sessions, and then switch to the other group for the next few. All the characters in each group should be the same level, though the two groups might differ in levels. For example, one band of epic-level characters deals with a terrible threat against the entire fabric of the universe, while their heroic-level counterparts contend with the local repercussions of that threat.

If you have a small number of players and you want each player to play multiple characters at once to have a group of four or five characters, you should use the rules in this chapter for companion characters rather than making any player take on more than one full-fledged player character.

CHAPTER 2

Advanced Encounters

JASON A. ENGLE

This chapter expands on the information presented in Chapter 4 of the Dungeon Master's Guide to give you tips, techniques, and a few tricks to make dynamic, exciting combat encounters for your game. The chapter covers a wide range of topics.

- Encounter as Story: Building on the story foundations laid out in Chapter 1, this section discusses encounters as turning points in the story of your adventure and focuses on encounter objectives that add purpose to a combat encounter.
- Player Motivations: This section focuses on the player motivations described in the Dungeon Master's Guide and describes how to tailor combat encounters to the players at your table.
- Large and Small Groups: This information can help you design encounters for unusually large or small groups of player characters.
- Encounters and Attrition: This section includes a discussion of encounter pacing and suggestions for how to push characters onward when they want to stop for an extended rest.
- Creating Movement: Learn how to avoid static encounters.
- Terrain: Using additional terrain in your encounters, including terrain with inherent attack powers, can make each encounter unique.
- Designing Traps: Use this guide to create traps for your adventures; you'll find plenty of examples.
- Pulling It All Together: An example encounter combines the elements of this chapter into a dynamic fight.

Encounter as Story

A well-crafted encounter is a key scene in the story of your adventure and in the overarching story of the characters in your campaign. If you build your adventure like a structured fantasy story, sharing a similar dramatic structure with novels, movies, and plays, then an encounter equals a scene in that story. The encounter acts as a discrete element in which tension builds in steady increments toward the climax of the adventure. (See Chapter 1 for more discussion of story structure.)

Viewed as part of a larger story, a great encounter has three key ingredients.

History: It builds on what the characters have learned in past encounters and previous game sessions.

Clear Objective: The characters must try to accomplish a specific task.

Significant Outcome: The characters might easily accomplish the objective, barely succeed, or fail entirely. However the encounter resolves, the outcome matters and relates to later encounters.

Building on the Past

A strong encounter builds on information the characters have acquired in the course of previous encounters. You can create stronger encounters by foreshadowing what lies ahead.

Introducing information about an encounter ahead of time builds anticipation or apprehension. For example, if you know the climactic battle in an orc-filled adventure features the brutal orc chieftain and his ogre bodyguard, orcs in earlier encounters could name the chieftain and speak fearfully of the ogre. When one orc suggests running from the PCs' onslaught, another says, "No! Angarr will feed us to the ogre if we flee!"

Laying the groundwork for future encounters can also help the players succeed. For example, the party seeks an audience with a grand duke who has no tolerance for rudeness or insolence. When the duke is introduced to the characters, tell the players that the duke frowns at them and acts condescending. This information might keep the PCs on their toes particularly if you also tell them the grand duke recently imprisoned someone who was rude to him during an audience. This setup builds the players' anticipation as they prepare for the audience and helps them avoid imprisonment.

You can use the same technique to prepare the characters for random wilderness encounters. Let players know what to expect if they wander off the beaten path or stray into the nearby forest: Perhaps woods folk warn the PCs of deadly spiders or fey-haunted clearings. Foreshadowing what lies ahead fills your players with anticipation and tension as your adventure progresses toward its climax.

Setting Encounter Objectives

Players can quickly grasp the objective of an encounter in which their characters face a horde of savage orcs. The characters understand that they must fight for their lives, and they either try to kill all the orcs or escape from them. Other encounters have less obvious goals, such as finding an important clue, securing an alliance with a group of NPCs, or defeating a monster before it kills innocent bystanders or assassinates the baron. Every encounter should have a specific objective, even if it's straightforward. Ambiguous goals could leave your players frustrated or bored.

An encounter's objective also links the encounter into the adventure story. If the overall story of your campaign involves a quest that the characters embark on to deliver a precious relic to a remote monastery, then each encounter in your campaign should have an objective that moves that quest forward. For example, during encounters along the way, the characters might have to protect the relic from enemies who want to steal or destroy it. These encounters build toward a climactic showdown with the leader of those evil forces.

The use of a secondary objective can make straightforward combat encounters more interesting. The secondary objective might force characters to approach the encounter differently, using their powers or strategizing in ways they normally wouldn't. A time limit is a simple example of a secondary objective: Not only do the characters have to overcome a gang of bandits, they have to do so in a small number of rounds. If they don't beat the clock, the hostage awaiting rescue in the next room will succumb to his wounds.

The Outcome Matters

A clear objective can make it easy to determine the consequences of success or failure in an encounter. If the characters' objective is to protect a relic from shadar-kai that plan to steal it, then failure might mean the PCs must reclaim the item from the victorious thieves. Success, on the other hand, could mean that the players come across fewer shadar-kai in a later encounter, or it could mean that the characters must face the shadow dragon that commands the shadar-kai. (See the discussion of branching in Chapter 1 for more ideas about how to use the result of an encounter as a way of determining the characters' next encounters.)

STEVE ARGYLE

Failure is a possibility in any encounter; the more pertinent question is how successfully the characters deal with a challenge during an encounter. Following are some examples of possible outcomes.

- The characters take advantage of their opportunities and deal with the threat successfully. The PCs use few of their resources and enjoy the rewards of the encounter with few setbacks.
- The characters overcome the obstacles facing them—at a cost. The PCs might head into the next encounter with fewer healing surges or daily powers at their disposal. Worse, an enemy that fled the fight could raise an alarm (leading to tougher encounters ahead) or escape with important information.
- The characters fail to overcome the challenge. They might flee from a combat encounter, or their enemies could capture them. They don't receive a reward for the encounter, they suffer a serious setback, and they might have to work hard to overcome the consequences of their failure.

The outcome of one encounter should play into the next encounter. Success in an encounter carries the characters toward completing the overall goal of the adventure. Failure leads the characters to a new turning point.

FINISHING STRONG

Players find the end of a great encounter meaningful and memorable. No matter what the scene is about, spice it up and leave them wanting more. If the characters just vanquished the main villain of the adventure, they might stumble upon a mysterious fact or witness a strange event that leaves them wondering if they have wrapped up the adventure as neatly as they thought.

A sense of resolution can also provide a strong finish to an encounter. When the characters achieve one of the main goals of the campaign, give them an appropriately lavish reward. Make it a truly memorable scene, full of pomp and gravity. Allow the characters to bask in their own glory.

Then set up your next adventure with a surprising twist in the middle of the celebration! End your session with a cliffhanger, and your players will be hungry for more.

—Yax and James Wyatt

Sample Encounter Objectives

Use the following story-rich objectives as foundations for complex and compelling encounters. Although these objectives focus on a single encounter during an adventure, you can use them in multiple encounters that combine to form one obstacle or problem the PCs must overcome.

Make Peace

Through a misunderstanding, the characters must fight monsters or nonplayer characters who should be allies. Perhaps the characters' enemies have deceived the leader of the NPCs into attacking the PCs, or maybe the NPCs are xenophobic or territorial.

Objective: The characters must convince the members or the leader of the opposing group that the two groups should work together.

Possible Outcomes: The characters need allies, so skill at negotiation is more important than martial prowess. If the party's diplomatic attempts falter, the PCs face a fight. This encounter could produce these outcomes:

- The characters avert a fight, prevent injury or loss of life on both sides, and convince the NPCs to become their allies.
- Fighting breaks out, but the characters convince the other side of their good intentions and stop the conflict. One or both sides are bloodied or suffer casualties.
- The characters break off the fight without securing the aid of the NPCs, opting to flee rather than harm potential allies.
- The characters fail to secure the NPCs' aid and defeat them in combat, perhaps knocking them unconscious or taking them prisoner. At worst, the PCs kill the opposing group and lose these potential allies.

Protect a Person or an Item

The characters act as bodyguards, or they have an ancient or fragile item they must transport to a specific location. In every challenge they face the risk of breaking the item or endangering the character they're protecting.

The nature of the nonplayer character the PCs must protect can affect the difficulty of the encounter. In an easy encounter, the NPC could be a smart warrior, capable of aiding the characters in combat if necessary. For a tougher encounter, make the NPC incompetent, prone to panicking in combat, or apt to risk the lives of PCs through dubious decisions. Alternatively, you could create NPCs who are grievously injured, too young or too old to fend for themselves, or wracked by debilitating diseases. If the characters are escorting an NPC to a destination where he or she can be cured of a crippling condition, they might create an ally if they succeed.

If the characters protect an item, it might be an artifact they need to complete an important ritual, a gift meant to seal an alliance with another group, or a religious icon that could end a struggle that has torn apart a religious order. The villains could send thugs after the characters with the sole intention of destroying the item.

Objective: Keep the NPC alive or the item intact for the duration of the encounter.

Possible Outcomes: Although this sort of encounter looks like an all-or-nothing proposition, a middle ground exists. For example, the characters could avert failure by using a Raise Dead ritual to revive a dead NPC. The characters might also achieve different degrees of success based on whether the NPC or the item takes damage during the fight, whether the party's enemies recognize the NPC or the item, or whether the NPC completes a specific task before dying.

- The characters protect their charge by avoiding combat, either hiding from their enemies or fleeing before their foes engage them.
- The characters fight off the attackers and protect the NPC or item.
- The characters protect the NPC or the item, but their enemies see and identify the NPC or the item and use this information against the PCs later.
- The NPC survives but is wounded. This injury could hinder the character's ability to perform the required task or could otherwise diminish his or her usefulness to the player characters.
- The item breaks but is not rendered useless. The characters can recover enough of the item to undertake a quest to repair it, or they can use the item for its intended purpose at a less effective level.
- Enemies capture or kill the NPC, or the PCs lose or destroy the item. The characters must rescue or resurrect the NPC or repair the item, or else they must find a new way to accomplish their goal.
- The characters keep the NPC alive long enough for him or her to complete a necessary task but not long enough for him or her to give the PCs a reward or important information needed for a later encounter. For instance, the elderly sage completes the ritual to seal the demongate but dies under a demon's claws before he can warn the characters of a threat he discovered in the course of the ritual.

Retrieve an Object

In this objective, the characters must gain possession of a specific object in the room or area, preferably before combat finishes. This type of encounter has two basic scenarios. First, the enemies the PCs face are overwhelmingly powerful, creating a situation where the characters must retrieve the object and then either flee or use its powers for protection. Second, the enemies desire the item as much as the characters do, and both parties race to obtain it.

Objective: Reach and secure an object in the encounter area. Securing the object could mean pocketing a small item, activating a large object in the room, or opening a locked chest containing the object. During an encounter, the characters might have to search the area to find a hidden item.

Possible Outcomes: If the characters acquire the object, they succeed. If they don't, more possibilities open up.

- The characters retrieve the object and either escape with it or use it to defeat their enemies in the encounter.
- The characters obtain the object, use it once, and then lose it to their enemies. The object helps them, but not as much as they had hoped it would.
- The characters fail to retrieve the item and must either pursue the enemies who took it or find a way to achieve their goal without it.

Sneak In

The characters need to move through the encounter area without raising an alarm. Succeeding could mean killing the guards and thereby ensuring that none of them reach the enormous gong on one side of the chamber, or it could mean sneaking through a maze of rooms undetected.

Objective: Reach a destination or kill all the defenders without raising an alarm.

Possible Outcomes: The outcome of an infiltration encounter can have a dramatic effect on future encounters, or on the rest of the adventure. If the characters succeed, they can bypass significant obstacles. If they fail, they face stiffer resistance in the encounters ahead.

- The characters succeed—no alarm is raised, and anyone who became aware of their presence is dead or disabled.
- The characters fail to sneak through the area, and guards attack them. This outcome can lead to a second encounter with the same objective, since the characters must defeat these guards before the guards raise an alarm.
- One guard manages to alert more guards in the next room, making for a tougher encounter.
- The guards sound an alarm. Reinforcements could arrive immediately, or the characters might find future encounters more difficult because the enemies are prepared for the characters' arrival.

Stop a Ritual

An evil cult leader, a malevolent sorcerer, or a demon performs a ritual that has dire consequences if the PCs fail to stop it. A gateway to the Ninth Hell could open, a terror from beyond the stars could make its way into the world, or a horde of slavering demons could erupt from the Abyss at the completion of the ritual. Only the characters can prevent these events from happening.

Objective: The characters must interrupt the ritual before their enemy completes it. They might have to kill the ritual caster quickly, fighting their way past bodyguards to reach their target. Or they might have to destroy special focus items used in the ritual (smash statues, extinguish candles or burning braziers, or splash holy water on the infernal altar).

The ritual caster's participation adds an interesting element to this type of combat encounter. You might determine in advance that the caster must spend five standard actions to perform the ritual and also use a minor action to sustain the ritual each round. Stunning the caster disrupts the ritual, and the caster could participate in combat at the cost of not making progress with the ritual. Alternatively, the ritual caster could remain absorbed in performing the ritual until the characters successfully disrupt it, at which point the caster joins the combat in an effort to destroy them. As a third possibility, the ritual caster takes an active role in the combat until the characters disrupt the ritual, which causes the caster to flee or to be destroyed by the failed ritual.

Possible Outcomes: To prevent this sort of encounter from dead-ending the adventure or your entire campaign, set it up so that either the characters have excellent odds of disrupting the ritual, or the ritual's completion doesn't have world-shattering consequences.

- The characters stop the ritual in time and avert catastrophe.
- Each round the characters spend in combat without stopping the ritual, more combatants join the fray—cultists hurry into the room from elsewhere in the temple complex, or demons spill up from the yawning chasm in the floor. The characters succeed in stopping the ritual but suffer significant losses during combat.
- The characters fail to prevent the ritual and must find a way to undo what the ritual accomplished.

PLAYER MOTIVATIONS

Different players have different motivations. Pages 8–10 of the Dungeon Master's Guide outline eight archetypal player motivations you might find at your game table. If you understand these motivations and know how to encourage your players, you can tailor the encounters in your adventures to better suit your players' tastes. The following pages suggest specific ways to make encounters appeal to your players, helping each player have more fun at every session.

These suggestions include seating arrangements, based on the idea that adjacent players influence one another. You might not want to assign seats to your group and might instead allow your players to choose their own seating arrangement. However, if you have trouble engaging the players in your group, review the seating suggestions and see if steering players to different seats helps.

The Actor

One actor at your table can inspire the rest of your group to roleplay, bringing all the player characters to life. At their best, actors make the game feel like more than a game—something more akin to a fantasy novel or movie.

Seating: The best seat for an actor is directly opposite you, perhaps at the far end of a table. With all the other players between you and the actor, the actor's dramatics won't close you off from the other players. A clear view of the actor's body language might make you feel more engaged in roleplaying, and the two of you can encourage the rest of the group to be more involved.

An actor seated beside a shy player can help to draw that player out over several game sessions.

Encounter Types: Actors thrive in skill challenges of all sorts, and they especially flourish in challenges that involve interaction with NPCs. Combat doesn't necessarily leave the actor cold—vivid descriptions of powers and other actions in combat can engage the actor the same way dramatic interaction draws in other characters.

Provide Vivid NPCs: Quirks and mannerisms that bring NPCs to life (see page 186 of the Dungeon Master's Guide) give the actor ideas for interacting with the NPCs. With actors in your group, you can spend more time in the characters' home base with NPCs who offer the players adventure hooks or important clues, turning what might otherwise be a bland information dump into a lively interaction. In a straightforward dungeon crawl, detailed descriptions of key monster opponents can immerse the actor in the action.

Add Roleplaying Elements to Combat: From lowly kobolds to mighty dragons, the monsters the characters face in combat can come alive if you imbue them with personality. Challenges, taunts, and insults can be fun and particularly appropriate when a character marks a monster or vice versa. Monsters might gloat or curse during the ebb and flow of battle. Describe the monsters' attacks the way actors would describe their own actions, even when the monsters miss. Keep a list of taunts, curses, and dramatic descriptions on hand in case inspiration fails.

You might let characters use Bluff, Diplomacy, or Intimidate checks to influence monster actions during combat. This tactic allows players to trick enemies into taking actions that benefit the characters. Characters might goad their foes into entering hazards, draw enemies into positions that give characters combat advantage, lure enemies away from a bloodied character, or convince a monster to attack the character who has the best defenses. Actor players might want to try these tactics; you must determine an appropriate skill check and assign a DC for the check.

Leverage Character Details: Make an effort to include characters, locations, and events from the actor player's character background in encounters, particularly in climactic fights against major villains. For example, if the actor PC's father died in a duel with a tiefling, you could choose that same murderous tiefling darkblade as the adventure's villain. When the characters confront this villain, the tiefling recognizes the daughter of the human he killed years ago and taunts her: "So you're Andrunn's brat? No better at swordplay than your father, I see." The actor might find that villain more satisfying to defeat than just another tiefling darkblade, and you didn't need to make a single change to the monster's statistics.

ACTORS IN KOBOLD HALL

As written, Kobold Hall (in Chapter 11 of the Dungeon Master's Guide) offers few opportunities for interaction encounters in which actors thrive. However, you could roleplay the kobolds before and during the combat encounters—the kobolds in area 3, for example, could taunt the player characters and berate them for interrupting a skull-skull game. You might also have the dragon talk before attacking, giving the characters a chance to plead for their lives and the actor players a chance to shine.

The Explorer

Having an explorer at your table can keep the players interested when the action stalls, because explorers enjoy seeking information. They help the group find clues and secret doors and help keep the adventure on track—except when the explorer derails it by looking for secrets that don't exist. You can satisfy explorers by giving them plenty of clues to find.

Seating: If the explorer likes to draw maps of the adventure area, then have that player sit next to you, so you don't have to talk across other players to resolve the map details. Explorers can inspire new players with their curiosity and enthusiasm, so seat new players next to explorers when possible.

Encounter Types: Similar to actors, explorers thrive in skill challenges, particularly ones that involve research, puzzles, or digging up hidden information. Explorers also enjoy the time between encounters, so be sure not to gloss over the ancient dungeon corridors and grand entry halls devoid of monsters. To engage your explorer, plan combat encounters that include puzzle elements, such as complex traps, to make the encounter area livelier, or insert surprising hazards to navigate around.

Monsters with Secrets: Explorers enjoy combat scenarios that offer a secret about the monsters they face. For example, when ghosts and the wights attack, the explorer might want to know who these undead creatures were in life, why they were cursed with undeath, and how that information might pertain to the current adventure. Make a straightforward combat encounter with undead more appealing to an explorer by explaining that the tiefling ghosts think the PCs are the dragonborn soldiers of Arkhosia who killed them the first time around.

You can achieve the same effect with mundane monsters if the combat encounter reveals interesting details, such as those of a hobgoblin culture in this region. The newly acquired knowledge that hobgoblins take pride in being the first to score a hit during combat enriches the explorer's satisfaction of emerging victorious from a tough combat encounter.

Monsters with Weaknesses: Throw the party into a challenging encounter, but give them a way to even the odds, possibly hidden in the terrain or on a monster. For example, the characters encounter a dragon in a large room with a shrine in one corner. When the fight starts, the players might notice that the dragon avoids the shrine, focusing its attacks on the characters farthest away from it. If the characters force the dragon closer to the shrine, they discover that the dragon's defenses drop, and if they stand adjacent to the shrine, it boosts their defenses. The characters eventually learn that the individuals who built the shrine dedicated it to Bahamut, and the dragon's attempts to defile it have failed to sever the shrine's connection to the deity of justice and honor.

JULIE DILLON

The combination of history and tactics pleases the explorer's sense of world logic.

Puzzle Encounters: Create encounters—combat or otherwise—that have elements the players need to figure out. Perhaps the characters encounter a group of hobgoblins in a room that features alternating black and white squares on the floor. Through trial and error, the PCs learn that they have to move like chess pieces or take damage: On the "board," the first square a character enters determines how that character must move for the duration of the encounter. Or maybe four pillars pop up from the ground, creating dangerous arcs of lightning across the

Explorers in Kobold Hall

Kobold Hall used to be a walled keep for a minor human lord whose name and history are long forgotten. You can engage explorer players by inventing a history for the place and providing clues to the background you invent. Explorers might be intrigued to learn that the altar now dedicated to Tiamat (in area 2) used to be a shrine to Ioun and that the stone coffins hold the remains of a long-lost noble line. What if the players find an heirloom of the family that spurs them to find any surviving heirs to the line?

—James Wyatt, from

room in a regular pattern. The characters can avoid and then exploit the hazard by maneuvering their enemies into the path of the lightning. These types of puzzle elements engage explorers—and make combat encounters more memorable for all your players.

The Instigator

Like an explorer, an instigator at the table can be an ally to the DM by preventing the group from getting bogged down in indecision or caution. Instigators need little help to enjoy the game because they amuse themselves. Engage instigators in the game by allowing them to affect their surroundings. Nothing frustrates instigators more than trying to cause trouble and failing, with the result that their actions don't necessarily benefit the party. Be prepared to downgrade the consequences of an instigator's actions if necessary to prevent him or her from getting the party killed.

Seating: Assign an instigator to a seat next to you, where he or she can easily attract your attention when he or she wants to try something. An instigator seated next to indecisive players can help spur them to action.

Encounter Types: Combat encounters offer the most action choices to instigators, and a wide-open skill challenge that brings numerous skills into play can be an instigator's playground.

Battle Grid Surprises: Allow instigators to explore everything on the battle grid. If you use Dungeon Tiles or preprinted maps, prepare notes about the minute details and mundane features of the map to determine what happens when the instigator pokes, prods, opens, or breaks these features. If the map shows crates and barrels stacked in the room, the adventure text might give a generic description of what players can find inside. Your instigator might also knock over braziers, spill casks onto the floor, lift carpets, and tear down tapestries. Use the guidelines for terrain powers (pages 62–63) in these situations. Although toppling a brazier onto an enemy should cause less damage than being hit by the characters' powers, instigators might find it more entertaining.

You can also allow instigators to find unexpected ways to move around the encounter area. Secret passages that circle around, perhaps bypassing blocking terrain, can reward the instigator with an opportunity to sneak up on the monsters.

The two most disheartening words for an instigator player might be "Nothing happens." Instigators enjoy interacting with their surroundings, so prepare consequences ahead of time for the instigator's actions—consequences that make the game more fun for everyone. Create a group of possible results to keep your game moving when an instigator's character tries something unexpected. Your results might include the following events.

- If a character tinkers with an item, it explodes in a burst 2 or a blast 3, making an attack against Reflex with a modifier equal to the party's level +3 and dealing damage on a hit equal to the appropriate medium limited damage expression on page 42 of the Dungeon Master's Guide. As a positive side effect, the explosion could harm enemies as well as the instigator; place the item in an area where the instigator's foes are likely to take more damage than his or her allies.
- Liquid or sludge spills over the floor, creating an area of difficult terrain.
- A cloud of dust erupts into the air, obscuring an area for 1 or 2 rounds.
- The character disturbs a sleeping monster—typically a dungeon denizen such as a dire rat, a kruthik, or a carrion crawler.
- A dimensional rift tears open and teleports the character 1d10 squares in a random direction.
- The character finds an injured creature caught in a trap. Freeing the creature secures its help for 1 or 2 rounds.
- The character finds a secret compartment containing a treasure parcel, perhaps including an item that can help the party in the current encounter.

Busy Work: Instigators pose the risk of setting the pace for the game and interfering with other players' enjoyment. If your instigator has no patience for interactions that your actors and storytellers thrive on, he or she might disrupt those scenes and spoil the other players' fun. As a solution, occupy the instigator with tasks unrelated to the game's action. This tactic occupies an instigator while the other players engage in activities they enjoy.

When you sense a restless instigator, ask him or her to do one of the following quick favors.

- Clear away the map or tiles from the last combat encounter to make room for the next.
- Set up Dungeon Tiles or gather miniatures for the next encounter.
- Tally up and divide experience points from the last encounter or the session so far.
- Refresh everyone's drinks or open a new bag of chips.

The Power Gamer

Your group can overcome challenges more efficiently and have fun in the process if the group includes a power gamer. Power gamers have extensive rules knowledge, since they must know the rules to take advantage of them. This type of player can serve as a valuable resource, saving you from having to look up rules you don't remember.

Seating: Seat the power gamer near you if you plan to use him or her as a ready rules reference. Similarly, a power gamer can bring a new player up to speed if you seat them together. Be sure the power gamer doesn't dictate the new player's actions; the power gamer should only help a new player understand what's going on.

Power gamers sometimes downplay the importance of story and roleplaying, so you might want to place them near actors and storytellers. This proximity can lead to productive synergy, but sometimes it leads to conflict, depending on the personalities of the players involved.

Encounter Types: Power gamers optimize their characters for combat, and if you establish that your campaign will feature skill challenges and other types of encounters, die-hard power gamers will optimize their characters for those challenges as well. For instance, in ordinary circumstances power gamers might not be inclined to take the Linguist feat, but if your campaign rewards characters who have a mastery of multiple languages, power gamers in your group will probably take it.

Play to Strengths: Let the power gamer shine by showing how his or her character excels. If the character has a high AC, allow that character to hold the front line from time to time, standing firm against monsters while the rest of the party snipes from safety. If you feature the same kinds of monsters in more than one of your encounters, the power gamer can determine the best tactics to use against them. For example, after a fight with trolls, inform the players that more trolls lie ahead. The power gamer can then work out the best way to overcome their regeneration.

Exploit Weaknesses: Identify the weaknesses of a power gamer's character and design encounters to target those vulnerable spots. Use monsters that attack the character's weakest defense. Create situations that require checks with the character's poorest skills or abilities. You don't want to punish the player or try to defeat the character; rather, you want to offer a broad range of challenges. Testing a character's weaknesses encourages the player to improve his her play style. This technique motivates the player to acquire items or find other ways to shore up those weaknesses—and to learn to rely on the other characters in the group.

Make Villains Learn: If you can manage to keep a recurring villain alive over the course of a long adventure, make sure that the villain learns from each encounter with the characters and adapts his or her tactics to counter the characters' strengths. By the third time a villain meets the characters, that villain has a good idea of what they're capable of and has come up with ways to frustrate them. The power gamer will be challenged to explore new tactics rather than to simply replay the same old fights.

Reward Engagement: Power gamers respond to rewards. In the same way that a power gamer will take the Linguist feat if your campaign clearly rewards that knowledge, a power gamer will remember details of your campaign world and story if that knowledge pays off. Likewise, power gamers care about the story of an adventure when it translates into experience points and treasure rewards for completing minor and major objectives. Use magic items the player wants (perhaps drawn from a wish list of items) to draw the power gamer into adventures.

The Slayer

The slayer at your table plays the game to experience the visceral thrill that D&D offers: A slayer wants to fight monsters and villains every week—and save the world in the process. To keep the slayer happy, include villains and monsters in your adventure that have to be eradicated. If slayers have plenty of targets to kill, you can expect a lively dose of energy that can inspire the rest of your group in return.

Keeping Antagonists Alive

Exciting adventure stories slowly build up their villains and then introduce them in dramatic fashion. Then the bad guy acts in a way that makes the audience hunger for his comeuppance. The first clash between hero and antagonist usually results in awful defeat for the hero. Finally, after delayed gratification and numerous trials, the hero triumphs against the villain, and all is well again in the universe.

In a D&D game, you might find it tough to keep a villain alive past his first appearance in a storyline. But if you kill your villains as soon as you introduce them, they can't acquire the iconic quality of classic villains.

The following points summarize my favorite methods of preserving villains for another day.

- Use introductory interaction scenes in which the antagonist's villainy is not apparent.
- Cheat the stats by making the villain impossibly tough during his or her first encounter and weaker later on when you mean to allow the PCs to defeat him or her. Give the villain a good reason to keep the defeated PCs alive during the initial encounter.
- Use interaction scenes in which the PCs can't fight the villain, possibly for legal or political reasons, or in order to ensure the safety of innocents.
- Give the PCs reasons to keep the villain alive if they defeat him.
- Create situations when the heroes and the villain temporarily have to work together.

—Robin Laws

Seating: Place the battle grid within reach of the slayer to ensure that the player gets to manipulate his or her character's miniature (and perhaps also those of players who are seated too far from the grid to reach their own miniatures). Seated beside a new player, a slayer makes a great mentor because his or her enthusiasm and energy can rub off.

Encounter Types: Slayers enjoy combat in all its glorious variety: wading through hordes of minions, facing off against a villainous mastermind and his squad of bodyguards, or going toe to toe with a solo dragon. Whatever the scenario, slayers want to use their attack powers to destroy their enemies.

Bring on the Villains: Give at least one villain a significant role in your campaign, and make sure your slayer (in particular) knows and despises the villain early on. At least once each session, have the villain's servitors disrupt the PCs' plans to irritate them and load the encounter with emotional power. Defeating an annoying villain gives the slayer a supremely satisfying moment of victory.

Bring on the Minions: Make liberal use of minions. They might fall quickly under the slayer's assault, but he or she will enjoy being the architect of the onslaught. Also, by unleashing a horde of minions, you can start the combat with a shock to the players. Have one group of minions quickly engage the characters, and maneuver the remaining minions to gain a tactical advantage. This tactic satisfies the slayer and ensures that a single area attack doesn't wipe out all the minions at once.

Combat Interruptions: If the slayer becomes restless during a skill challenge, have enemies kick in the door and start a fight to add an adrenaline jolt. This interruption works best if a necessary skill challenge preoccupies the players. Maybe the PCs must disable a magic ward, which requires the uninterrupted work of a few of the characters, or the characters might need to extract information from an NPC before his ship sails away on the next tide. If you throw an easy fight in the middle of such a challenge, perhaps triggered by a failed skill check, the slayer and one or two other characters can fight off the monsters while the rest of the party continues working on the challenge.

TOMÁS GIORELLO

ACHIEVEMENTS

Many computer and video games track player achievements, giving players a sense of accomplishment and sometimes unlocking additional content in the game. Players—particularly slayers—might enjoy tracking similar achievements in the context of a D&D campaign. If your group likes this idea, consider recruiting a slayer at your table to be the official record-keeper for group and individual achievements, such as the following:

- Highest damage dealt with a single attack (you might have one entry for single-target attacks and one for multiple-target attacks, in which you add up the damage dealt to each creature).
- Most damage taken in a single encounter.
- Killing blows scored.
- Critical hit tally (by character, per encounter, and ongoing).
- Natural 1 tally (by character, per encounter, and ongoing).
- Most failed saving throws (consecutive or not).
- Highest attack roll that missed.
- Creatures killed (by origin, type, or specific attribute).
- Unusual or dramatic events, such as a prone character scoring a critical hit.

The Storyteller

A storyteller in your group can help you tie together all the rules, numbers, and encounters into an entertaining narrative. DMs sometimes lose themselves in the details and forget to step back and look at the story unfolding on the other side of the DM screen. Engage storytellers by frequently including narrative elements: Tie together quests and plots, and mine character backgrounds for story possibilities.

Seating: Seat the storyteller near the middle of the table. From this location, the storyteller can immerse the other players in the unfolding story of the adventure and the campaign.

Encounter Types: Any kind of encounter engages the storyteller, as long as it makes sense in the adventure's story. If the party has a good reason to be in the dungeon fighting orcs, and each combat encounter moves the characters measurably closer to their goal, the storyteller can be just as invested in the fights as the slayer is.

Storytellers lose interest when encounters fill up the session and nothing ties together—no large goals drive the characters, no common cause motivates their efforts, no connections link events in the campaign, and no consequences arise from the characters' actions. When the characters emerge from the dungeon, the storyteller wants what happened in the adventure to matter, to have an effect on the game world, and to drive the characters on to the next adventure. Storytellers don't find gaining levels and acquiring treasure to be sufficient motivation.

Tie Encounters to Larger Goals: To storytellers, the orc leader the party just killed could represent a terrible force of violence and suffering. Or the PCs might have made the region safer by eliminating one of the villain's lieutenants. Make sure to give storytellers a way to connect the events in each encounter to the adventure's larger goals.

Explicitly link one encounter in every session to the party's overall goal in the campaign, and move the characters closer to achieving that goal—or farther away if they fail to overcome that encounter's challenge. When the characters finish that encounter, recount what just happened through descriptive narrative; highlight important character contributions without using numbers. Connect encounter events to the characters' personalities, backgrounds, details, and goals. You might ask a storyteller in your group to perform this function.

Create Cause and Effect: Make sure the actions of both player characters and nonplayer characters in the game have consequences. Use these repercussions to tie together encounters and campaign elements, so that the storyteller understands the overall narrative. Keep a log of the events in your campaign, and build encounters that are the clear result of the PCs' actions. For example, the characters delve into the dungeons of Greenbrier Chasm and fight goblins. When the characters return to town, goblins begin raiding the farms around the village of Greenbrier in retribution for the PCs' actions. What's more, because of a specific action the characters took in the dungeon, such as opening a sealed door, the goblins have a new ally or an artifact that empowers them. Storytellers thrive on connecting such details and figuring out the underlying plot.

Monster Stories: Give the characters' enemies their own stories, and make sure the players can learn those stories. If your villain has a legion of human soldiers at his disposal, ensure that the players eventually realize that the human soldiers they repeatedly fight belong to the villain's army and aren't random monsters. The monster themes presented in Chapter 4 add a layer of story to a variety of monsters the characters could face in an adventure. The players might suspect a connection if they repeatedly encounter enemies that have a similar origin or similar powers.

Storytellers in Kobold Hall

It's important to help storyteller players understand that any adventure is both an individual story and part of a larger story of the campaign and its heroes. Don't gloss over the adventure hooks and quests, which provide the context for the characters' excursion into Kobold Hall. Storytellers will be eager to learn why these kobolds seem so organized and aggressive, and you should make it clear that the dragon's influence is to blame. Pay attention to the suggestions for further adventures on page 219 of the Dungeon Master's Guide, and consider how you can tie this adventure in with the next one you plan to run. Finally, look for ways to make the adventure personal for the storytellers in your group, such as hooking them with individual quests that relate to their character backgrounds. For example, in a raid on the King's Road, kobolds might have captured or injured a friend or relative of one of the characters.

The Thinker

Thinkers reward your clever planning by scrutinizing villainous machinations, taking the time to solve your puzzles, and using calculated actions and good tactics to keep fellow characters safe.

Seating: Thinkers ask questions, making a seat near you ideal for easy access. Give the thinker a seat with a clear view of the battle grid. Be aware that if you place a thinker adjacent to a power gamer, they might form a decision-making team that excludes other player types.

Encounter Types: Thinkers, like explorers, enjoy any encounter that includes puzzle elements, such as tactical challenges to overcome and riddles to solve outside combat. Thinkers might appreciate the puzzle material on pages 81–84 of the Dungeon Master's Guide. They also thrive on complex combat encounters that incorporate different kinds of challenges, including monsters, traps or hazards, interesting terrain features, and perhaps a skill challenge.

Avoid the Linear Path: Rigidly linear adventures frustrate thinkers, who prefer to weigh their options. Offer numerous choices, from branching dungeon passages to forking plot lines. Branching passages make dungeon exploration more interesting, and they can enrich tactical combat encounters by offering multiple lines of engagement, which creates a more dynamic confrontation.

Be Generous with Clues: Give your thinker player plenty to contemplate by providing information about foes, dangers, and challenges in advance. These clues work best if you can use them to maintain a sense of surprise. Dispense partial facts by combining them with treasure, dropping them into interactions with NPCs, and working them into the background scenery of other encounters. Reward successful skill checks with new information combined with vivid descriptions to entertain everyone at the table.

Use the following clues as examples.

- Enemy Powers and Abilities: A scrawled message in a treasure cache reads "Beware the serpent guardian's word of pain that roots you to the ground, and fear the resounding force of its thunderstrike!"
- Weak Defenses: A captured bandit tells the PCs about the inn his cohorts use as a headquarters: "Numerous guards watch the front door, but only two guards protect the kitchen entrance around back."
- NPC Personality Weaknesses: During their first meeting with the duke, a character who makes a successful Insight check notices that the duke can't keep his eyes off the warlock's ruby ring.
- Terrain Hazards: A tapestry in a temple antechamber depicts the altar in the main sanctuary erupting with bolts of lightning.
- Maps and Location Layouts: The characters find a map in a dragon's treasure hoard depicting an ancient stronghold, and their next adventure takes them to the stronghold's ruins.
- Villain's Plans: A soldier in the villain's elite guard says, "Fools! Before the next dawn my master's armies will march through the streets of Winterhaven, and nothing will stop them!"

Start Battles with a Clear Overview: You risk frustrating thinkers when you forget to reveal options and hazards the characters would have noticed. When you start a combat round, provide a fast overview of observable and important details before you call for initiative checks. This quick overview informs the players and helps the thinker understand what he or she has to work with in the encounter. Make sure to cover these points.

- Visible foes and their placement, including anything characters can detect with a high enough passive Perception check.
- Terrain features and known attributes.
- Furnishings and tactically important objects.
- Enemy equipment.
- Visible rewards and treasure.

Reward Sound Tactics: When the thinker concocts a sound plan from the information you provide, let the plan pay off. Without altering a combat encounter significantly, you can give the characters an edge in the fight in a variety of ways.

- Award a surprise round to the characters if they catch their foes off guard.
- Show the characters a map of the encounter area and let them choose where they want to enter for the best tactical advantage.
- Give the characters combat advantage against their enemies for the first full round of combat.

ALLOW CHAT TIME

Off-topic digressions are the scourge of roleplaying. They're also an irresistible common currency in all conversations between members of our glorious geek tribe. Even while you're serving as DM, you might fall prey to the opportunity to throw in a clever reference to the Internet meme of the day or a classic pop culture property.

During sessions, I try limit my group's off-topic conversations. But people play D&D to hang out with friends. Even when personal schedules press my session length down to the bare minimum, I make sure to include a healthy period of chat time before we start recapping the events of the previous session. By granting time up front for the inevitable socializing, I keep digressions to a minimum for the first couple of hours of gaming. Then, personal discussions return as the night progresses and attention spans wane.

—Robin Laws

TAKE A MOMENT . . .

To run better encounters, make sure you take 30 seconds before rolling initiative to study your monster and NPC tactics, as well as the creatures' Intelligence scores. Then you can decide how well they will carry out their tactics.

—Yax

The Watcher

Although watchers might seem disinterested, they are a valuable part of the group. Watchers can help to round out the roles in a party, because they are not as committed to playing a specific type of character as some other kinds of players are. Watchers can also help defuse the tension created when players' motivations clash by reminding everyone that D&D is a game, and the players are supposed to have fun. Bear that fact in mind if you start to feel frustrated that watchers don't involve themselves more or take the game more seriously.

Seating: Place verbose and enthusiastic watchers next to shy or quiet players. A power gamer might express frustration with the watcher's choice of character skills and actions, so separating these two types of players might benefit the group. Placing the watcher at the far end of the table can prevent his or her socializing from interrupting you.

Encounter Types: You might find that a watcher participates more in a combat encounter than in a skill challenge or some other form of interaction that doesn't involve combat. This is often true because a combat encounter offers a relatively limited set of options (the character's powers) that define the actions the watcher can take, and the encounter has a clear goal.

Ham It Up: The more you bring an encounter to life, the more likely the watcher will pay attention. Vivid descriptions of monster actions and environments, or the player's own actions, can draw a watcher in. For example, if the watcher says, "I use eldritch blast on the orc, and I rolled a 22," you might expound with: "A dark bolt of energy flies from your fingertip and erupts around the orc, making it howl in pain. What's your damage?" This technique keeps the rest of the group immersed in the action and encourages the watcher to use the flavor text for the powers in the Player's Handbook. In turn, the watcher might want to roleplay and participate more.

Have Fun! The watcher wants to have a good time with the group, so have fun. Don't take the game too seriously, and don't let it start arguments among the players.

Don't Take It Personally

By definition, watchers are difficult to engage, so remember that it's okay—watchers have fun because of the company around the table, not because they're hooked by the game. Don't take it personally. Also, make sure that whenever any player comes up with an unexpected strategy or an innovative idea, you reward it and run with it. This example shows the watcher that involved, engaged players make the game fun for everyone at the table.

Encounters for Large Groups

Large groups can be fun to DM. Imagine a big bunch of your friends gathered together around a table determined to defeat monsters you conjure up, overcome mighty challenges you set before them, and roleplay through grand adventures. A game table with numerous players will test your skills differently than a smaller group. To succeed, be organized and prepared, and don't be afraid to delegate.

More Monsters, Not Tougher Ones

According to the math of encounter building outlined in the Dungeon Master's Guide, four 10th-level monsters are an appropriate encounter for ten 5th-level characters. However, think twice before you throw such an encounter at your players. An encounter with two minotaur warriors (level 10 soldiers), a gibbering mouther (level 10 controller), and a wyvern (level 10 skirmisher) adds up to the right experience point total. But because the minotaurs have AC 26, and the player characters attack at about +11, the PCs would hit only 30% of the time. At best, the characters take so long to kill the monsters that the fight drags on for hours of playing time. At worst, the minotaurs (hitting about 70% of the time) kill all the characters before taking serious damage.

A better encounter for ten 5th-level characters is a collection of monsters that are all around 5th level. Ten monsters could be challenging for you to manage, so choose elite and solo monsters to reduce your burden. Four dragonborn soldiers (level 5 soldier), a goblin underboss (level 4 elite controller leader), and a young green dragon (level 5 solo skirmisher) have nearly the same experience point total as the monsters in the first example (2,150 XP rather than 2,000 XP). Because this encounter features monsters that have attacks and defenses comparable to the characters' capabilities, it's more balanced. And because the encounter includes elite and solo monsters, the number of monsters should be manageable.

Larger Encounter Areas

Design encounter areas that can accommodate a large group of player characters as well as numerous monsters. Rather than using a single open space, create several rooms with multiple connections to enable the monsters to attack the characters from different directions. This technique encourages characters to engage the monsters on multiple front lines.

Recruit Lieutenants

Players can be a great help when you become overwhelmed or when the game slows down because large groups take longer to cycle through encounters. Pick two experienced players who know the rules, and ask them to take the seats on your left and right as your lieutenants. Having them nearby makes it easy to assign tasks and duties to them.

Minions: Have minions' stats and basic tactical advice ready to hand out, so your lieutenants can manage these foes during combats.

Battle Grid Setup: Sometimes just clearing the table to make way for maps and tiles takes time. Ask your lieutenants to lay out your maps and arrange unconcealed enemies according to the encounter diagram. Before everyone rolls initiative, briefly inspect the setup and tweak as desired.

Initiative: Have a lieutenant handle initiative setup and order, with you reporting to them on enemy results. If possible, post the order in a visible place, such as on a whiteboard. Have your aide keep the combat pace going by prompting players for actions and nudging you when a foe's turn is next.

Battlefield Description: While one lieutenant gathers initiative rolls, give your other lieutenant an overview of all the unconcealed features on the battlefield, so he can be the group's go-to person for questions about terrain effects, hazards, and combat props. This technique will save you from having to deal with repeated questions every combat.

Monster Managers: Have your lieutenants be your hands and eyes on the battlefield. On each monster's turn, have a lieutenant hold a finger on the monster's mini on the battle grid. This system shows you which enemy is currently active, and it focuses the group's attention on the game. Ask your aide to report ongoing damage at a turn's start and saving throws at turn's end. For movement, tell your aide the foe's intended action, ask your aide to choose optimal routes, and have him announce any opportunity attacks.

Foe Wounds and Status Markers: Ask the lieutenants to track ongoing damage and effects on foes during combat. Have your helpers report total damage to you as it is dealt, so you can quickly check for bloodied status.

Opportunity Attacks: As the PCs and their enemies move around the battle grid, ask one of your lieutenants to handle opportunity attacks for you. If a PC provokes an opportunity attack, the lieutenant grabs the player's attention and informs you of attack and damage results. If a foe receives an opportunity attack, the lieutenant attracts your attention so you can resolve the attack.

—Johnn Four

ENCOUNTERS FOR SMALL GROUPS

Sometimes you have only a small group to play with, or you want a small-scale D&D experience. You might be teaching the game to your children or leading a small group that has limited membership. Building encounters for small groups can be tricky, but it can lead to rewarding game time.

More Monsters Again

The rule of thumb for creating encounters suggests that a group of two 5th-level characters should face two 5th-level monsters. That encounter works, but compared to a five-on-five encounter, such a small encounter might feel lackluster. As discussed previously, you can create dynamic encounters by using larger numbers of lower-level monsters. A more exciting encounter might be two 5th-level characters facing three 2nd- or 3rd-level monsters.

Weaker monsters also offer the player characters a better chance of surviving despite the group's lack of key party roles. Weaker monsters don't hit as often or deal as much damage, so if a party lacks a leader, it can still hold its own. At the same time, the monsters have fewer hit points, so a party without a striker can still take them down in a reasonable amount of time.

More Minions

Use minions to keep encounters dynamic and interesting without overwhelming a small party of characters. Be careful, though, if your characters don't have attacks that affect multiple targets. To a party that lacks a controller or at least some blast and burst attacks, minions can be troublesome.

Different Challenges

You can turn an apparent weakness into a great strength by using more encounters that don't involve combat. Encounters that feature lots of interaction, stealthy infiltration, puzzle solving, or skill use are well suited for small groups. As a guideline, make skill challenge complexity no higher than 1 above the number of characters in the party.

MINIONS IN ENCOUNTERS

If you're using minions in an encounter, a couple of tips can help make them more effective.

- Don't clump them together at the start of the encounter. Spread them out.
- Reveal minions in stages—maybe two are visible at the start of the encounter, another one runs in during the second round, and the rest come up behind the characters in the next round.
- Use more minions at higher levels. Use four minions at minimum in heroic tier encounters, at least five in paragon tier encounters, and six or more in epic tier encounters.

Allied NPCs

You can supplement a small group with allied NPCs that help the player characters in combat and noncombat situations. Companion characters, detailed in Chapter 1, can increase the number of effective characters in the party without overwhelming the players with multiple full-fledged PCs to run.

FINDING PLAYERS

If you have a small group because you don't know more people who play D&D, it might be time to find or recruit more players. Where do you find more people for your game? Try these suggestions.

Friends and Relatives: Start with people you know who might be interested in the game, such as fans of fantasy movies, books, or TV shows.

School: High schools and colleges sometimes have organized gaming clubs. If you're a student, check to see if your school has an active gaming club, and if it doesn't, you might try starting one to recruit more players.

Work: If school is behind you, your workplace might contain folks with an interest in D&D who could join your regular game group.

The D&D Website: The D&D website at www.wizards.com/dnd is home to a huge community of D&D players, probably including people who live near you. In the Community section of the website, you can find game stores, events and conventions, and gamers in your area.

Game Store: Your local game or hobby store might have a space where people play D&D, or at least a bulletin board where you can advertise to find more players for your game.

Conventions: From large conventions such as GenCon (www.gencon.com) and Origins (www.originsgames.com) to smaller local and regional gatherings, gaming cons provide a weekend full of activity and abundant opportunities to meet other gamers from your area. In addition, comic book and fantasy conventions sometimes include programming related to gaming and draw a sizable population of gamers.

RPGA: Wizards of the Coast's Organized Play department runs the Roleplaying Gamers Association (or RPGA)—a program devoted to making it easier to find face-to-face gaming experiences. Joining is easy and free, and membership provides you with free DM material and access to hundreds of events at conventions and in your community. Check it out at www.wizards.com/rpga.

—James Wyatt, Bill Slavicsek, and Richard Baker, adapted from Dungeon Master 4th Edition for Dummies

When characters run out of daily powers or spend all their healing surges, after perhaps four or five encounters, they probably stop for an extended rest. You can manipulate the pacing of encounters in your game to change the pattern of the PCs' rests and alter the buildup and release of tension in the game.

Pacing

Pacing is the rhythm of action and story progression that unfolds in encounters over the course of a game session.

You can keep the tension building in your game sessions by pacing your encounters. Consider three different models of encounter pacing: a standard, balanced model; one with a single, intense spike in the action; and one that features a slow escalation of danger. This section discusses how to use these models to plan encounters for a single game session or an in-game day of adventuring.

When you offer choices to your players during an adventure, they might tackle encounters in a sequence different from what you had planned. Be flexible, and be prepared to modify encounters to fit with the pacing model you have in mind. For example, you can take enemies from one encounter and add them to a later or earlier one if your sense of dramatic pacing demands it. If you want to aim for a balanced pace, and the characters just finished two easy encounters, you might add monsters to the next fight if the PCs choose a path that leads to another easy encounter.

When setting a pace, consider these two time scales: what happens in a single game session and what happens in an adventuring day between extended rests. You'll find pacing easier to manage if you design those periods equivalently, meaning that the characters start a new day at the beginning of every session. You might not be able to utilize that method, particularly if your sessions last only one or two hours. Conversely, long game sessions might cover two in-game days, with characters taking an extended rest in the middle of the session.

Balanced Pacing

In a balanced pacing model, aim for a balance of action, roleplaying, and storytelling—fast and furious segments that alternate with slower, calmer periods. You don't need to strictly alternate between difficult and easy encounters or scenes of high drama and slower exposition. Instead, watch the trends and aim for a balance over the course of a session.

A straightforward dungeon-based adventure follows this model, with slow, relatively calm periods of exploration broken occasionally by scenes of intense and life-threatening combat. If you use a mix of encounter difficulties as suggested on page 104 of the Dungeon Master's Guide, you can easily fall into a rhythm of harder and easier encounters to complement the alternation of exploration and encounter.

This model works effectively when you start and end each session (and each adventuring day) with an exciting high note, such as a difficult encounter or a dramatic turning point. Grab your players' attention at the outset, and then finish with a cliffhanger, leaving them eager for your next session.

A smart party spends its resources slowly over a series of encounters that feature balanced pacing. If the characters use up their daily powers and spend all their healing surges early in the session, they might stop for an extended rest and disrupt your pacing. Use easier encounters and slower periods to ease up on the tension and encourage them to continue adventuring.

Balanced pacing is a versatile model that allows a variety of different encounter types, including combat and noncombat encounters, as well as exploration, interaction with NPCs, investigation, puzzles, and administration. Give your players a variety of encounter types to hold their attention.

The Spike

A spike is a single encounter so difficult that the characters need to use every power, spend every action point, and utilize smart tactics to overcome the challenge. The characters will likely face only one encounter of this type in a day of adventuring; if you play short sessions, it could be the only encounter. However, you can use minor build-up and aftermath encounters to serve as rising action and ending for the story of the session (see "Classic Story Structure," page 8). Players enjoy the adrenaline rush and excitement of a single battle in which their characters fight for their lives, unleashing every resource at their disposal.

A spike works most effectively when paired with a dedicated build-up, especially if you foreshadow this dramatic conflict over the course of days or weeks of game time. Increase the players' fear, uncertainty, and tension with clues about the opponents they face.

You want the characters to reach a spike fresh. They should have most of their daily powers, an action point apiece to spend, and perhaps consumable magic items to use in the fight. For this reason, the spike model works well as the centerpiece of a short adventure, or in an adventure when the characters are in no particular rush, such as a long trek through the wilderness during which the characters can take an extended rest before reaching the monster's lair at the end of the journey.

You can present the characters with a few easy encounters after the spike as they deal with scattered enemy forces or minor remaining threats, or let them spend the conclusion dealing with the consequences of the outcome, in interaction with NPCs, or in exploration.

Escalation Pacing

In a model of escalation pacing, you put the characters (and players) on a steady upward ramp of increasingly difficult challenges until they reach the top—a huge dramatic climax featuring a major villain, world-shattering revelations, or both. The key to this model is to deplete the characters' resources, so that when the PCs reach the climax, they're exhausted and face serious trouble.

Because the escalation model relies on depleting the characters' resources, consider depriving the characters of extended rests to ensure that they're nearly tapped out when they reach the final encounter. The characters could be on a tight deadline, they might be racing across the countryside in pursuit of fleeing bandits, or they could be suffering from a curse that prevents them from gaining any benefit from an extended rest. You want to motivate characters to proceed from one encounter to the next without stopping for an extended rest (see the next section, "Drawing Characters Onward").

The escalation model works particularly well in a game that has strong elements of horror or drama. Ideally, the characters don't realize what serious trouble they face until it's too late. Then they have to do battle with no daily powers at their disposal and precious few healing surges remaining.

The goal of escalation pacing is to build to a terrible climax in which the players fear for their characters' lives. It's not to wipe out the party or force them to flee in defeat. The climactic encounter should be big and scary, but it shouldn't be more than a level or two above their level. With their resources drained, the characters will have trouble enough with an encounter of around their level without trying to handle something far more powerful than they are.

Drawing Characters Onward

When DMs discuss, analyze, and create games, they often try to find a way to evoke one particular reaction: "Just one more turn," or sometimes "Just one more quest." This phrase refers to the game's ability to engross and invest a player in the game's progress, making him or her want to continue playing, just as reading a novel might make you say, "Just one more chapter" until you finish the book at three in the morning.

How can you involve your players in your adventure so deeply that they say, "Just one more encounter" until they find themselves in a tough fight with no remaining daily powers or healing surges? In an escalation model, you want to overcome their natural caution and force them to extend themselves beyond their comfort zone in their eagerness to reach the next encounter. Four basic techniques can help you draw your players into one encounter after another: momentum, rewards, deadlines, and prohibitions.

Momentum

Let the momentum of the adventure story carry the characters from one encounter to the next. Short, relatively easy combat encounters draw the players forward—if no single encounter feels too difficult, characters might underestimate the value of the resources they have spent. Make sure combat encounters don't increase while character resources diminish, and cut encounters short if characters seem fatigued from a long fight.

Use compelling hooks to make the characters eagerly anticipate the next encounter. A pair of doors in a dungeon room can be a compelling hook for players. Each choice the characters make draws them onward, particularly if the players know that their decisions affect the outcome of the adventure.

Respect the Dynamic

Whenever I start a new campaign, I frame it in a distinctive way. And the plan I have in mind for a new campaign slowly mutates during play. What might seem like a failure to adhere to an original concept becomes one of the great strengths of the roleplaying experience. Each campaign develops a dynamic beyond the control of the DM, or any other single participant. I might try to implement a sweeping plot line of epic proportions, only to find my players drifting into a trading-and-fighting game. Improvised events might veer a lighthearted campaign into angst, darkness, and bloodshed.

When a campaign takes on an unintended shape, I take a deep breath and remember to respect the dynamic. What we create together at the table trumps my initial plans.

—Robin Laws

When the characters open a dungeon door and see monsters they defeated easily before, they're more likely to charge ahead than if they see unknown, dangerous-looking foes. You can use rumors of familiar monsters to draw the characters deeper and deeper into the dungeon, bolstered by the confidence that they can handle these weak opponents.

Rewards

You can use rewards to encourage players to continue adventuring without resting. Milestones and the benefits associated with them (action points and magic item daily power uses) are rewards built in to the game to counteract the effect of depleted resources. Magic rings also have powers that function better or function only if the wearer reaches at least one milestone in a day, which can be an incentive to seek out additional encounters before starting a climactic battle.

You can also use the promise of treasure as a hook to draw characters on to the next encounter. A dungeon door inscribed with the words "Royal Treasury" practically begs characters to open it to acquire the treasure inside—after fighting its guardians. Beyond the simple promise of a tangible reward, certain kinds of treasure can encourage characters to press onward as well. Consumable magic items, such as potions and whetstones (see page 189 of Adventurer's Vault), can bolster player confidence, especially if the players believe that the items they find will help in the next encounter. For example, the characters find a cache of alchemist's fire (Adventurer's Vault, page 24), and they know trolls lie in wait in the next room. An exciting magic item—an item that has an interesting power or a useful property—gives the player who acquires it an incentive to press on for one more encounter and test the item out.

You can also use the alternative rewards detailed in Chapter 5 to encourage characters to push on through additional encounters. A divine boon might come with a specific duration that drives the characters to use that reward as much as possible before it expires. Or, a grandmaster might promise training if the characters complete a task within a specific time.

Deadlines

A deadline amounts to a strong disincentive to take an extended rest. If the characters have to accomplish a specific goal within a limited time, a 6-hour rest could ruin their ability to meet the deadline. An adventure deadline might fall into one of these categories.

Specific Date or Time: The characters must meet certain requirements before a specific date or time. For example, the dead will rise on an upcoming holiday, or cultists plan to perform a sinister ritual on the night of the full moon, or the bandits demand delivery of the ransom before sunset.

Race Against Time: The characters know a deadline looms but have no specifics. For example, rumblings in the earth indicate the volcano above the village will erupt soon, but the PCs don't know how soon. This type of deadline enables you to adapt the deadline to the characters' actions, although it's not as effective in motivating the characters to hurry.

Limited-Time Resource: The characters have a boon or an alchemical concoction that loses its effectiveness after a certain time. This category works the same as a specific-time deadline or a race against time, but it gives the characters a personal investment in the passage of time.

Race or Chase: The characters need to reach their goal before a rival or enemy does, or maybe they have to catch up with a group on the move. They have no reason to believe that their rivals will stop for an extended rest, so stopping to rest will set the PCs behind. For example, the characters must retrieve a treasure before a band of evil NPCs does, or the PCs must catch up to a group of bandits racing across the wilderness.

You can allow the characters to gain the benefit of a short rest while they hurry through empty dungeon corridors or across the wilderness between encounters. Then, your story maintains a sense of urgency without limiting characters to relying on at-will attacks and healing potions.

Prohibitions

Another way to prevent players from stopping too frequently for extended rests that disrupt your planned pacing is to create situations when characters can't benefit from an extended rest until they have met certain conditions. Here are a few ideas for the kinds of situations that can motivate your players to keep going.

- A curse afflicts the characters, preventing them from sleeping until they complete a quest to remove the curse. Or maybe a magical obligation placed on the PCs prevents them from resting until they fulfill their duty.
- The characters must perform an extended skill challenge that lasts several days, with combat encounters interspersed throughout. Tell the players up front that an extended rest in the course of the skill challenge will interrupt it and cancel their progress, forcing them to start over.
- As a house rule, change the requirements of an extended rest to prevent the characters from benefiting from it until they reach two milestones in a day. Make sure your players know and understand this rule at the start of the campaign.

Use these techniques sparingly, because overusing them can lead to player resentment. These tactics can be effective in horror-themed campaigns that use the escalation pacing model.

Long Fights

Closely related to these methods for pacing encounters between extended rests is the question of how to handle rapid-fire encounters that don't allow characters to take short rests. How do you model the fights you see in movies, where waves of enemies rush the characters without a moment's pause? How do you make your characters hurry from one encounter to the next to stop an assassin from killing the high priest?

To create these long encounters, you can allow characters to refresh themselves in the middle of the fight. Devise specific objectives and turning points in the battle, and give each one an associated refresh. These objectives could include any of the following examples.

- Defeat a designated champion monster. One champion emerges from each wave of enemies, or one appears early in the running fight.
- Reinforcements arrive to help the PCs and bolster their courage. These reinforcements might be companion characters (see Chapter 1) who help the PCs in the fight, or they could be part of a larger force if the PCs are fighting an enemy army.
- The characters battle their way to an ancient altar and complete a simple skill challenge during the encounter to claim a blessing from a deity.
- The PCs defeat one-half, one-third, or another designated fraction of the enemy forces.
- The characters secure a solid defensive position on the battlefield, allowing them to catch their breath.

When the characters fulfill your predetermined requirements, you might give them one or more of the following benefits.

- Each character can choose one expended encounter power and regain its use.
- Every character regains the use of his or her second wind or can spend a healing surge (even if unconscious).
- Each character gains an action point and can spend it later in the encounter, even if he or she has already spent an action point in the encounter.
- Each character gains another use of a magic item daily power as if he or she had reached a milestone.
- Each character can regain the use of an expended daily power. Save this benefit for a significant accomplishment in the middle of a battle.

Terrain features, such as energy nodes (see page 59), which allow characters to recharge spent powers, also prove useful in long fights.

—James Wyatt

Every class has attack powers and utility powers related to movement, such as powers that let characters push and slide enemies, and powers that let them shift or teleport themselves or their allies. Racial features such as the eladrin's fey step and the elf's wild step make movement a significant tool for the player characters. Monsters also have numerous movement powers, particularly skirmisher monsters. Racial abilities, such as those possessed by goblins and kobolds, give them the potential to shift during combat.

Sometimes, no number of movement powers can convince characters to change position, especially ranged attackers such as wizards, invokers, warlocks, archer rangers, and some clerics and bards. Even a rogue—one of the most mobile melee characters in the game—might stand still for round after round if he or she has an enemy pinned in a flanked position.

You'll find encounters more dynamic and exciting when everyone changes position on their turn. The following section offers techniques you can use to keep characters and monsters moving.

Circular Paths: The basic shape of your encounter area is important.

Attractive Terrain: Use terrain that gives characters an advantage or offers other reasons for them to reach specific locations.

Terrain to Avoid: Terrain, traps, and hazards that the characters want to avoid can also encourage movement, if you use them with care.

Starting the Encounter: The first round of combat can determine how much movement takes place in the encounter.

Enemy Tactics: Monsters on the move can force characters to move as well, so keeping monsters mobile—even moving them into positions of disadvantage—can be worthwhile.

Encounter Objectives: Encounter objectives that discourage the characters from remaining stationary can make movement a more significant part of the encounter.

Circular Paths

Your room layout can encourage movement in an encounter. Create an area that suggests a continuous path of movement: a pair of rooms connected by two different hallways, a room split by a chasm spanned by two bridges, or a twisting maze of interconnecting goblin warrens. That type of circular path allows combat to unfold on multiple fronts. Once fighting starts in one area, either side can gain an advantage by circling around to approach from a different side.

Create a more dynamic encounter area by using a more complex shape—three areas connected to the others by multiple pathways. Start the encounter with the characters in the middle, the room connected to both of the other rooms. The map on page 77 shows an example of an encounter area designed with circular paths: The characters enter the area in the largest room, where three passages lead to smaller rooms that form part of the same encounter area.

Don't stop at designing an encounter area around a circular path; take advantage of the looping corridors to encourage movement. If every monster in the encounter area confronts the characters in the doorway on the first round of combat and never leaves the entry area, the PCs might as well be fighting in a small room with one entrance.

Attractive Terrain

Force PCs to move around by creating attractive locations within an encounter, such as advantageous terrain, a place behind cover, or some other sort of defensive position. Desirable locations might also involve an objective of the encounter, such as an object in the room that the characters need to reach (see "Encounter Objectives," below).

An example of advantageous terrain is a bottleneck location where outnumbered characters can limit the number of monsters that can attack them at one time. Five characters facing a horde of angry minions create an advantage by retreating into a 10-foot-wide corridor. This approach allows only two minions at a time to attack the party defenders while the rest of the party makes ranged attacks or assists the front-line defenders. Maneuvering into that position can produce an interesting, dynamic couple of rounds. Once the characters settle into place, don't allow them dig in until all the minions are dead; put the PCs on the move again by changing the enemies' tactics (see "Enemy Tactics," below).

Some terrain features that give advantages to characters can be found on pages 67–68 of the Dungeon Master's Guide. These include blood rock, cloudspores, a font of power, mirror crystal, a pillar of life, and a sacred circle. The following section of this chapter describes more terrain features that can be used to add interest to encounters. Those that could be used as attractive terrain include an eldritch influx, an energy node, and healing ground.

Terrain to Avoid

Difficult or dangerous terrain, along with traps and hazards, can hinder, discourage, or punish characters when they change position, so use these features carefully. You can also combine them with other methods of encouraging motion, or use them in conjunction with powers that push, pull, or slide. Both monsters and characters have access to forced movement powers, so the fight could involve maneuvering for the best position to push enemies into the hazardous terrain.

Another way to use hazardous terrain and traps is to have the danger travel around the encounter area, encouraging players to keep away from it as it moves. The vexing cloud power of the goblin hexer (Monster Manual, page 137) is an example of this sort of terrain—the goblin can move the cloud to pursue characters who try to escape or avoid it. Terrain examples might include a lava flow, a drifting cloud of noxious gas, a slowly spreading fire, or motes of raw chaotic energy that dart around the area and teleport each creature they touch, dealing damage in the process.

You can also move dangerous terrain in a regular pattern (such as the rolling boulder trap in Kobold Hall on page 217 of the Dungeon Master's Guide). Use dangerous terrain to propel the characters out of combat inertia and away from their current locations. You can use moving terrain to give an advantage to either side of the combat or to make the outcome of the battle feel more uncertain.

Finally, dangerous terrain can draw characters to it if it offers a potential reward. For example, bolt stone (page 58) damages a character who enters its space, and the discharge has a chance to create more bolt stone around it, hurting any enemies that move adjacent to the character. Players might find that the potential payoff is worth taking minor damage. However, for this kind of terrain to attract characters, they must understand how it works. Plant clues in the environment or let characters make Dungeoneering checks to identify terrain features—and be sure to tell them the benefits as well as the perils.

Starting the Encounter

One common DM mistake that can ruin an encounter can happen in the first round of combat. When the characters break down the door, they see a room full of monsters, interesting terrain features, and awe-inspiring wall carvings. The DM calls for initiative checks, and the players roll low. The monsters go first, and the problem begins. Each monster moves up to the PCs on its turn and attacks. None of that interesting terrain comes into play, and little movement occurs because the monsters and characters are stuck fighting in the doorway.

When the monsters have higher initiative counts than the characters, it's not a given that every one of them will rush forward to attack in melee. You can delay some of the monsters' turns or ready their attacks for when the characters move closer. Hold the monsters in their defensive positions and allow the characters to move into the room before the fight breaks out in earnest.

If the encounter includes artillery monsters that can attack from a distance, then the remaining monsters could charge the characters in the entryway. The monsters' ranged attacks might encourage one or more player characters to break through the front line of monsters to deal with the snipers. Or you could include attractive terrain or an encounter objective that draws the characters into the room before they change their focus to killing the monsters on the front line.

Enemy Tactics

All other particulars being equal, if the monsters don't move, the characters have little reason to move. Move your monsters, even if it means that they provoke opportunity attacks or attacks from the fighter's Combat Challenge class feature. Don't keep a monster stationary just because it might miss a chance to attack if it moves. Monsters should make the following choices:

- Move out of positions where characters flank them.
- Take cover from ranged attacks when possible.
- Avoid hazardous terrain they know about.

Reasonably intelligent monsters should also use these tactics:

- Move into flanking positions.
- Take advantage of circular paths to outflank the party.
- Make use of attractive terrain they know about.

Encounter Objectives

Clear encounter objectives can encourage movement. Several of the sample objectives described on pages 40–41 can spur characters to change positions during encounters.

For example, when characters have to protect an NPC, that person's actions can propel the characters around the battlefield—especially if the NPC panics or otherwise doesn't cooperate with the player characters. The characters could spend move actions chasing after an NPC who flees every time a monster moves into proximity. Alternatively, a battle-tested NPC could encourage the player characters to move by taking up a position that offers the PCs flanking opportunities.

If the characters have to retrieve an item or stop a ritual by manipulating objects in the room, the position of the significant items becomes attractive terrain, a place the characters want to reach.

The Dungeon Master's Guide presents a variety of terrain features to use when fleshing out your dungeons and encounter areas. This section presents more examples of fantastic terrain, and also introduces the concept of terrain powers.

Terrain is more interesting if the player characters know that something will happen when they try to interact with it. Some terrain types have obvious cues that should tip the players off, such as a cloud of magical energy or an ice-covered floor. For such terrain types, the players should at least be aware that those spaces aren't normal, and they should have the opportunity to identify the terrain if they interact with it or if they observe its effects on another creature.

If a monster uses terrain to its advantage, be sure to describe to the players how the terrain affected the monster's action. For instance, if a mind flayer uses a blast cloud to increase the size of its mind blast, be sure to describe the amplifying effect of the blast cloud so the characters know they can use the terrain in the same way.

In the absence of any clue the characters might get from how a monster acts, the effects of fantastic terrain are seldom obvious. However, you can allow characters to attempt Dungeoneering, Nature, or Arcana checks against a hard difficulty for their level. (See the Difficulty Class and Damage by Level table on page 65.) Choose a skill based on the environment where the encounter takes place or the nature of the terrain. A successful check means the character has a general idea of the terrain's effects and how to avoid them.

More Fantastic Terrain

The fantastic terrain types described on the following pages supplement the terrain types detailed on pages 64–69 of the Dungeon Master's Guide. These entries expand on what's presented there by giving advice on how best to use the terrain in constructing your own encounters.

Tier and Skill Checks and Ability Checks: Throughout these examples, the term "per tier" is used to show how an effect should scale. Multiply the per tier value by one for heroic tier, two for paragon, and three for epic. If a terrain feature grants a +1 bonus to attack rolls per tier, the bonus is +1 at heroic tier, +2 at paragon tier, and +3 at epic tier.

Blast Cloud

Rust-hued dust hangs in the air. The dust particles conduct and amplify certain types of energy and elemental forces.

Effect: The squares containing the cloud are lightly obscured. When a burst or a blast created by a fire, force, lightning, psychic, or thunder power touches a square of blast cloud, the size of the burst or blast is increased by 1.

Usage: A blast cloud encourages the characters (and their opponents) to remain farther apart than normal to avoid the enlarged areas of effect. Use this terrain in encounters featuring monsters that can take advantage of it, or when it can allow player characters who have attacks that might benefit from the blast cloud to take up an attractive combat position that utilizes the terrain's effect.

Blood Midge Cloud

A swarm of biting insects fills the area.

Effect: The squares occupied by the cloud are lightly obscured, and the cloud is difficult terrain. If no creature is in the cloud when a creature starts its turn within 3 squares of a blood midge cloud, the cloud moves 5 squares and attempts to cover as many living creatures as possible. If an area or close attack includes squares occupied by the cloud, the cloud is destroyed in those squares. If a cloud is broken into smaller pieces by an attack, each piece acts as a separate terrain feature.

Usage: A blood midge cloud is interesting because it is mobile obscured terrain that can move to engulf the greatest number of creatures. The concealment granted by the cloud helps anyone in the cloud, and it's particularly beneficial to ranged attackers, who can fire out of it easily.

Bolt Stone

In some areas, lightning energy fuses with rock to form a highly unstable, dangerous mixture. In various regions of the Elemental Chaos, and in dungeons located near the conflux of different types of elemental energy, blue-tinged areas of bolt stone appear.

Effect: When a creature enters a square of bolt stone, it takes 5 lightning damage per tier. Roll a d20; on a 10 or higher, the bolt stone's energy is discharged, and the stone becomes inert. Otherwise, the lightning energy is transferred to all unoccupied squares adjacent to the origin square, and those squares become bolt stone.

Usage: Bolt stone works best when you scatter it across an encounter area. It offers some risk and reward. A player character might enter a square and take the damage in the hope of creating a barrier to hold back monsters or eliminate minions.

Creeping Ice

In some areas infused with cold energy, particularly where icy parts of the Elemental Chaos erupt into the world, a strange form of ice crawls toward any kind of heat. Living creatures that stand on the ice are slowly drained of life.

Effect: Any creature that starts and ends its turn in any square of creeping ice takes 5 cold damage per tier.

Usage: Creeping ice is a great tool to persuade the characters to move around an encounter area, particularly if you place it in spots where characters who have ranged attacks are likely to position themselves.

Defiled Ground

The dead do not always rest in peace. Some cemeteries are darker than others, and ancient events leave unseen traces of their former presence. Defiled ground sometimes attracts undead.

Effect: Undead gain a +1 bonus to rolls to recharge their powers while on defiled ground. In addition, if an undead creature is reduced to 0 hit points while on defiled ground, roll a d20; on a 10 or higher, the undead creature rises with 1 hit point on its next turn. If radiant damage reduces an undead creature to 0 hit points, it can't rise again in this manner.

Usage: Defiled ground makes undead encounters somewhat more dangerous. Use it for encounters that are meant to have a feel of horror, or to evoke the atmosphere of a site sacred to undead, such as a temple to Orcus.

Dimensional Turbulence

Instability in the fabric of a plane makes teleportation difficult and inaccurate. Dimensional turbulence is visible as a faint rippling of space with an occasional twinkling of purple light.

Effect: A creature that teleports into a square of dimensional turbulence slides 1d4 squares in a random direction after teleporting.

Usage: Most useful at the paragon and epic tiers, dimensional turbulence turns normally dependable teleportation powers into a risky proposition.

Doomlight Crystal

These rare, glowing rock formations exist in the Underdark and deep caverns. The glow comes from the gas inside the crystals, which explodes if it comes in contact with air.

Effect: A fist-sized doomlight crystal emits dim yellow light in a 3-square radius. If a character in a square with a doomlight crystal is hit by a close or an area attack, the crystal is destroyed as well—and the gas inside it explodes, dealing 5 damage per tier to the character in its square.

Usage: Obviously, this terrain feature makes area and close attacks more powerful. It can also add an interesting lighting element to a battle if the doomlights are the only source of illumination. As they are destroyed, the battlefield grows darker and darker.

Eldritch Influx

One or more squares reflect light, as if a metallic object hung suspended in the air. Characters entering these squares feel energy surrounding them and hear a faint hum in the air. Magical energy pools in this area, flowing into the void left behind by the expenditure of magic item powers.

Effect: As a standard action, a character in a square of eldritch influx can channel its energy to recharge an expended magic item power. Recharging a power in this way does not grant the item's wielder the ability to make use of more daily magic item powers between milestones. Using an eldritch influx for this purpose depletes its energy, and it can't be used again until 24 hours have passed.

Usage: Since monsters rarely use magic items, this terrain feature is a great magnet for player characters. Place it so they have to work to reach it during a fight, encouraging movement and rewarding risk. Use it for paragon characters or in the first encounter after a milestone, when you know the characters have magic item activations available to them.

Elemental Windchurn

The powerful, swirling wind in this area makes flying difficult. The elemental turbulence crackles with energy, bringing with it a strong ozone odor.

Effect: An area of elemental windchurn is difficult terrain for creatures that are flying, and a creature that ends its turn aloft in the area slides 1d6 squares in a random direction.

Usage: Elemental windchurn adds a touch of chaos to a battle while discouraging flight. Use it as an excuse to ground flying monsters at the heroic tier, while at higher tiers it makes an aerial duel far less predictable.

Energy Node

An energy node is a particularly strong confluence of arcane, divine, and other forms of power. The air above it shimmers with energy, and anyone standing upon it feels fresh and reinvigorated.

Effect: A creature that starts its turn in an energy node's square can spend a minor action while in the square to regain a single encounter or recharge power. Using a node for this purpose depletes its energy, and it can't be used again until 24 hours have passed.

Usage: Energy nodes work well in long, running battles and in encounters with solo monsters. Not only do they allow the characters (and monsters) to use encounter powers multiple times, but they also create a situation in which the player characters might be racing against their opponents. Only one creature can benefit from each energy node, forcing the characters to fight for access to any nodes in an area. In a fight against a solo monster, consider placing more than one node around the perimeter of the encounter area, or in hard-to-reach places, which can force PCs to disengage in order to draw upon the power of a node.

Fey Circle

Often distinguished by the presence of tangled vines or large toadstools, this location is empowered with the extraordinary energy of the Feywild.

Effect: A creature can spend a minor action while in a fey circle's square to teleport 5 squares.

Usage: A fey circle can add unpredictability to a combat area, and it can level the playing field somewhat when the player characters are fighting monsters that teleport—or when monsters familiar with the circle face player characters who teleport all the time. A fey circle is also a great addition to an encounter area that features a treacherous chasm or similarly dangerous terrain, giving the player characters a way to bypass the danger if they can figure out the purpose of the fey circle.

Grasping Bog

A grasping bog is an area of deep, viscous mud that not only hampers movement but also clings to characters who tumble into it.

Effect: A grasping bog is difficult terrain. In addition, a creature that falls prone in a square of grasping bog is restrained (save ends).

Usage: Combine grasping bog terrain with monsters that can knock their enemies prone.

Healing Ground

This area is infused with primal energy that allows life of all sorts to flourish. Undergrowth or fungus that thrives on the primal energy in the place grows wildly and chokes the area with its profusion.

Effect: If a creature in this terrain spends a healing surge, it regains an additional 2 hit points per tier. Healing ground is also difficult terrain due to the abundant plant life.

Usage: Healing ground, assuming that the characters can recognize it, is a good example of attractive terrain that gives characters an incentive to move into a room and take up advantageous positions.

Infernal Fumes

Most common in regions of the Nine Hells and certain volcanic regions of the world, infernal fumes are great clouds of gray smoke that glow red with inner heat. Infernal fumes drift as if alive, apparently seeking concentrations of multiple creatures.

Effect: Squares filled with infernal fumes are lightly obscured. The fumes can move up to 4 squares each round. A creature that ends its turn in a square of infernal fumes takes 5 fire and poison damage per tier and is dazed until the end of its next turn.

Usage: Infernal fumes are an effective way to chase player characters around an encounter area. This terrain is similar to a blood midge cloud, but has a significant harmful effect to characters and monsters inside it. Few monsters, even devils, are immune to the effect of infernal fumes, so they challenge both sides of a fight equally. Creatures that remain outside the cloud are hindered in their attempts to attack creatures inside the cloud as a result of the concealment it grants.

Jade Flame

This strange, vibrant green fire burns everything that comes near it, yet the nature of its magic is such that a creature it burns cannot be harmed by other sources of heat for a limited time.

Effect: A creature that enters a square of jade flame or that starts its turn adjacent to such a square takes ongoing 5 radiant damage per tier (save ends). However, until the creature saves against the ongoing damage, it has resist fire equal to 10 per tier.

Usage: Jade flame offers the characters a choice. They can accept some constant radiant damage in return for protection against a potentially more dangerous threat. The characters might need to use jade flame to protect themselves before they race across a lava chamber or face another sort of fire hazard.

Martyr's Monument

This area contains the life energy of an ancient and powerful champion of the gods, embodied in a statue or some other holy icon.

Effect: The monument grants a +2 bonus to saving throws to all creatures within 5 squares of it.

In addition, a creature adjacent to the monument can touch it as a minor action to make a saving throw. Each time a creature touches the monument to make a saving throw, roll a d20; on a 5 or lower, the monument loses all its magical properties for 24 hours.

Usage: A martyr's monument gives characters a new option for their minor actions. Such terrain is also great for monsters that have nothing else to do with their minor actions. Characters and monsters can use forced movement powers to drive their enemies away from the monument so they can't gain the saving throw bonus it grants. Use this feature in combination with monsters whose attacks impose effects that a save can end, or if the characters have been making particularly effective use of such attacks against previous foes.

Necrotic Ground

This area is infused with necrotic energy. All light sources appear slightly dimmer, and the air is cold and still. Creatures that enter this area feel tired and drained.

Effect: A creature that spends a healing surge in an area of necrotic ground recovers only half the normal number of hit points. (All other effects, such as additional hit points regained or the bonus to defense from using second wind, are unaffected.)

Usage: Unless an encounter area consists entirely of necrotic ground, characters will wisely do anything they can to avoid being in the area when they spend healing surges. If you combine necrotic ground with a strong defensive position or another advantageous location, you might force characters into the difficult choice of staying in their good position but gaining less benefit from healing effects, or abandoning their position so that they can regain as many hit points as possible.

Needle Hedge

Areas of sharp-needled bushes grow in the dark forests of the Shadowfell and in areas of the world where shadow's influence is strong. The plants are covered in long, sharp spines and thorns, forcing creatures to slow down as they move through the bushes or suffer a multitude of small cuts.

Effect: A needle hedge is difficult terrain, and it grants cover to a creature within it or behind it. If a creature moves through more than 1 square of needle hedge during a single move action or incident of forced movement, that creature takes 5 damage per tier.

Usage: Characters are likely to consider a needle hedge an effectively solid barrier until they're pushed through it. Use it with monsters that can force movement, or with elves or other skirmishers that can shift freely in difficult terrain (including creatures that have the forest walk ability).

KEREM BEYIT

Phase Mist

Phase mist is an extremely rare phenomenon. It appears as a hazy cloud of swirling colors similar to those found in the Astral Sea. When a creature steps into phase mist, its body phases into the strange spaces that exist between the planes.

Effect: A square of phase mist is lightly obscured. A creature that starts its turn in a square of phase mist gains phasing until the end of its turn.

Usage: Use phase mist to create encounters that force the characters to split up. For example, the characters might use the mist to enter a chamber that lacks a door. Within the chamber is another patch of phase mist and an object that the characters need. In addition, monsters that have phasing, or undying guardians that lurk in the inaccessible chambers, wait to ambush lone characters.

Quick Sear

This mixture of acid and quicksilver is a viscous, silvery green liquid. It appears as a small puddle in a single square.

Effect: A creature that starts its turn in a square of quick sear or adjacent to such a square takes 5 acid damage per tier. If a square of quick sear is within the area of effect of a close or an area attack, it moves 1d6 squares in a random direction.

Usage: Quick sear adds a random element to an encounter that could otherwise prove dull or static. Use it in encounters where a sense of randomness and an unexpected twist seems appropriate.

Rage Stone

This expanse of black-veined crimson stone is infused with the psychic residue of pitched battles and brutal atrocities. A creature standing on a square of rage stone feels itself consumed with negative and violent emotions that it must unleash.

Effect: A creature that starts its turn in a square of rage stone must make a melee attack on that turn or takes 5 psychic damage per tier.

Usage: Creatures that are comfortable making melee attacks suffer few ill effects from rage stone, aside from lingering emotional turmoil that has no game effect. Creatures that prefer to stay away from melee combat (including most PC controllers, for example) are the most likely to take damage from rage stone. Putting rage stone at the periphery of an encounter area can play havoc with PC controllers and ranged strikers, as well as with artillery monsters.

Thunder Shards

These crystalline shards of solidified thunder energy are both unstable and dangerous. They rumble and shudder as they course with the energy within them. Most creatures avoid them, but occasionally orcs, ogres, and other battle hungry creatures dwell near them. Although thunder shards are dangerous, they also make useful defensive fortifications if used properly.

Effect: Squares of thunder shards are difficult terrain. If a creature makes a melee attack against a target in a thunder shard square, roll a d20; on a 10 or higher, both the attacker and the target take 5 thunder damage and are pushed 1d4 squares from each other.

Usage: Thunder shards are useful barriers to encourage movement and add a random element to the fight. The random push is especially useful if the area has pits or other dangerous terrain.

Terrain Powers

The barbarian pushes against a broken stone wall, causing it to topple over and crush the orcs on the other side. An ogre slams its club into the ship's wooden floor, causing the floor to shudder and knocking the wizard prone.

Sometimes, characters and their enemies can use the terrain around them as weapons. Adding this terrain to an encounter provides for an added layer of excitement, inventiveness, and danger. When the players see that terrain can function as a weapon against their characters' enemies, they seek out creative tactics and novel ways to deal with encounters.

A terrain power is a description of what happens when a creature uses a feature of the terrain to attack its enemies. It can be a prepared part of an encounter, perhaps even key to the characters' success in the encounter, or it can be an improvised action invented on the spur of the moment.

Terrain powers are interesting in an encounter when the characters can use them. You might prepare terrain powers for a climactic encounter and lay them out on the table (perhaps literally, on index cards, or else verbally as you describe the area) when the encounter starts, or let characters discover them on their own. On the other hand, exciting uses of terrain powers can include the unusual tactics that players think up when their characters are caught in desperate situations. Be flexible!

Terrain powers function like character or monster powers, with just a few important differences. Any creature in or adjacent to the terrain can use the power without any special training.

Reading Terrain Powers

Like character powers, terrain powers are described in a specific format.

Name and Usage: The header line gives the name of the power and how often it can be used.

Single-Use Terrain: Sometimes using a terrain power destroys the terrain. Once the ogre collapses the hut's roof on the PCs, the roof can't attack the characters anymore. The first time a creature succeeds on a check to use a single-use terrain power, or attacks with it if the power requires no check, that terrain power is no longer available for use. The terrain is destroyed or otherwise ineffective if used to attack again.

At-Will Terrain: Terrain powers of this sort can be used over and over. The terrain's attack can be repeated. Attacking with it might cause the terrain some damage, but the object or area remains intact.

Flavor Text: Beneath the header line is a brief description of how the terrain looks and what its power might do.

Action: The kind of action needed to use the power is called out here.

Requirement: Some terrain powers can be used only if a certain precondition is met.

Check: A terrain power requires an attack roll, a skill check, or an ability check to prepare it for use. A tiefling archer takes careful aim, firing an arrow and trying to sever the rope holding up a chandelier. The archer must first hit the rope. Or, an ogre pushes against a wall, attempting to topple it over onto nearby enemies. First the ogre has to make a successful skill check to push the wall over.

A terrain power's "Check" entry specifies the kind of roll or check required to use the power. Usually, the entry describes the DC of a skill check or ability check as easy, moderate, or hard. Use Difficulty Class and Damage by Level table (page 65) to determine the exact DC based on the level of the encounter.

Success: This entry describes what happens if a character succeeds on the check. That character can then use the terrain power.

Failure: As a default, if a character fails the check, he or she cannot use the terrain power. If the terrain power is single-use, the power is not expended on a failed check. This entry appears only if a failure requires some further explanation about the terrain or the outcome of the usage attempt.

Attack and Hit: The attack of a terrain power is part of the same action needed to make the check. These and other entries in a terrain power description sometimes refer to "level," which is the level of the encounter. For example, the attack of a falling chandelier is level + 3 vs. Reflex, and a hit deals 2d8 + one-half level damage. In a 10th-level encounter, its attack would be +13 vs. Reflex, and its damage would be 2d8 + 5.

Miss: This entry appears only if an attack deals half damage or imposes some other damage or condition on a miss.

Effect: A terrain power can have an effect that occurs regardless of whether the attack hit or missed.

Sample Terrain Powers

You can adapt these example terrain powers to a variety of situations, using the same rules but providing different descriptions. For example, when a player character (or an ogre) wants to push a wagon down a slope, use the boulder terrain power. Any heavy object suspended above the encounter area can fill in for a chandelier, including the tiefling archer's drawbridge.

Boulder — Single-Use Terrain

This large boulder is perched atop a long slope. One strong shove could send it hurtling into an oncoming mob of enemies.

Standard Action
Requirement: You must be adjacent to the boulder.
Check: Athletics check (hard DC) to shove the rock.
Success: The boulder rolls forward and down the slope, stopping after moving 1d6 squares away from the slope's base. The boulder can move through a creature's space. When it does so, make the following attack.
Target: Each creature whose space the boulder enters
Attack: Level + 3 vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d10 + one-half level damage, and the target is knocked prone.
Miss: Slide the target 1 square out of the boulder's path.

Chandelier — Single-Use Terrain

A large, ornate chandelier of iron and crystal hangs over the battlefield. It would be a pity if it fell to the ground.

Standard Action
Check: From a distance, to sever or loosen the rope or chain holding the chandelier aloft, make a ranged attack (the chandelier's defenses are level + 5).
Alternatively, you can spend a standard action to cut the rope while adjacent to either the chandelier or the rope or chain keeping it aloft.
Success: The chandelier falls to the ground and smashes to pieces.
Target: Each creature in an area burst 1 beneath the chandelier
Attack: Level + 3 vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d8 + one-half level damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The area where the chandelier fell becomes difficult terrain.

Rope Bridge — At-Will Terrain

This rickety bridge spans a deep gap. One sudden move, and it sways perilously, threatening to put anyone on it over the side.

Standard Action
Requirement: You must be on or adjacent to the bridge.
Check: Athletics check (moderate DC) to sway the bridge.
Success: The bridge sways.
Target: Each creature standing on the bridge (including you, if applicable)
Attack: Level + 3 vs. Reflex
Hit: The target is knocked prone. If the target is already prone, it falls off the bridge.

Ruined Wall — Single-Use Terrain

This sagging wall is ready to fall over with just the right application of force.

Standard Action
Requirement: You must be adjacent to the wall.
Check: Athletics check (hard DC) to topple the wall.
Success: The wall collapses.
Target: Each creature in a close blast 3 in the direction the wall fell
Attack: Level + 3 vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d10 + one-half level damage, and the target is knocked prone.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The space the wall covered and the area of the blast become difficult terrain.

Swinging Rope or Vine — At-Will Terrain

A vine hangs down from the treetops over a deep chasm.

DM Note: When placing a swinging vine or rope in an encounter, you must determine the rope's starting square, its path of travel, and its ending square. Keep in mind that some vines or ropes can travel in both directions.
Move Action
Requirement: You must be in the vine or rope's starting square to use this terrain power.
Check: Athletics check (moderate DC) to swing from the vine's starting square to its ending square.
Success: You move from the vine's starting square to its ending square along the vine's path. This movement provokes opportunity attacks, and you can let go from the vine at any point during this movement. If you reach the ending square, you can make an Athletics check to jump at the end of the swing, treating it as a jump with a running start, but you must jump in the same direction as the movement of the swinging vine.
Failure: You do not move, and your move action ends.

Table of Combustibles — Single-Use Terrain

A table holds beakers and vials containing volatile combustibles that have a violent reaction when mixed together or thrown to the ground.

Standard Action
Requirement: You must be adjacent to the table.
Check: Athletics check (hard DC) to overturn the table. You can drop prone as part of the standard action to avoid the attack.
Success: The table is overturned.
Target: Each creature in a close burst 2 centered on the table
Attack: Level + 3 vs. Reflex
Hit: Ongoing 5 fire and poison damage per tier (save ends).

Tapestry — Single-Use Terrain

A quick tug, and the tapestry hanging on the wall flutters to the ground, trapping anyone next to it.

Standard Action
Requirement: You must be adjacent to the tapestry.
Check: Athletics check (moderate DC) to pull the tapestry down.
Success: The tapestry falls.
Target: Each creature in a close blast 3 out from the tapestry
Attack: Level + 3 vs. Reflex
Hit: The target is blinded and slowed until it is no longer underneath the tapestry.

DESIGNING TRAPS

No dungeon is complete without a few devious devices. Sometimes, though, traps have a nasty habit of reducing a dungeon run to a crawl. Take care to put traps in the right setting to make their inclusion fun and to keep them from dragging your game down.

When setting out to design a trap for your game, consider basing it on the traps you already have available to you. If you're thinking about a gauntlet of shuriken-spitting statues for an 8th-level party, you can probably use either the spear gauntlet or poisoned dart wall from the Dungeon Master's Guide. Replace the numbers for DCs, attack bonus, and damage using the tables in this section. This method is a lot easier and faster than designing from scratch.

You can also use the tables to increase or decrease the level of a trap that you already have available. Maybe you like one of the traps in this chapter, but its level is too high. Just consult the tables and adjust it. If the existing trap doesn't match the numbers for its level in the tables, compare the trap's numbers to the table's numbers and then eyeball a proportional difference based on the numbers for the level you want.

You can even take a trap and "reskin" it to your needs without changing any numbers. Perhaps you want to fill an area with deadly but random arcs of lightning. Take the pendulum scythes trap from the Dungeon Master's Guide and have it deal lightning damage instead of normal damage. Instead of slots, hidden lightning generators create the effect. Your players have what feels like a new trap experience, and you didn't have to do a lot of work.

If no existing trap serves your needs, you can design one using the tables here with other traps as your guide. When setting out to design a trap for an encounter, don't get hung up on whether it's a trap or a hazard, or if it qualifies as a blaster, a lurker, an obstacle, or a warder. These terms exist to provide mental cues that suggest the uses of traps. You already know how you want to use your trap.

1. Choose the Trap's Level: This is probably either the level of the player characters or the level of the encounter in which the trap appears. The level determines the trap's numbers as described in the tables below. You can deviate from these numbers, but you should have good reason to do so. Your players aren't likely to realize small changes in difficulty (a point or two up or down), but noticeable changes in the numbers can cause the trap to become either too easy or too hard for the XP it provides, which likely translates to less fun at the table. If you look at the numbers and want your trap to be more dangerous, consider making a higher-level trap.

Trap DCs: Use the Difficulty Class and Damage by Level table to generate appropriate DCs for interacting with traps of a given level. Perception is typically used to detect a trap, though other skills might also come into play if thematically appropriate. Such DCs typically start as moderate or hard, and in many cases progressively more difficult DCs might provide more information. If detecting a trap, or some fact about a trap, needs to be more challenging than hard difficulty, use a value no more than 5 greater than the hard DC.

When setting the DCs for disabling or delaying a trap using the Thievery skill, consider rudimentary traps, such as concealed pits or tripwire triggers, to be of moderate difficulty, while a more complex trap should use DCs appropriate for a hard challenge. Traps might have alternative ways of delaying or disabling them, with varying DCs. For instance, a trap could have a moderate DC check that involves some risk (such as requiring the PC to be attacked or to place himself in a precarious situation), while also allowing a hard DC check with reduced or no risk. In some cases, you might even allow a character who accomplishes a difficult success to find an even easier way to disable the trap. For example, a PC might succeed on a hard DC Perception check to notice the panel that hides a trap's control mechanism, after which an easy DC Thievery check allows her to use those controls to stop the trap.

2. Determine How the Trap Threatens the Characters: A trap that attacks once and is done should have different numbers from a trap of the same level that attacks multiple times. Similarly, a trap that attacks a large area or many characters functions differently from a trap that endangers just one character.

Single-Shot Traps: Single-shot traps attack once and are done. A trap that resets might still be a single-shot trap if a character must choose to do something active to set it off again. Being attacked every round as long as you stand in a square is not a single-shot trap, because the character could be paralyzed in that location or forced to fight in that square, but getting shot every time you open a particular door qualifies as a single-shot trap. The trap resets whenever the door is closed, but the character could leave the door open or not use it again.

A single-shot trap uses the Limited Damage Expressions part of the table. For a single-shot trap that affects a single target, use the Medium damage column. For one that affects an area, use the Low damage column. For an elite trap, use the damage column one step up (Low becomes Medium, Medium becomes High).

Ongoing Attack Traps: These traps continually attack the targets while they are in the area.

DIFFICULTY CLASS AND DAMAGE BY LEVEL

| | Difficulty Class (DC) Values | | | Normal Damage Expressions | | | Limited Damage Expressions | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Level | Easy | Moderate | Hard | Low | Medium | High | Low | Medium | High |
| 1st-3rd | 5 | 10 | 15 | 1d6 + 3 | 1d10 + 3 | 2d6 + 3 | 3d6 + 3 | 2d10 + 3 | 3d8 + 3 |
| 4th-6th | 7 | 12 | 17 | 1d6 + 4 | 1d10 + 4 | 2d8 + 4 | 3d6 + 4 | 3d8 + 4 | 3d10 + 4 |
| 7th-9th | 8 | 14 | 19 | 1d8 + 5 | 2d6 + 5 | 2d8 + 5 | 3d8 + 5 | 3d10 + 5 | 4d8 + 5 |
| 10th-12th | 10 | 16 | 21 | 1d8 + 5 | 2d6 + 5 | 3d6 + 5 | 3d8 + 5 | 4d8 + 5 | 4d10 + 5 |
| 13th-15th | 11 | 18 | 23 | 1d10 + 6 | 2d8 + 6 | 3d6 + 6 | 3d10 + 6 | 4d8 + 6 | 4d10 + 6 |
| 16th-18th | 13 | 20 | 25 | 1d10 + 7 | 2d8 + 7 | 3d8 + 7 | 3d10 + 6 | 4d10 + 7 | 4d12 + 7 |
| 19th-21st | 14 | 22 | 27 | 2d6 + 7 | 3d6 + 8 | 3d8 + 7 | 4d8 + 7 | 4d10 + 7 | 4d12 + 7 |
| 22nd-24th | 16 | 24 | 29 | 2d6 + 8 | 3d6 + 8 | 4d6 + 8 | 4d8 + 8 | 4d12 + 8 | 5d10 + 8 |
| 25th-27th | 17 | 26 | 31 | 2d8 + 9 | 3d8 + 9 | 4d6 + 9 | 4d10 + 9 | 5d10 + 9 | 5d12 + 9 |
| 28th-30th | 19 | 28 | 33 | 2d8 + 10 | 3d8 + 10 | 4d8 + 10 | 4d10 + 9 | 5d10 + 9 | 5d12 + 9 |

An ongoing attack trap uses the Normal Damage Expressions part of the table. For an ongoing-attack trap that affects a single target, use the Medium damage column. For one that affects an area, use the Low damage column. For an elite trap, use the damage column one step up (Low becomes Medium, Medium becomes High).

No-Damage Traps: Traps that deal no damage might still otherwise harm the characters (blocking their movement, making them weakened or slowed, and so on). In a noncombat situation, a no-damage trap probably isn't much of a threat, but in a combat encounter, this sort of trap can be just as tough to deal with as a monster. You're firmly in the realm of art when designing a no-damage trap, so don't be afraid to change the XP you give for it based on the difficulty of the encounter when you play. A trap effect that incorporates damage along with nondamaging effects should have a lower damage number, reducing the damage to that of a lower-level trap.

Stress Traps: A stress trap is like a no-damage trap except that it threatens damage and might eventually follow through on that threat if the characters fail to take the necessary actions. A room filling with water or one that has a slowly descending ceiling is a stress trap. This kind of trap might work better as a skill challenge, but see the water-filling chamber and crushing walls room traps on the following pages.

TOP TEN TRAPS TO AVOID

10. Traps without Cause: Traps should guard something specific or be useful to their makers in combat. Traps that have no apparent reason for being there can annoy players.

9. Traps Out of Scope for the Trap Setters: If the stone-axe-wielding grimlock warren has a repeating crossbow trap, there should be a good explanation the characters can discover.

8. Too Many Traps in Expected Places: If you put a trap on a treasure chest in three adventures in a row, you can expect the players to take the next treasure chest they see and toss it down a stairwell to open it. The same goes for statues and doors. Use traps on common objects sparingly to avoid having them get stale.

7. Traps that Counter PC Preparations: The frost giant's palace of ice shouldn't have fire traps. Maybe you can justify it, but instead of explaining why you're making the players unhappy, why not make them feel smart and reward their preparations for cold by giving them exciting ice traps to overcome?

6. Traps in Unexpected Places: It might be "realistic" or effective to put a trap in a surprising place such as the middle of an otherwise unremarkable hallway, but putting traps in places that players take for granted as being safe means they can't do so anymore. If the characters are reduced to testing every square before they walk on it, your game is going to slow to a crawl.

5. Traps Designed to Defeat the Rogue: If your players devote resources to defeating traps, don't punish them by making traps more difficult to overcome. They'll be a lot happier if their choices are meaningful.

4. Traps that Make a Character Sit out the Fight: The greased pit trap in the final encounter room can make a player whose character falls into it bored during what should be the best encounter in the adventure.

3. Traps without Countermeasures: A trap without countermeasures is about as fun as fighting a monster you can't damage. Give the characters multiple means of defeating the trap.

2. Traps that Don't Give Experience: It might feel as though the characters didn't earn their success when they circumvent a trap with a single roll or a clever idea, but not giving XP would be like not giving the players XP for those combats that end in a single round. Sure, they were lucky, but it felt like a great success to them. Allow them to enjoy it.

1. Extremely Deadly Traps: It might make a trap more fearsome to have it cause a lot of damage, but the unseen trap that kills a character is about as fun as walking out your door to find that a falling meteorite has flattened your parked car.

They both use statistics appropriate for elite, ongoing attack, area traps of their level.

3. Assign XP for the Trap: When assigning XP for a trap, you need to know its level and type (single-shot or ongoing, standard or elite). Single-shot traps should be considered minions. Ongoing, no-damage, and stress traps should have the XP of standards or elites.

Elite and Solo Traps

You might want a trap to be elite so that it takes up more space or deals more damage than a standard version of the same trap, but it's often more fun just to add another trap. Don't fall prey to thinking that elite equates to more fun or greater danger. It can mean those things, but a trap the characters fail to circumvent and that deals a lot of damage to them could just as easily be less fun than a standard trap. Similarly, if you increase the level of an encounter by adding an elite trap, but then the characters don't trigger that trap, the encounter becomes less of a challenge.

Making a trap elite is similar in many respects to making a monster elite. Use the traps in this chapter and in the Dungeon Master's Guide as examples. Options include increasing a trap's attack bonus by 2, increasing its damage, increasing its number of attacks, and increasing the space the trap occupies or the area it can affect.

As for solo traps, you might consider creating such a trap as a skill challenge, and you can also combine different traps to make a solo encounter. The hallmark of a solo encounter is that it keeps all the characters involved, so a solo trap needs to include ways for each character to contribute to either help overcome the trap directly, or at least to mitigate the damage or other effects the party is subject to during the encounter. Similarly, each character should be at risk during an encounter with a solo trap.

STANDARD AND ELITE TRAP STATISTICS

| | Standard | Elite |
|---|---|---|
| Initiative bonus | +2 | +4 |
| Attack vs. AC | Level + 5 | Level + 7 |
| Attack vs. other defenses | Level + 3 | Level + 5 |

If you want to derive statistics such as defenses and AC, see "Damaging Objects" (Dungeon Master's Guide, page 65).

*Reduce the attack bonus by 2 for powers that affect multiple creatures.

Sample Traps

Each of the trap descriptions below contains a Tactics section that provides some advice and suggestions on using the trap, and many of the traps here also contain sample encounters.

Kissing Maiden Level 4 Lurker
Trap XP 175

When a square is entered, a section of floor slides aside and a stone post levers up to hit the creature in the square, pushing it back. The stone post then swings back down to reset the trap as long as the square is empty.

Trap: A square hides a post that deals damage and pushes a creature. The post provides cover while the creature is in the square.

Perception

- ✦ DC 17: A panel in the floor ahead of you is loose, suggesting that it slides to one side.
- ✦ DC 22: Another portion of the floor gives in when pressed down. It might be a trapdoor or a pressure plate.

Trigger

The floor panel slides aside and the post swings up when a creature enters the square.

Attack

Opportunity Action Melee
Target: The creature that triggered the trap
Attack: +7 vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1d10 + 4 damage, and the target is pushed 2 squares in the direction the trap is set to push.

Countermeasures

- ✦ A character standing in the square of a triggered kissing maiden that missed can keep it from resetting by jamming an object in the way of the post or the sliding section of floor that hid the post, requiring a DC 12 Thievery check.
- ✦ A character adjacent to the trap can delay or disable a kissing maiden with a DC 17 Thievery check.

Tactics

Use a kissing maiden with other traps or terrain powers, so that a pushed PC lands in another dangerous square. Place the kissing maiden in a space the PCs have to cross, so they need to disable it or risk triggering it multiple times. An encounter could include multiple kissing maidens teamed with creatures that fly or hover.

Sample Encounter

A group of evil dwarves defends a fortified chamber that is rife with traps. The dwarf hammerers use their shield bash attacks to push enemies into kissing maidens, while the dwarf bolters position themselves behind the traps.

Level 8 Encounter (XP 1,825)

- ✦ 2 dwarf bolters (level 4 artillery; Monster Manual, page 97)
- ✦ 3 dwarf hammerers (level 5 soldier; Monster Manual, page 97)
- ✦ 5 kissing maiden traps (level 4 lurker)

Falling Iron Portcullis Level 7 Minion Obstacle
Trap XP 75

When a pressure plate is stepped on, a hidden iron portcullis drops from the ceiling, blocking the hallway.

Trap: A portcullis drops into 2 adjacent squares when a 2-square-wide pressure plate is stepped on. A secret panel hides the winch that raises the portcullis.

Perception
- DC 14: The ceiling has a 2-inch-wide slot packed with gray dirt and small stones.
- DC 19: A portion of the floor gives in when pressed down. It might be a trapdoor or pressure plate.
- DC 24: A secret panel in the wall beyond the pressure plate hides the winch that raises the portcullis.

Trigger
A portcullis falls and blocks the passage when a creature steps on a pressure plate.

Attack
Immediate Reaction Area 2 adjacent squares
Target: Each creature in the area
Attack: +10 vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d8 + 5 damage, and the target is restrained and falls prone. If the target is already prone, it takes no damage, but its turn ends immediately.
Miss: Half damage, and the target is pushed 1 square (roll a d20: 1-10 push forward, 11-20 push back).

Countermeasures
- A character who finds the winch can crank it up with a DC 8 Athletics check.
- A character adjacent to the trap can delay or disable one portcullis or pressure plate with a DC 19 Thievery check.
- A restrained character can use the escape action (DC 19) to free himself, moving 1 square but remaining prone.
- A character not restrained by the portcullis can force it open with a successful DC 24 Strength check.
- A character can attack a portcullis bar (AC 8, Reflex 8, Fortitude 8; hp 45). Destroying a bar opens enough room for a Small or Medium creature to squeeze through with an escape action (DC 14). Destroying two bars allows a Large creature to squeeze through (DC 19), and Small and Medium creatures count the square as difficult terrain.

Tactics

Place the triggering pressure plate beyond the portcullis so that it can divide the party, then start a combat encounter. Alternatively, have a monster run away from the PCs and trigger the portcullis to fall on the PCs who follow. Use multiple portcullises to isolate the PCs within a room, and have monsters with ranged attacks or insubstantial monsters attack.

Sample Encounter

An adventurer fell prey to a falling portcullis, was eaten by carrion crawlers, and then rose as a ghost. Now he lures other adventurers to a similar fate, and the carrion crawlers, with their troglodyte handlers, come to investigate the sound of the gate crashing down.

Level 7 Encounter (XP 1,525)
- 2 carrion crawlers (level 7 controller; Monster Manual, page 40)
- 1 falling iron portcullis trap (level 7 obstacle)
- 1 trap haunt ghost (level 8 lurker; Monster Manual, page 116)
- 2 troglodyte maulers (level 6 soldier; Monster Manual, page 252)

Water-Filling Chamber Level 8 Elite Blaster
Trap XP 700

When a character moves onto a central square in the room, reinforced iron doors crash down over the exits, and a face carved in the wall opens its jaws to spew water into the room. Each iron door can be opened to prevent accidental entrapment, but each door release has three locks.

Trap: The chamber seals off and fills with water when a pressure plate is stepped on.

Perception
- DC 14: The face carved in the stone walls looks like it has a movable jaw.
- DC 19: A portion of the floor gives in when pressed down. It might be a trapdoor or pressure plate.
- DC 24: A hidden slot is above each doorway. Something might fall out of it.

Initiative +4

Trigger
The trap is triggered when a creature enters the trapped square. When triggered, the iron doors fall into place. Roll initiative. On the trap's initiative count, water begins to pour from the faces in the walls.

Attack
Standard Action Area the entire room
Target: Each creature in the area
Effect: On the trap's initiative count, the water level in the room rises. The water has the following effects each round.
Round 1—No effect on Medium creatures. The room is difficult terrain for Small creatures.
Round 2—The room is difficult terrain for Medium creatures. Small creatures must swim.
Round 3—All creatures must swim.
Round 4—The room is filled with water. All creatures are considered to be swimming underwater.

Countermeasures
- A character adjacent to the trapped square can delay the trigger with a DC 19 Thievery check.
- A character adjacent to one of the doors can partially prop it open with a DC 24 Thievery check. This causes the room to fill with water in twice as many rounds, using the round 1 result on round 2, the round 2 result on round 4, and so on.
- A character adjacent to one of the doors can use a key to open one of its three locks, assuming the character has the right key.
- A character adjacent to one of the doors can open one of its locks with a DC 19 Thievery check.
- A character adjacent to the carving on the wall can reduce the flow of water into the room for 1 round by partially closing the carving's mouth with a DC 14 Strength check. For each round that the mouth is held partially closed, water still flows in but at a slower rate. For every 3 rounds that the mouth is held partially closed, the water rises as though a single round had passed (see "Effect," above).
- A character adjacent to one of the doors can attempt to break it down with a DC 30 Strength check.
- A character adjacent to one of the doors can attack it in an attempt to break it open (AC 5, Fortitude 10, Reflex 5; hp 80).

Tactics

Don't worry about the physics here. A water-filling chamber is about a cool scene, not the minutia of water pressure or cubic volume. That said, consider the dungeon design and the location from which the water is flowing. Perhaps setting off this trap allows the PCs to access a previously flooded section of the dungeon.

Crushing Walls Room Level 11 Elite Blaster
Trap XP 1,200

When a character moves onto a central square in the room, reinforced iron doors crash down over the exits, and two opposing walls begin to press inward. Each iron door can be opened to prevent accidental entrapment, but each door release has three locks.

Trap: One square in the room is a pressure plate that makes the walls press together when it is stepped on.

Perception

- DC 16: Slight scratches in the floor and ceiling suggest that the walls can move inward.
- DC 21: A portion of the floor gives in when pressed down. It might be a trapdoor or pressure plate.
- DC 26: A hidden slot is above each door. Something might fall out of it.

Initiative +4 Speed 1 (consider altering this based on the size of the room)

Trigger

The trap is triggered when a creature enters the trapped square, which is typically in the center of the room. When triggered, the iron doors fall into place. Roll initiative. On the trap's initiative count, the walls move inward.

Attack

Standard Action Area the entire room
Target: Each creature in the area
Effect: On the trap's initiative count, each wall moves inward 1 square. Creatures adjacent to the wall are automatically pushed 1 square. When the crushing walls are 1 square apart, they attack all creatures in the room until all are crushed to death.
Attack: +14 vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3d6 + 5 damage.
Miss: Half damage.

Countermeasures

- A character adjacent to the trapped square can delay or disable the trigger with a DC 26 Thievery check.
- A character adjacent to one of the doors can disable it with a DC 26 Thievery check.
- A character adjacent to one of the doors can use a key to open one of its three locks, assuming the character has the right key.
- A character adjacent to one of the doors can open one of its locks with a DC 21 Thievery check.
- A character adjacent to one of the moving walls can prevent its inward movement with a DC 21 Strength check. If the walls are 1 square apart, the DC increases to 26. Any number of characters can aid the one making the check.
- A character adjacent to one of the doors can attempt to break it down with a DC 25 Strength check.
- A character adjacent to one of the doors can attack it in an attempt to break it open (AC 5, Fortitude 10, Reflex 5; hp 80).

JULIE DILLON

Tactics

The danger of this trap depends on the size of the room and the speed of the walls. At least one doorway should be accessible when the walls are still 1 square apart, allowing the PCs a chance to escape.

You could change the trigger to something active, such as a lever that an enemy might pull. This becomes even more interesting if the enemy is still engaged in the fight. Maybe the room has high walls but an open top. Then the villain and his allies can watch from above and attack the PCs, or the PCs can attempt to move out of the trap by going up.

For a double whammy, put the PCs up against this trap and a group of monsters that have phasing. The phasing creatures move into and out of the room through the crushing walls, taking advantage of the space behind the walls for refuge from attacks.

Giant Rolling Boulder Level 14 Minion Blaster
Trap XP 250

When tis trap is triggered, a huge rolling boulder is released and crashes through a false wall. It begins rolling down the hall, crushing everything in its path.

Trap: A trigger you define releases a distant boulder that begins rolling toward the trigger area, and it rolls until stopped.

Perception

- ✦ DC 23: A character near the distant false wall can determine that it is thin and that a large space is behind it.
- ✦ DC 28: A character realizes that the trigger is in tension and that setting it off releases something.

Initiative +2 Speed 8 (consider altering this based on the length of the roll and the PCs' speeds)

Trigger

The trigger might be an enemy pulling on a lever, a character pressing the wrong button, or someone taking the gem from a statue's eye. When the trap is triggered, roll initiative. On its initiative count, the boulder moves.

Attack

Standard Action or Immediate Interrupt Area trample attack in squares entered by the boulder

Trample: Each turn, the boulder moves its speed and enters creatures' spaces. This movement does not provoke opportunity attacks. The boulder can end its move in an occupied space. Creatures in the boulder's space at the start of their turns have cover and can act normally. When the boulder enters a creature's space, the boulder makes a trample attack. If a creature enters a square of the boulder's space, the boulder makes a trample attack as a free action.

Trample Attack: +17 vs. Reflex

Hit: 3d10 + 6 damage, and the target is knocked prone.

Miss: Half damage.

Countermeasures

- ✦ A character adjacent to the rolling boulder can stop it with a DC 28 Athletics check. Making this attempt provokes a trample attack as an immediate interrupt, and the character's Athletics check fails if the boulder's trample attack hits.
- ✦ A character adjacent to the trigger (or the location from where the trigger is activated) can delay the trigger with a DC 23 Thievery check.
- ✦ A character adjacent to the boulder before it begins to roll can disable the trap with a DC 23 Thievery check. The character must have broken through the false wall first (AC 4, Fortitude 12, Reflex 4; hp 30).

RYAN BARGER

Tactics

This trap is straightforward. The big boulder rolls down, crushing all in its wake. Consider how the boulder stops. Does it come crashing to a halt, smash through a wall into an unexplored room, roll up a ramp and reverse direction, or even go careening off a cliff to slam into structures far below? You can combine several boulder traps in a room that has ramps on either side, causing the boulders to roll back and forth across the room. A more complex room might contain boulders with crisscrossing paths, forcing creatures in the room to be constantly moving.

Death Strangler Statue Level 16 Blaster
Trap XP 1,400

This statue is of a masked humanoid holding wicked-looking spiked chains in each hand. When a creature approaches, it comes alive, lashing out with its chains.

Trap: When the trap is triggered, this Medium statue lashes its chains at nearby enemies, holding them in place and slowly squeezing the life out of them.

Perception

- ✦ DC 20: Just before a character enters the statue's attack area, the character notices that the statue moves slightly, as if it were ready to pounce.
- ✦ DC 25: The character notices a group of spidery runes carved lightly on the statue's base.

Additional Skill: Arcana

- ✦ DC 25: The character realizes that the statue is made with the help of magic, and it might be dangerous or even animate in nature.
- ✦ DC 28: An Arcana check to detect magic sees an arcane aura that surrounds the trap (5 squares in every direction) and recognizes that this might be a trigger area for an effect.

Trigger

When an enemy enters the magical aura radiating 5 squares around the statue, the statue animates and attacks that creature with the following attack, but as an immediate reaction instead of a standard action. Then roll for the statue's initiative. It acts each round on that turn, until no creature is within its trigger area.

Initiative +2

Attack ✦ Necrotic

Immediate Reaction Melee 5 or Standard Action or Opportunity Action or Free Action
Target: One creature
Attack: +19 vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d10 + 7 damage, and the target is restrained and takes ongoing 10 necrotic damage.
Special: The statue can have only two creatures restrained at one time, and if two are restrained, it cannot make another attack until it releases a creature or a creature escapes. The statue can release a creature from being restrained at any time with a free action.

Countermeasures

- ✦ A restrained character can use an escape action (DC 25 check) to free himself and end the necrotic damage.
- ✦ As a standard action, a creature adjacent to the statue can disrupt the controlling enchantment with a DC 20 Thievery or Arcana check. Doing so renders the statue inert until the start of that creature's next turn and causes the statue to release any creatures it currently has restrained. If this check fails by 5 or more, the statue can instead make the above attack against the creature, but as an opportunity action instead of a standard action.
- ✦ Succeeding on a complexity 1 skill challenge (4 successes before 3 failures) using either Thievery or Arcana successfully disables the statue. The characters disabling the statue must be adjacent to it. Each attempt takes a standard action, and with each failure, the statue can make an attack as a free action against the failing creature (if it already has two creatures restrained, it releases one before making this attack).
- ✦ The statue has AC 10, Reflex 10, Fortitude 28, and hp 200. When it is reduced to 0 hit points, the trap is destroyed.

Top Ten Ways to Make Your Traps More Fun

10. Reward the PCs with Treasure: Perhaps the last victim's skeleton is still impaled on the spear trap, including her belt pouch.

9. Reveal a World Detail: Perhaps the falling block from the ceiling reveals the ghoulish carving that represents the true deity of the temple.

8. Encounter the Trap Keeper: The PCs can discover hints about later traps (assuming the clever trap keeper doesn't figure out a way to deceive them).

7. Give an Adventure Tip: The iron portcullis that drops down to seal the PCs in the hall of spinning blades has a representation of the dungeon complex in the pattern of its iron bars. It's a map!

6. Give the Characters Something to Learn: If removing the green gem set off the statue's trap, stepping on the green mosaic in the floor sounded the alarm, and turning the green-handled crank made the bridge turn sideways, the PCs might think twice about opening that giant green door.

5. Reveal a New Section of the Dungeon: The spiked pit might have an access tunnel so that bodies and valuables can be retrieved without a risky climb into the pit.

4. Team It with Other Traps: A trapped chest is a bit more interesting when it sits on the lap of a fire-breathing statue in a room where poison darts shoot from the wall.

3. Give the PCs Control: The PCs reset the trap and trick their foe into stepping into it.

2. Allow Every PC to Contribute: Maybe the wizard can make an Arcana check to reveal a panel hidden by an illusion. Perhaps the fighter can hold the trap open with a Strength check.

1. Combine It with Combat: A room with pit traps is more interesting if the PCs can push monsters into the pits.

Tactics

These simple but effective guardians are often found in pairs next to a doorway or looming over a treasure trove. The trap has a glimmer of magically granted intelligence, and it is magically programmed with rudimentary self-preservation. When a creature tries to disable the trap, the death strangler statue typically lets go of other restrained creatures to attack the threat. This glimmer of intelligence also allows the statue to tell friend from foe.

Sample Encounter

Typically placed by an evil leader or by a creature that values property or solitude, these traps can be accompanied by a number of monsters, but they work best with a mix of controllers, artillery, and even the occasional lurker or skirmisher.

Level 16 Encounter (XP 7,000)

- 1 bodak skulk (level 16 lurker; Monster Manual, page 36)
- 2 death strangler statues (level 16 blaster)
- 1 yuan-ti malison disciple of Zehir (level 17 controller; Monster Manual, page 270)
- 1 yuan-ti malison incanter (level 15 artillery; Monster Manual, page 269)

Elemental Tiles Level 16 Obstacle
Trap XP 1,400

The area is riddled with floor tiles that transform before your eyes. At times, each tile resembles stone that rippling like water; then it transforms to boiling ice. Later the tile dances with a flame-colored mist that crackles before it grows into spikes of lightning. Whatever these tiles are, they don't look stable.

Trap: Each of these traps has eight strategically placed tiles, and whenever a creature enters a tile space, it is attacked by a random form of elemental energy. Also, when creatures are in close proximity to the tiles, every so often a random tile erupts, spewing an area with hazardous elemental energy. This trap has two triggers and two attacks.

Perception

- No Perception check is needed to notice the tiles, because they are readily apparent.
- DC 25: The character notices a focus device located in an out-of-the-way place. The device likely controls the magic of the tiles.

Additional Skill: Arcana

- DC 25: The character realizes that the tiles are channeling the energy of the Elemental Chaos, and each does so in a dangerously unstable way.
- DC 30: The character recognizes the focus device as a chaos stone—the controlling focus for this type of trap—which can be overloaded with the right kind of attacks or through careful manipulation. Successful manipulation requires a character to use the same energy that the tiles spew during the round in which that character attempts to manipulate the focus device.

Trigger 1

A creature enters a square that contains an elemental tile. The trap then makes the following attack.

Attack ✦ Varies
Opportunity Action Melee 1
Target: The creature that triggered the trap
Attack: +19 vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d8 + 7 damage of a type determined by a d6 roll (1, acid; 2, cold; 3, fire; 4, force; 5, lightning; 6, thunder damage), and the target is slowed (save ends).

Trigger 2

Once enemy creatures are in the encounter area, roll initiative. On the trap's initiative count, a random elemental tile explodes with primordial energy, making the following attack.
Initiative +2

Attack ✦ Varies
Standard Action Close burst 5
Target: Each creature in burst
Attack: +19 vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d10 + 7 damage of a type determined by a d6 roll (1, acid; 2, cold; 3, fire; 4, force; 5, lightning; 6, thunder damage), and the target is slowed (save ends). The burst creates a zone of difficult terrain until the end of the trap's next turn. The type of energy also determines the current vulnerabilities of the chaos stone (see Countermeasures).

Countermeasures

- Succeeding on a complexity 1 skill challenge (4 successes before 3 failures) using either Thievery or Arcana disables the trap. The characters disabling the elemental tiles must be adjacent to the chaos stone to make an attempt. Each attempt takes a standard action. On a failed check, all the tiles explode in the close burst attack.
- The chaos stone has AC 14, Reflex 14, Fortitude 28, and hp 100. When it is reduced to 0 hit points, the trap is destroyed. When the elemental tiles trap makes a close burst attack, its chaos stone focus is especially susceptible to the same kind of attack until the start of the trap's next turn. During that time, a successful attack against the chaos stone that deals the same type of damage as the trap's most recent attack automatically scores a critical hit on the chaos stone.

Tactics

The placement of these tiles appears random, but cunning trapmakers have a method to the mad scattering. The tiles are placed to work well with powers that cause forced movement or that cut off flanking and other combat positioning options.

Sample Encounter

These traps are found in the lairs of elemental creatures or demons, and they work well with those creatures due to their natural resistances to the damage types these unstable tiles spew forth.

Level 15 Encounter (XP 6,600)

- 2 earth titans (level 16 elite brute; Monster Manual, page 122)
- 1 elemental tiles trap (level 16 obstacle)
- 2 immoliths (level 15 controller; Monster Manual, page 56)

Phantom Hunter Level 18 Lurker
Trap XP 2,000

Wind rushes by and coalesces into a ghostly form that has roughly the shape of a large hunting cat. It attacks and then fades into nothingness.

Trap: A phantom hunter fades in and out of existence, and it attacks creatures within a defined area that is normally no larger than an 8-by-8-square section.

Perception
- ✦ DC 20: The character notices that the shadows play strangely in the area, as if ghostly figures move within it.
- ✦ DC 25: The character notices a strange totem tucked away in the area.

Additional Skill: Arcana
- ✦ DC 29: After the characters spot the totem, an Arcana check to detect magic determines that it courses with primal power.

Trigger
When an enemy enters the trap area, the phantom hunter makes the following two attacks on initiative counts 25 and 20. If an enemy is currently adjacent to the trap's focus totem or holding it, the phantom hunter attacks that creature instead of attacking a random enemy.

Attack 1
Standard Action Melee 1
Special: This attack recharges on a roll of 6 on a d6. The phantom hunter uses this attack first during an encounter. Then, on each of the trap's subsequent turns, make a recharge roll before the attack. If the recharge is successful, it uses this attack instead of the one noted below.
Target: One creature
Attack: +23 vs. AC
Hit: 3d8 + 7 damage, and the target is weakened and slowed (save ends both).

Attack 2
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Attack: +23 vs. AC
Hit: 2d8 + 7 damage.

Countermeasures
- ✦ Succeeding on a complexity 1 skill challenge (4 successes before 3 failures) using either Nature or Arcana on the totem disables the trap. The characters disabling the phantom hunter must be holding the totem. Each attempt takes a standard action. If the skill challenge results in failure, the totem explodes, making the following attack.
  Immediate Reaction Close burst 5
  Target: Each creature in burst
  Attack: +21 vs. Reflex
  Hit: 3d8 + 7 damage.
- ✦ The phantom hunter does not attack anywhere outside the trap area, unless the totem is taken outside the area. If the latter is true, the phantom hunter attacks only a creature standing adjacent to the totem or holding it.

Tactics

Both the haunting nature of the phantom hunter and its connection to an area make it optimal for guarding places that have treasure, to protect areas where rituals are performed, or to defend devices and spots of major importance. Craftier trap setters might have the totem focus readily displayed, tempting those trained in Nature or Arcana to attempt to disable it, knowing that the phantom hunter will harry them until the task is complete.

Sample Encounter

Dragons and other powerful creatures that have hoards, or those with cluttered lairs, use these traps to guard themselves and their treasures.

Level 20 Encounter (XP 15,400)
- ✦ 1 elder green dragon (level 19 solo controller; Monster Manual, page 80)
- ✦ 1 phantom hunter trap (level 18 lurker)
- ✦ 4 ogre bludgeoneers (level 16 minion; Monster Manual, page 198)

Pain Vault Level 20 Warder
Trap XP 2,800

This highly complicated vault's lock looks like it's a pain to pick . . . and it is, in more ways than one.

Trap: This complex lock takes a skill challenge to unlock, and each wrong move has dire consequences for those attempting to open it as well as those nearby.

Perception
- ✦ No check is necessary to notice that this is a complicated vault-style lock, with numerous devices that need to be picked or disabled before the door can be opened.
- ✦ DC 22: The character notices that some of the lock's devices are adorned with magical runes.

Additional Skill: Thievery
- ✦ DC 22: Six separate locks need to be disabled in the right order before the door can be opened.

Additional Skill: Arcana
- ✦ DC 27: Once the runes are spotted, they can be identified as Abyssal symbols of pain, terror, and death.

Trigger
The trap is a complexity 2 skill challenge (6 successes before 3 failures) that requires a DC 22 Thievery check for each success. With each failed check, the trap makes the following attack. Each attempt to disable a lock takes a standard action. With each success or failure, another attempt to disable a lock must be made before the end of the attempting creature's next turn, or a failure in the challenge is accrued. On the third failure all the locks reset, requiring the skill challenge to be performed anew, but ending the immediate threat.

Attack ✦ Necrotic, Psychic
Immediate Reaction Close blast 5
Target: Each creature in blast
Attack: +21 vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d6 + 7 necrotic damage, and the target takes ongoing 10 psychic damage and a –2 penalty to ability checks and skill checks (save ends both).

Countermeasures
- ✦ A character can ready a standard action to make a DC 22 Arcana check when someone fails a Thievery check during the skill challenge to open the pain vault. On a successful Arcana check, the failure in the challenge is still accrued, but the succeeding character negates the blast attack.
- ✦ The lock has AC 20, Reflex 20, Fortitude 25, and hp 400. If it is destroyed, the trap is disabled.

Tactics

Simple, versatile, and effective, the pain vault is a great way to keep intruders away from valuables and sensitive areas. Creatures create or modify a pain vault with triggers that warn nearby monsters or guards when someone fails the first attempt in a skill challenge, which increases the danger at the most inopportune time.

Sample Encounter

Controllers and soldiers typically guard a pain vault because their control over movement makes the trap's debilitating blast hard to avoid.

Level 21 Encounter (XP 17,600)

- 1 death priest hierophant (level 21 elite controller; Monster Manual, page 209)
- 1 pain vault trap (level 20 warder)
- 3 rot harbingers (level 20 soldier; Monster Manual, page 223)

Life Eater Haze Level 22 Obstacle
Hazard XP 4,150

With a violent hiss, billows of blue-tinged purple gas fill the room. Each gasp of the vile stuff drains your strength and saps your life essence.

Hazard: This strange gas steals the life from those within it.

Perception

- ✦ It takes no check to see the gas.

Additional Skill: Arcana

- ✦ DC 24: The character recognizes the life-draining traits of the haze.

Trigger

When a living creature starts its turn in the gas, the gas makes the following attack.

Attack ✦ Necrotic, Poison

Opportunity Action Area the entire room
Target: Each living creature that starts its turn in the gas
Attack: +23 vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1d10 + 6 poison damage, and ongoing 10 necrotic damage (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The ongoing damage increases to 15 necrotic. Second Failed Saving Throw: The target loses a healing surge.

Countermeasures

- ✦ Making a close or an area attack that has the radiant keyword nullifies the haze in the affected squares until the end of the attacker's next turn (or, in the case of a zone, until the zone ends). Those who start their turns in nullified areas are not attacked.

Tactics

Undead use these hazards to obscure places of power and treasure troves because of the obstacle's ability to deal damage to the living. A lich might hide its phylactery in a large field of these mists.

NICOLE ASHLEY CARDIFF

Sample Encounter

Undead lurk within these strange purple mists.

Level 22 Encounter (XP 22,650)

- 4 abyssal ghoul myrmidons (level 23 minion; Monster Manual, page 119)
- 1 giant mummy (level 21 brute; Monster Manual, page 193)
- 1 life eater haze trap (level 22 obstacle)
- 2 voidsoul specters (level 23 lurker; Monster Manual, page 244)

Far Realm Star Trap Level 26 Elite Blaster
Trap XP 18,000

Light bends strangely in the room due to dimensional distortion. Motes that resemble starlight bob up and down in six places throughout the area.

Trap: When a creature enters a square that has a mote of starlight, that light attaches itself to the creature and begins to burn. Each round, another mote is drawn to the afflicted creature; when all six motes are on the creature, the motes explode.

Perception

- ✦ No Perception check is needed to notice the motes, unless they are hidden.

Additional Skill: Arcana

- ✦ DC 26: The character identifies the nature of the starlight motes, and realizes that if all six latch on to the same creature, they'll explode.

Trigger

When a creature enters a square with a mote in it or starts its turn there, the mote makes the following attack. If the attack is successful, the starlight mote latches on. At the start of a creature's turn, if it has at least one mote upon it, the nearest mote moves to enter the creature's space and makes the same attack, attempting to latch on to that creature.

Attack ✦ Radiant

Opportunity Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Attack: +31 vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d8 + 9 radiant damage, and the mote latches on to the target. While a mote is latched on to a creature, that creature is dazed, and at the start of its turn it takes 1d8 + 9 radiant damage. The mote is removed when it is destroyed (see Countermeasures) or when the target or a creature adjacent to the target succeeds on a DC 20 Athletics check to pull the mote off the target. A mote that is pulled off occupies the target's square, but for every 5 points by which the check result exceeds 20, the creature removing the mote can push the mote 1 square.

Secondary Trigger

When all six star motes latch on to the same creature, they make the following attack.
Opportunity Action Close blast 5
Target: Each creature in blast
Attack: +31 vs. Reflex
Hit: 4d8 + 10 radiant damage, and the target is knocked prone.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: All the motes are destroyed.

Countermeasures

- ✦ The starlight motes are bound to a particular location, and while that location can be somewhat large, the motes do not pass its boundaries. If a creature with attached motes leaves the area, the motes unlatch at the boundary.
- ✦ A DC 31 Arcana check made as a standard action by a creature sharing the same space with a mote or adjacent to one can calm it for a short time. With a success, the mote unlatches from a creature (if it is attached) and does not move or attack until the end of the next turn of the creature that succeeded on the check.
- ✦ Each mote has AC 33, Reflex 33, Fortitude 30, hp 75, and immune radiant. While attached to a creature, a mote gains a +5 bonus to AC and Reflex.

Tactics

Defeating a Far Realm star trap forces the PCs to split up, take damage, and keep the starlight motes apart. Evil creatures place this trap in areas guarded by lurkers and artillery creatures, where splitting up enemies is optimal.

Sample Encounter

These traps work best with controllers and soldiers that can force movement into the starlight motes, or limit the range of movements and actions, making the motes more dangerous. Since they are things of the Far Realm, they commonly are encountered with creatures from beyond the boundaries of the known universe.

Level 28 Encounter (XP 73,000)

- 1 Far Realm star trap (level 26 elite blaster)
- 1 gibbering orb (level 27 solo controller; Monster Manual, page 127)

Maddening Mural Level 29 Warder
Trap XP 15,000

A seemingly normal landscape is carved into the wall, but the more you look at it, the more you spot strange details. Images of vegetation hide eyes, mouths, and claws, and the shapes themselves start to twist into horrid monstrosities that reach out from the mural, lashing at your sanity.

Trap: This strange painting threatens the sanity of those who wander too close.

Perception

- ✦ No check is needed to notice the painting.
- ✦ DC 19: A character more than 10 squares away sees that the images in the painting twist and writhe. Something is definitely strange about the painting.

Additional Skill: Arcana

- ✦ DC 33: The character identifies the painting as a maddening mural and knows the risks of getting too close to it.

Trigger

The trap is triggered when an enemy ends its turn within 10 squares of the painting. The trap's psychic attack then lashes out at the creature in an attempt to snare and devour its sanity.

Attack ✦ Psychic

Opportunity Action Ranged 10
Target: The creature that triggered the trap

Attack: +32 vs. Will
Hit: 2d8 + 10 psychic damage, and the target's sanity is entrapped within the painting. While the target's sanity is entrapped, the target is dazed and slowed and can spend actions in only the following three ways:
Stumble Away (Move Action): The entrapped creature cannot run.
Fight the Painting (Standard Action): The entrapped creature can make any at-will attack against the painting. The attack deals damage to the painting's physical statistics (see Countermeasures).
Free Itself (Standard Action): A DC 19 Intelligence, Wisdom, or Charisma check frees the creature from the entrapment. When a creature frees itself from the prison, it is still dazed until the start of its next turn.

Countermeasures

- An entrapped character who is trained in Arcana or Thievery can use a standard action to attempt to disable the painting. A DC 28 success with Arcana or Thievery gains 1 success on a complexity 1 skill challenge (4 successes before 3 failures). After 4 successes, the painting is disabled. After 3 failures, each entrapped character takes 3d8 +10 psychic damage, and the skill challenge must be started again.
- The painting can be attacked. It has AC 20, Reflex 20, Fortitude 30, and hp 300.

Tactics

Frequently used by the insane or depraved, these paintings are typically placed in grand audience halls or despicable temples. Since it attacks only the enemies of its maker, the painting allows skirmishers and soldiers to position themselves with debilitating effect, and brutes to strike with impunity.

Sample Encounter

Because this trap is ideal for controlling large areas of the battlefield, it works well with groups that lack a controller. Its strange and disturbing nature lends itself well to the lairs of depraved cults, undead tyrants, devils, and Far Realm monstrosities.

Level 30 Encounter (XP 96,000)

- 1 atropal (level 28 elite brute; Monster Manual, page 11)
- 1 maddening mural trap (level 29 warder)
- 5 sorrowsworn reapers (level 27 soldier; Monster Manual, page 242)

PULLING IT ALL TOGETHER

A well-crafted combat encounter combines disparate elements—monsters, terrain, traps and hazards, skill checks and challenges, interesting objectives, and atmospheric setting—to create an exciting tactical challenge for the players and their characters. An encounter that features lots of movement, plenty of tough decisions, and abundant opportunities to use clever tactics is a dynamic and entertaining scene in the ongoing story of your game. The final section of this chapter presents a single encounter built using some of the new elements introduced in the preceding pages.

The Portal Ritual

Encounter Level 14 (5,400 XP)

3 bearded devils (B)
2 chain devils (C)
4 loathsome chanters (L)
Crushing walls room trap
Legion devil hellguards

Setup

Devils are performing a ritual that will create a yawning portal to the depths of the Nine Hells. They have chosen to perform this ritual in a chamber in the middle of a bustling city in the world. The characters' objective is to interrupt the ritual before the devils complete it. See the Tactics section for more information about what these devils do during the encounter.

When the characters open the door, read:
A low sound like a religious chant drones in your ears as you open the door. A hideous, squat creature draped in a mockery of vestments and emblazoned with the symbol of Asmodeus stands near a smoking brazier. Its open mouth is clearly one source of the chanting you hear. A horrible devil with a beard made of twisting snakes clutches a glaive and snarls at you.

Religion Check
DC 16 The creature you see chanting is likely one of four. You must destroy all four to interrupt the ritual.

Perception Check
DC 16 You hear three other voices chanting—one coming from each passageway leading out of this room.
DC 21 The smoke rising from the brazier is dark gray, but it glows with its own inner fire. It drifts in a coherent cloud, though no breeze stirs the air in the room.

3 Bearded Devils (B) Level 13 Soldier
Medium immortal humanoid (devil) XP 800 each

Initiative +10 Senses Perception +14; darkvision
Beard Tendrils aura 1; enemies that begin their turns adjacent to the bearded devil take 5 damage.
HP 129; Bloodied 64; see also battle frenzy
AC 29; Fortitude 25, Reflex 22, Will 23
Resist 20 fire
Speed 6

⊕ Glaive (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; +18 vs. AC; 2d4 + 5 damage, and the target is marked until the end of the bearded devil's next turn and takes ongoing 5 damage (save ends).

⊕ Claw (standard; at-will)
+18 vs. AC; 1d6 + 5 damage.

Battle Frenzy
While the bearded devil is bloodied, it gains a +2 bonus to attack rolls and deals an extra 5 damage with its melee attacks.

Devilish Teamwork
Allies adjacent to the bearded devil gain a +2 power bonus to AC.

Alignment Evil Languages Supernal
Skills Intimidate +11
Str 20 (+11) Dex 15 (+8) Wis 16 (+9)
Con 17 (+9) Int 10 (+6) Cha 11 (+6)
Equipment glaive

2 Chain Devils (Kyton) (C) Level 11 Skirmisher
Medium immortal humanoid (devil) XP 600 each

Initiative +14 Senses Perception +7; darkvision
HP 116; Bloodied 58
AC 25; Fortitude 22, Reflex 24, Will 19
Resist 20 fire
Speed 7; see also dance of battle

⊕ Spiked Chain (standard; at-will)
Reach 2; +16 vs. AC; 2d4 + 7 damage.

⊕ Double Attack (standard; at-will)
The chain devil makes two spiked chain attacks.

⊕ Chains of Vengeance (free, when first bloodied; encounter)
The chain devil makes two spiked chain attacks.

⊕ Hellish Chains (standard; at-will)
+14 vs. Reflex; the target is wrapped in chains and restrained (save ends). The chain devil can use its chains to restrain only one creature at a time.

Dance of Battle (minor; at-will)
The chain devil shifts 1 square.

Dance of Defiance (immediate interrupt, when a melee attack is made against the chain devil; recharges after the chain devil uses chains of vengeance)
The chain devil shifts 1 square.

Alignment Evil Languages Supernal
Skills Intimidate +11
Str 19 (+9) Dex 24 (+12) Wis 15 (+7)
Con 20 (+10) Int 14 (+7) Cha 13 (+6)

4 Loathsome Chanters (L) Level 11 Minion
Medium immortal humanoid (devil) XP 150 each

Initiative +6 Senses Perception +6; darkvision
HP 1; a missed attack never damages a minion.
AC 27; Fortitude 23, Reflex 22, Will 22
Resist 10 fire, 10 poison
Speed 6, teleport 3

⊕ Claw (standard; at-will)
+16 vs. AC; 6 damage.

Death's Rebuke (when reduced to 0 hit points) ✦ Psychic
Close burst 2; targets enemies; +14 vs. Will; 6 psychic damage.

Alignment Evil Languages Supernal
Str 14 (+7) Dex 12 (+6) Wis 12 (+6)
Con 14 (+7) Int 10 (+5) Cha 12 (+6)

Legion Devil Hellguards Level 11 Minion
Medium immortal humanoid (devil) XP 150 each

Initiative +6 Senses Perception +6; darkvision
HP 1; a missed attack never damages a minion.
AC 27; Fortitude 23, Reflex 22, Will 22; see also squad defense
Resist 10 fire
Speed 6, teleport 3

⊕ Longsword (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+16 vs. AC; 6 damage.

Squad Defense
The legion devil hellguard gains a +2 bonus to its defenses when adjacent to at least one other legion devil.

Alignment Evil Languages Supernal
Str 14 (+7) Dex 12 (+6) Wis 12 (+6)
Con 14 (+7) Int 10 (+5) Cha 12 (+6)
Equipment plate armor, heavy shield, longsword

Tactics

The bearded, chain, and legion devils interpose themselves between the PCs and the loathsome chanters, using all their powers to prevent the ritual from being disrupted.

The loathsome chanters (minion devils whose sole purpose is to chant the words of the ritual) must use a total of sixteen standard actions over the course of the encounter to complete the ritual. For every four actions they complete, four legion devil hellguards arrive in the large entry room to help fight off the player characters. If the chanters complete the ritual, the portal is established and the characters must then deal with the consequences.

Features of the Area

Illumination: Each brazier gives off bright light in a radius of 10 squares, which is sufficient to illuminate the entire area as long as the loathsome chanters remain alive.

Braziers: The four braziers the chanters are using in the ritual produce infernal fumes (page 60). When the encounter begins, each brazier is surrounded by a cloud of infernal fumes in a burst 1. Squares filled with infernal fumes are lightly obscured. The fumes can move up to 4 squares each round. A creature that ends its turn in a square of infernal fumes takes 5 fire and poison damage per tier and is dazed until the end of its next turn.

The loathsome chanters are not affected by the damage caused by the fumes, but they are dazed as long as the fumes remain in place around the braziers. However, as soon as more creatures enter the room, the fumes begin to move. Each cloud remains a burst 1 (3 squares by 3 squares) as it drifts through the area. The clouds stay within the confines of their separate rooms.

A character adjacent to a brazier can use it as a weapon, using an Athletics check to gain access to its terrain power. (The chanters can't be damaged by a tipped-over brazier, but the other devils can be.)

Infernal Brazier — Single-Use Terrain

These heavy brass braziers smoke with noxious fumes. What's burning in there, anyway?

Standard Action
Requirement: You must be adjacent to the brazier.
Check: Athletics check (DC 23) to push over the brazier.
Success: The brazier spills its contents.
Target: Each creature in a close blast 3 from the brazier
Attack: +16 vs. Reflex
Hit: Ongoing 10 fire and poison damage (save ends).

When a loathsome chanter is killed, its brazier is extinguished and the cloud of infernal fumes associated with that brazier dissipates.

Crushing Walls Room Trap: See page 68 for details of this trap. When the loathsome chanter in the small square room is killed, the trap is activated: Iron doors slam down over all three exits from the room, and the ceiling begins to descend. The room is 4 squares high, and the ceiling moves 1 square per round.

A Long Fight

With a few tweaks, you can turn this encounter into a long encounter with multiple waves of enemies, using some of the suggestions from the "Long Fights" sidebar on page 55.

Instead of legion devil hellguards joining the encounter, add more bearded devils, chain devils, or other devils (the erinyes, gorechain devil, and misfortune devil from Monster Manual 2 are all of an appropriate level) with every four actions the chanters complete. Create a second encounter and add half of it to the ongoing encounter for every four actions completed. For example, two gorechain devils and two erinyes together form a level 13 encounter (4,400 XP). With every four actions the chanters complete, then, one of each kind of devil appears in the room.

When all four loathsome chanters are killed, the characters can all spend a healing surge and regain the use of one expended encounter power, as a sign of their gods' favor resting upon them.

Dynamic Encounters

In addition to trying to make every encounter have some tidbit of story behind it, I'm also learning how to create more dynamic encounters. This is something I've observed from the way Chris Perkins runs his game. There's almost always some kind of twist, surprise, or dynamic element of the encounter. Sometimes it's subtle—after all, if you introduce a surprise every time, it makes each surprise less significant. It could be a trap that springs mid-battle, or a creature that calls another creature to its aid, or the terrain could turn out to be a dangerous slime that grasps at your feet.

Forcing the PCs to adapt to different situations and circumstances encourages them to think outside the box, which in the end, makes the payoff much greater. Providing subtleties that characters can use to their advantage gives a sense of satisfaction when a player picks up on that detail, and it encourages all the players to pay closer attention to what's going on. Maybe this isn't the best kind of encounter for the hack-and-slash player, but even the hack-and-slash player can enjoy the encounter when he takes advantage of a giant chasm into which he pushes an enemy. These days, I'm thinking about upcoming battles weeks in advance, brainstorming ideas when I'm driving my car or going to bed, trying to think of the next best way to bring originality to an encounter.

Skill Challenges

Skill challenges are a versatile tool in your DM's toolbox, well suited to modeling a wide variety of tasks the player characters might undertake in the course of an adventure. From disabling a complex trap to negotiating peace between warring nations, skill challenges take complex activities and structure them into a simple framework of skill checks. They should never replace the roleplaying, puzzling, and ingenuity that go into players' approach to those situations, but they place that effort into a defined rules structure so you can more easily adjudicate them and players can more easily understand the options available to them.

This chapter supplements the material in the Dungeon Master's Guide that introduces the rules for skill challenges. The start of the chapter repeats the fundamental rules for creating and running skill challenges, since they've been updated since the first printing of the DMG. From there, the chapter continues with lengthy advice for creating skill challenges that are engaging and exciting for every player at the table.

Here's the content of the chapter in a nutshell:

- Skill Challenge Basics: The basic rules for skill challenges, updated and all in one place, along with an example of a challenge in play and a discussion of ground rules for creating a compelling skill challenge.
- Skill Challenges in Depth: This section highlights five key elements of successful skill challenges: time frames, allowing a variety of options, preparing for failure, progressive challenges, and branching challenges.
- Skill Challenge Examples: A series of examples round out the chapter.

Some of the material in this chapter originally appeared in the virtual pages of Dungeon Magazine at www.dndinsider.com. "Ruling Skill Challenges" is a regular feature in Dungeon, highlighting advice and examples for DMs wanting to make better use of skill challenges in their games.

VINCENT DUTRAIT

The Dungeon Master's Guide lays out the basic rules for skill challenges. This page includes a quick-reference summary of those rules, since they have been updated and clarified.

The Skill Challenge Framework

To deal with a skill challenge, the player characters make skill checks to accumulate a number of successful skill uses before they rack up 3 failures.

The complexity of a skill challenge determines the number of successful checks the characters must accumulate before failing three checks. In combination with the challenge's level, it also determines how hard the challenge is for the characters to overcome and the XP award they receive for completing it.

SKILL CHALLENGE COMPLEXITY

| Complexity | Successes | Failures |
|---|---|---|
| 1 | 4 | 3 |
| 2 | 6 | 3 |
| 3 | 8 | 3 |
| 4 | 10 | 3 |
| 5 | 12 | 3 |

A skill challenge's level determines the DC of the skill checks involved. As a general rule, set the challenge's level to the same level as the player characters, and set most of the DCs in the challenge to moderate difficulty. If you use mostly easy DCs, you're probably creating a lower-level challenge, and if you use mostly hard DCs, you're creating a higher-level challenge.

SKILL CHECK DIFFICULTY CLASS BY LEVEL

| Level | Easy | Moderate | Hard |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1st-3rd | 5 | 10 | 15 |
| 4th-6th | 7 | 12 | 17 |
| 7th-9th | 8 | 14 | 19 |
| 10th-12th | 10 | 16 | 21 |
| 13th-15th | 11 | 18 | 23 |
| 16th-18th | 13 | 20 | 25 |
| 19th-21st | 14 | 22 | 27 |
| 22nd-24th | 16 | 24 | 29 |
| 25th-27th | 17 | 26 | 31 |
| 28th-30th | 19 | 28 | 33 |

Skills in a Challenge

When you're planning a skill challenge, think of ways that characters might use skills to achieve the goal of the challenge. Try to come up with as many as seven useful skills (either primary or secondary)—or about as many skills as there are characters in your party, plus two. Know what skills your player characters are trained in, and feature those skills heavily in the challenge. If you use skills the PCs aren't trained in, assign easy DCs. See "Allow a Variety of Options" on page 85 for more about selecting skills.

Primary skills contribute directly to the characters' count of successes in the challenge. They should be the skills most directly and obviously related to achieving the goal of the challenge. Secondary skills are useful in the challenge, but don't always count for successes. See "Primary and Secondary Skills" on page 85 for more information.

A good skill challenge also allows for other actions outside the framework of the skill system to contribute to the party's success. Spending money, using powers or action points, combat encounters, rituals, and the simple passage of time can contribute successes or do any of the things that secondary skill checks can accomplish.

Consequences

Whether characters succeed or fail at the skill challenge, the adventure must go on. Of course, there should be consequences for failing the challenge, but those consequences can't bring the adventure to a halt. Penalties for failure in a skill challenge might include the loss of healing surges or some other lingering penalty, making a later encounter more difficult. See "Prepare for Failure" on page 86 for more about the consequences of failure.

When characters succeed on a skill challenge, they receive experience points as though they had defeated a number of monsters of the challenge's level equal to the challenge's complexity. For example, if characters successfully complete a 7th-level challenge with a complexity of 1, they receive 300 XP (the award for a single 7th-level monster). If they complete a 7th-level challenge with a complexity of 5, they receive 1,500 XP (the award for five such monsters).

In addition to XP, characters might earn rewards specific to the challenge (which might simply boil down to the adventure continuing smoothly). They could also gain one or more treasure parcels, bonuses or advantages in future encounters, or information useful later in the campaign.

Example of Play

This example shows a DM running "Hunting the Mastermind" (page 90) for five PCs: Aelar (an elf ranger), Baredd (a human paladin), Chenna (a halfling bard), Donn (a human invoker), and Eglath (a goliath warden).

DM: You're left with the last misty remnants of the demonic creature's corpse and a handful of frightened witnesses. "What was that thing," someone asks, "and where did it come from?"

Donn: Can I make an Arcana check to see if I know anything about it?

DM: Sure.

Donn: I got a 14.

DM (marking down a success for the characters): OK, you know that the creature was some sort of demon, not native to the world. It was probably summoned here.

Aelar: Can I look around and see if I can tell which way it came?

DM: Sure, make a Perception check.

Aelar: With my keen elven eyes, I get a 17.

DM (marking a second success): Yes, you see a weird-looking tuft of fur that it left behind, but when you breathe on it, it dissolves into mist.

Chenna: I'd like to talk to the bystanders, and see if any of them know where it came from. How about a Diplomacy check—a 13.

DM (marking a third success): Well, everyone here knows about as much as you do about where it came from—they point to the door it came in through. But one woman was standing near the door when it came in—she was the first to raise the alarm—and she says that she heard it whispering as it approached. Something about hunting for "the five."

Baredd: The five? Like it was hunting for the five of us?

DM: Maybe. Make an Insight check.

Baredd: Ugh, only a 10.

DM (marking a fourth success): Good enough. It's looking like someone summoned this thing to hunt for you, and maybe you can follow its trail back to whoever summoned it.

Aelar: Well, then I'll keep searching and see if I can find that trail.

Eglath: I've got a good Perception, too. I'll assist.

DM: OK, another Perception check?

Aelar: Only a 13.

Eglath: You get +2 from me.

DM (marking a fifth success): OK, you head down the stairs in the direction the thing came from, and it looks like the trail's gone cold. But then Eglath points out a pair of feet sticking out from a dark corner—maybe another one of the demon's victims.

Chenna: Surely more people saw it come this way, then. Can I use Streetwise to find out?

DM: Sure.

Chenna: Oh no! A 1! Well, that gives me a 9.

DM (marking down the group's first failure): Well, you find some people to ask—unfortunately, they're a group of thieves in the middle of a crime, and they're not too happy about being interrupted. Why don't you all roll initiative?

A quick combat encounter with a group of halfling thieves interrupts the challenge briefly, but it continues along these lines when the combat is over, with all characters contributing their strengths to the completion of the challenge.

Ground Rules

A skill challenge is fundamentally a kind of encounter, much like a combat encounter. Follow these guidelines to create a skill challenge that's every bit as exciting, engaging, and dangerous to the characters as a combat encounter.

1. Like combat encounters, skill challenges work best when you and the players want one to happen.

Let's say you designed a combat encounter for your next adventure. The characters need to cross a bridge, and there's a big, hungry troll in their way. Time for a fight!

That is, unless the players decide to sneak around the troll or bribe it with a cask of fine ale. A good DM knows that sometimes it's best to take the party's crazy plan and run with it, especially if the players back up their ideas with a few rolls of 20 on Stealth or Diplomacy checks. A good DM thinks on his feet and rewards clever, interesting ideas.

The same logic applies to skill challenges. Is there a chance that a really good idea could completely trump your skill challenge? Don't fret! That's a good thing. D&D is a game about creativity and imagination. If there's only one specific, scripted path to success, you've lost what makes D&D fun. When you build a skill challenge, be prepared for it to head in a direction you didn't anticipate or for the party to fail utterly. That way, the game moves on regardless of what happens with the challenge.

2. As in a combat encounter, if standing in one place and doing the same thing over and over again is the best plan, you need to go back to the drawing board.

A skill challenge is a lot more than a fancy extended skill check. The best ones embrace improvisation and a broad range of skills and abilities. Let's say the characters are trapped in a dungeon when the exit collapses. Is digging their way out a skill challenge?

At first blush, the answer seems like yes. The party has to work as a group to clear the rubble. Athletics and Dungeoneering seem like the perfect skills to measure the PCs' success. Yet in play, such a skill challenge is boring. The characters who excel at those skills make their checks while everyone else hangs back, reluctant to make their own checks because they don't want to be the reason that the group fails the challenge. If your potential skill challenge has a similar bottleneck—in which only one skill does the heavy lifting for the challenge—you need to rethink the challenge.

3. As in a combat encounter, a variety of options makes a skill challenge compelling.

The DMG tells you to mix up artillery, soldiers, and the other monster roles in your combat encounters. A mix of beasties makes for a fun fight because it varies the challenge and lets you throw a broad array of abilities at the PCs. Every character has a chance to shine, and the party has to act as a team to answer each threat the monsters pose. Everyone has the same basic goal (blast the monsters), but each character achieves that goal in different ways.

This piece of advice is similar to the second rule, but there's an important distinction here. It isn't enough to pick a wide variety of skills. You need to create a broad range of subchallenges and obstacles within a challenge. A good skill challenge consists of a number of different incremental tasks that combine for a fun encounter. It isn't enough to pull different skills into the challenge. The players should feel as though their characters have a lot of options and important decisions. Otherwise, a skill challenge turns into a boring series of die rolls.

4. Unlike a combat encounter, a skill challenge can cover hours or even days of progress.

Think about how long it should take the party to resolve the skill challenge. If your answer can be measured in minutes, you might be looking at a simple skill check. When you design a skill challenge to cover a day or a week of effort, you open it up to a wide variety of individual hurdles within the challenge as a whole and a broader range of skills.

In the example on the previous page, the dialogue was compressed for the sake of brevity. When this skill challenge plays out in the context of the larger adventure it's a part of, each check making up the challenge might be separated from the others by hours of game time. Only after extended effort over a period of time—interspersed with other activities—do the characters succeed at what they set out to do; the rest of the action in the game world doesn't grind to a halt until the challenge is over.

The time factor is easy to overlook in designing a skill challenge, and that's an error that can turn a compelling challenge into a rote series of die rolls. You know you've lost your group and messed up your design when the players are doing anything but playing the game. The best insurance against this problem lies in spreading a challenge out over multiple scenes, each allowing a different, general approach to the problem. By varying the environment and situation, you keep things fresh even when the group uses the same skills. There's a world of difference between the Diplomacy check against a drunken guard who mistakes the party's half-orc fighter for his best friend and the same check against the nosy shopkeeper who tries to shake down the PCs for a bribe. If you back up each scene with good roleplay and descriptions, the simplest skill challenge becomes an interesting, varied experience.

Extending a skill challenge over a span of time has an important benefit: It lets you plausibly impose radical changes to the challenge without straining the players' suspension of disbelief. For instance, it's ludicrous for the party to run into a long chain of NPCs, each requiring a different skill check to handle, during a 15-minute visit to the local pub. However, if the characters meet those NPCs during an entire day of scouring a city for information, the game makes a lot more sense.

Here are two rules that are related to rule 4. They arise when you embrace the idea of a skill challenge as working on a different time scale compared to a fight.

4a. Each skill check in a challenge should accomplish one of the following goals:

- Introduce a new option that the PCs can pursue, a path to success they didn't know existed.
- Change the situation, such as by sending the PCs to a new location, introducing a new NPC, or adding a complication.
- Grant the players a tangible consequence for the check's success or failure (as appropriate), one that influences their subsequent decisions.

If you think about it, the same situation applies in a battle. If the wizard fries the orc warriors with his fireball, the rogue sneaks over to the orc shaman and attacks him rather than leaping to help the fighter. During a combat encounter, the actions taken by each character and monster set the stage for the next person's turn. In a good combat encounter, the situation constantly changes. The same thing applies to skill challenges. The best challenges are those that you can adjust as you react to the players' decisions.

4b. The characters should always be the active party in a skill challenge.

This is a subtle point, but one that can spell the difference between success and failure. Placing the characters into the role of the aggressor means pushing your NPCs into a passive role as blockers, people who stand between the PCs and success and forcing the characters to serve as the catalysts for action. As with a lot of gaming advice, that sounds simple, but implementing it can be tough. It's best illustrated with an example.

The characters need to escape from a group of pursuers. It's easy to default to have the PCs making Endurance or Athletics checks to see if they can stay ahead of the chase, but that situation pushes them into a passive role. The guards are the active party: They chase the PCs, and the PCs make checks to avoid capture.

Instead, set up the challenge so that the PCs are the aggressors. They should make checks to foil the pursuit, such as by throwing obstacles in the guards' way, taking a path that discourages pursuit (climbing up a building and running across the rooftops), sparking a brawl between two gangs, or starting a fire that serves as a distraction.

In this example, you might allow PCs to make checks to outrun the guards, but that should be one option among many. Even then, it's best to flavor that option with a sense that the PCs are the ones creating obstacles that the guards can't overcome. An Athletics check doesn't mean the PC is simply running really fast. Instead, it represents a character dodging through a crowded street with ease while the guards struggle to push through.

Placing characters in the active role has an important effect on your design, your presentation, and the players' engagement. It forces the players to step up and make plans rather than sit back and react to your NPCs. It also compels you to create multiple paths and options. When the PCs are the passive group in a challenge, it's too easy to allow logic to dictate that one repeated skill check is the best way to plow through the challenge.

ALTERNATIVES TO SKILL CHALLENGES

If a skill challenge isn't the right tool for the job, you can use other mechanics to bring skills to bear in specific situations.

A group check can be an effective way to resolve a situation when everyone is making checks using the same skill. For example, if your party is sneaking up on some bandits, there's no skill challenge involved in their stealthy approach. All that matters is a single skill, Stealth, and the time frame of the situation is only a few minutes of movement. You could play this scene as a simple collection of individual skill checks, with a single poor roll ruining the party's chance of surprising the bandits. As an alternative, though, you can make it a group skill check: Everyone rolls, and if at least half the party beats the bandits' passive Perception score, the group achieves surprise.

A simple skill test, requiring some number of successful checks but with no penalty for failing 3 checks, can be a good way to model certain situations in the game. For example, traps are a more significant challenge if they require more than a single Thievery check to disable. You could decide that a trap requires 2, 3, or 4 successful checks to disable. To avoid keeping the rogue or warlock tied up for several rounds while the rest of the party fights the monsters, though, make sure that multiple characters can contribute to the effort to disable the trap. That can be as simple as declaring that hitting the trap with an attack counts as a successful check.

The following section highlights some key points about designing and running skill challenges, including a short example to illustrate each point.

Time Frame

Ground rule 4 says that skill challenges can take hours or days of game time. That's not always the case—some skill challenges take place in the middle of a combat encounter and on the same time scale (see "In-Combat Challenges," below). But a challenge that has depth and a variety of options works best if it's spread out over a longer period of time. In fact, a skill challenge can be a great way to boil down what for the characters are long or tedious days of exploration, investigation, or just slogging through the swamp into an encounter that plays fast at the table, carries real rewards for success and penalties for failure, and livens up your game session.

In-Combat Challenges

When a skill challenge occurs in a combat setting, it effectively replaces one or more monsters in the encounter. (In terms of XP, it's worth a number of monsters of its level equal to its complexity.) Don't create challenges of complexity 3 or higher that you intend to take place in the midst of combat—there won't be enough monsters to keep the characters busy, or the challenge will take up too much of the party's attention. Think of a simple challenge (complexity 1 or 2) as one type of objective you can use to add interest to a combat encounter, as described in Chapter 2. In fact, several of the sample objectives described on pages 40–41 could include skill challenge elements.

- Make Peace: The characters must use interaction skills to convince their opponents to stop fighting.
- Retrieve an Object: The characters must open a locked chest, disable a ward, or activate the power of the object with a simple skill challenge.
- Sneak In: You might structure this encounter as a skill challenge using Stealth, Bluff, and other skills, with combat encounters resulting from the characters' failed checks. If they fail the challenge, the alarm is raised.

In an in-combat skill challenge, each skill check needs an associated action type—standard, move, or minor. Using move or minor actions for skill checks can make it easier for the characters to fight and pursue the challenge at the same time.

Before using an in-combat skill challenge, make sure it wouldn't work better as just a single skill check. The danger of using a skill challenge is that it can tie up a single character for multiple rounds while everyone else is "having fun" in combat. Don't make the rogue spend the whole fight disabling traps in a skill challenge in which only Thievery is useful. Involve as much of the party as you can, or else make the activity a single skill check.

"Closing the Portal" on page 89 is a good example of an effective in-combat challenge.

Encounter Challenges

An audience with the duchess, a room full of traps, or a magically warded door are challenges that feel like encounters—they present a straightforward obstacle the characters must overcome, and they might even appear in a dungeon room just as a typical combat encounter does. These challenges are encounters in their own right, which probably means they're complexity 4 or 5. They must involve the whole party—otherwise some characters would have nothing to do for an entire encounter. See "Getting Everyone Involved" on page 86.

The time required in the game for the characters to complete an encounter challenge is up to you. A skill check in such a challenge might represent a standard action's worth of work, a minute of effort, or several minutes of focused activity.

"Opening the Ninth Ward" on page 90 is an example of an encounter challenge.

Structure Challenges

A skill challenge that takes place between other encounters gives structure to a part of the game that would otherwise be exploration time. A challenge of this sort is clearly an abstraction—it distills large amounts of unstructured activity down into a number of skill checks.

You might consider using skill challenges for these kinds of activity:

- Investigation: When the characters are trying to solve a mystery, boil down the clues into the results of skill checks. "Hunting the Mastermind" on page 90 is an example of this technique.
- Overland Travel: Use a skill challenge to represent the obstacles and hazards the characters face as they cross a desert or a swamp, navigate a river, or pilot a planar dromond through the Astral Sea. See "The Rushing River" on page 94 for an example.
- Gathering Information: As the characters range through town looking for rumors or question ancient spirits about the dangers that lie ahead, you can build a skill challenge in which the number of successes they achieve determines how much information they get. See "The Restless Dead" on page 93 for an example of this kind of skill challenge.

You can even use a structure challenge as the framework for a whole section of an adventure, or even the entire adventure. Rather than using a flowchart to determine the course of events in an event-based adventure (see the Dungeon Master's Guide, page 115), you can use a skill challenge in multiple stages, with the successes and failures the characters accrue determining when events occur and what happens. As with encounter challenges, the time frame of a structure challenge is up to you to determine. A check might represent anything from a few minutes to a day or a week of activity.

Allow a Variety of Options

Remember ground rule 3: Just as a combat encounter with a mix of monster roles is more interesting than a fight against five of the same monster, a variety of skills, a broad range of subchallenges and obstacles, and a series of different, incremental tasks can make a skill challenge much more interesting. Even more important, this mix of skills and obstacles helps each player feel that his or her character has a lot of options and the possibility of making important decisions.

As a starting point, build a long and diverse list of relevant skills for the challenge. First (as mentioned earlier), aim for a number of skills equal to the number of characters in the party plus two. If there are more PCs than useful skills, you're potentially leaving a few characters without any way to make a meaningful contribution outside of using aid another actions.

Athletics is a great skill for challenges because of its nature—it can have an effect on almost any form of physical activity—and because twelve of the eighteen classes in the game to date have it on their class skill lists. Nature and Perception seem like obvious choices for many challenges, but far fewer classes have ready access to them (only six of the eighteen). Aim for at least half of the relevant skills to come from the following selection that six or more classes feature on their class lists:

|---|---|
| Arcana | History |
| Athletics | Insight |
| Diplomacy | Intimidate |
| Dungeoneering | Nature |
| Endurance | Perception |
| Heal | Religion |

Here's a summary of the "rare" skills, those offered by only three to five classes:

|---|---|
| Acrobatics | Streetwise |
| Bluff | Thievery |
| Stealth | |

Of course, a skill isn't rare in your game if most of the characters in your party has it, and a common skill isn't going to help your party if no one took training in it. If every character in your group has a class from Player's Handbook 2, you might have a lot of PCs trained in Nature, but no one who can pull off a decent Streetwise check. Know what skills your player's characters are good at, and tailor your challenges to those skills.

One way to help ensure that everyone in a party has a way to get involved in a skill challenge is to make sure you choose skills that are common to characters of each of the four roles. The list below gives the skills that are common to most of the classes that share each role.

Controller: Arcana, Diplomacy, History, Insight
Defender: Athletics, Endurance, Heal, Intimidate
Leader: Arcana, Diplomacy, Heal, History
Striker: Acrobatics, Athletics, Endurance, Intimidate, Perception

Primary and Secondary Skills

Once you have a list of the skills you want to be relevant for the challenge, break them down into primary and secondary skills. Aim for two or three secondary skills, with the rest primary. Primary skills give the characters successes (and failures) toward the ultimate goal of the challenge. Secondary skills don't always directly contribute to the group's success, but they can have other important effects. For example, a successful check with a secondary skill can accomplish one of the following effects:

- Cancel out a failure with another skill.
- Give one or more characters a bonus to a check with a primary skill.
- Allow a character to reroll another skill check.
- Open up the use of another skill in the challenge.
- Increase the maximum number of successes that a primary skill can contribute to the party's total.

Group Checks

One way to make sure every character is involved in a skill challenge is to require group checks. In a group check, everyone makes a specified skill check, and the group scores a success if at least a certain number of characters beats the set DC. For example, you might call for a group Endurance check, with the group succeeding if at least half the characters succeed, figuring that those who succeed on their checks can help out those who fail. Or you might call for a group Perception check, but if even just one character succeeds, the group gets a success because of the one sharp-eared member.

"Traveling through Gorgimrith" on page 92 and "Moving through Suderham" on page 98 are examples of how to use group checks in the context of a skill challenge.

Allow Options Besides Skills

Give some thought to things the characters might do aside from using skills—and be ready when you run the skill challenge to account for the things players try that you could never have anticipated. Characters can use powers and sometimes rituals in the midst of a skill challenge, and plenty of other tactics (such as bribery and combat) might alter the circumstances of a skill challenge, sometimes dramatically.

A good rule of thumb is to treat these other options as if they were secondary skills in the challenge. You might let a character negate a failed Diplomacy check by greasing an NPC's palm. Using an encounter power that's not directly relevant to the challenge might give the character a bonus to a subsequent skill check. You might allow a character to spend an action point to reroll a failed skill check.

Some categories of actions, though, are significant enough to earn an automatic success in the challenge. A character who performs a relevant ritual or uses a daily power deserves to notch at least 1 success toward the party's goal.

Here are some options you might want to account for in designing a skill challenge.

- Spending money (at least one-tenth the purchase price of a magic item of the character's level).
- Dealing damage to a creature or object.
- Voluntarily taking damage (in a combat situation) or sacrificing a healing surge.

Getting Everyone Involved

It can be tempting for some players to let the rest of the party handle the work of a skill challenge. In fact, at times it doesn't make sense, statistically speaking, for a character to even attempt a check, because the character's chance of success is so small and failure has such a negative consequence for the whole group.

If you include a wide variety of skills—and more specifically, select skills that you know the characters in your party are good at—this shouldn't be a huge problem. Just as in a combat encounter, everyone in the group should have a meaningful way to contribute to the group's success in the challenge, even if it's just making the same skill check a few times in a row.

Maximum Number of Successes: Even if you make sure that every character can contribute in a skill challenge, some players will resist taking part unless they have to contribute in order for the group to succeed. If the wizard can move the group through the challenge with a series of Arcana checks, there's no need for anyone else to take part. You can force the rest of the group to participate by limiting the number of successes that any particular skill can contribute. A good maximum is equal to the complexity of the challenge. Once the wizard has achieved 3 successes with Arcana, she has done all she can do, and it's time for someone else to step up to the plate.

Aid Another: You don't want the fighter with a +0 Intelligence modifier and no training in Arcana to feel as though his best option in a skill challenge is aiding the wizard's Arcana check. If a skill the fighter is trained in is relevant to the challenge and the wizard's use of Arcana is limited to a maximum number of successes, the fighter almost certainly has better things to do.

If you think that the situation justifies doing so, you can limit the amount of aid characters can receive from their allies in the midst of a challenge. For instance, it could be that there's only so much assistance that a character making a Diplomacy check can receive—perhaps the person the group is talking to shouts, "Enough of this chatter! Let me speak to just one of you." Also, a skill challenge might require the group to split up so that characters at different locations can't aid each other. Allow reasonable use of the aid another action in skill challenges, but rein it in if the characters start to abuse the privilege.

Prepare for Failure

The outcome of a skill challenge should always keep the game moving. It should be possible for the characters to fail the challenge, but the adventure must go on regardless—the characters just have to deal with the consequences of the failed challenge in addition to the other threats the adventure poses. Make sure you prepare for the possibility of failure as you're designing a skill challenge. Don't set up a challenge in which success means the characters unlock the door and failure means the door stays locked. Instead, if the characters fail, they unlock the door just as the guards come into view.

In other words, make sure that failure still leaves the characters with something to do. If the characters must get past the ninth ward before they can move onto the next part of the adventure, then the challenge should assume that they do get past the ward. If you're creating a skill challenge to move the PCs through this part of your story, the point of the challenge should be to determine how quickly they get past the ward, or whether they alert the monsters on the other side of the ward, or whether they get through it with all their healing surges intact. In short, the skill challenge doesn't really measure whether they succeed or fail; it measures how well they succeed.

Also, be sure to distinguish between what the characters find desirable and what the players enjoy. The characters probably don't like being attacked by drow assassins in the middle of the night, but the players will probably have fun playing out the encounter. Failing a skill challenge can create plenty of problems for the PCs, but the best kinds of problems are the ones that lead to additional fun encounters.

Consider these options as consequences for failure in a skill challenge:

- Increase the difficulty of the characters' next encounter, or throw an encounter at them that's a clear result of the failure.
- Assess the characters one or two healing surges each.
- Impose a lingering effect, such as a disease or a curse that works like one, that hinders the characters for some time.
- Impose story-related consequences: The characters are too late to save the captives, they lose the duke's favor, or they fail to gain some key information to help them in the adventure.
- Require the characters to attempt the skill challenge again.

Stages of Failure

An effective way to make a skill challenge lively is to provide immediate consequences for each failed check in the challenge—such as a brief combat encounter, or more opponents appearing in the midst of an ongoing combat. Each time the characters fail, the consequences become gradually worse, climaxing in the termination of the skill challenge after 3 failures. See "Hunting the Mastermind" on page 90 for an example of this technique.

Aside from combat encounters or combatants, here are some penalties you can assess in response to failed checks in a challenge:

- The character who failed the check loses a healing surge or (in a combat context) takes damage.
- The characters must spend time or money making up for the failure.
- For the rest of the challenge, no character can achieve a success using the same skill that was used for the failed check.
- If the challenge takes place in a combat situation, the character who failed the check is dazed or even stunned until the end of his or her next turn. Or, an opponent is angered and gains a +2 bonus to its next attack roll.

ZOLTAN BOROS & GABOR SZIKSZAI

- ✦ The next check using a specified skill takes a penalty. For example, if a character fails an Intimidate check in the midst of a complex negotiation, the next character who attempts a Diplomacy check takes a -2 penalty.

Stages of Success

One way to account for the possibility of failure is to construct a skill challenge in which each success moves the characters partway toward their goal—so that even if they fail, they still have some of what they need. This method works well, for example, in a challenge whose goal is to extract information from a hostile or wary NPC: With each success, the characters get some tidbits of information. The most valuable information comes last (when they achieve the target number of successes for the complexity of the challenge), but even 1 success followed by 3 failures gives the characters some tidbits they can use to keep the adventure moving. See "The Restless Dead" on page 93 for an example of this technique.

Perhaps the characters undertake a skill challenge to weaken a vampire lord before they finally face him in combat. Each success (or every 3 successes) removes some protective ward or special defense the vampire lord possesses, so even if the characters fail the challenge—and are thrust into combat with the vampire—they've still weakened him a little, and the fight is measurably easier than if they had achieved no successes at all.

Progressive Challenges

Like a combat encounter, a skill challenge is much more interesting if it changes and evolves as the characters progress through it. A good way to think about the party's progress through the challenge is to break it into three sections. For a skill challenge with a complexity of 5 (12 successes), each stage can last for 4 successes. For a challenge with a complexity of 1 (4 successes), the middle stage might start after they achieve their first success and last until they get their third—or you might break the challenge into just two stages.

The three stages of a skill challenge are not that different from the parts of a story (see page 8), except that the denouement comes after the skill challenge is complete. The first stage, the introduction, sets up the skill challenge, makes it clear what the goal is, and lays the groundwork for the first few skills or options for the characters. Then comes the rising action, when the challenge becomes more complex and urgent. Then in the climax, the characters successfully complete the challenge (or not) and the encounter is over.

Different skills might be useful in different stages of the challenge. For example, in the first stage of a challenge involving overland travel, the characters are hacking through the woods using skills such as Athletics, Endurance, and Nature. In the second stage, they join up with a caravan as guards, making skills such as Perception and Insight more important.

Try to make sure that the characters' actions and successes or failures in each stage of the challenge have consequences in the next stage. If the characters decide to rely heavily on Intimidate in their first meeting with an important NPC, that individual might throw more obstacles in their way in the later stages. Or if the characters fail two History checks in the middle of a challenge, they might not get a chance to talk to the sage who could have helped them in the final stage.

A progressive challenge is long and complex by its nature. See "The Rushing River" on page 94 for an example of one.

Triggers: Counting the number of successes the characters have achieved is one way to measure their progress through the stages of a challenge. In effect, this treats each stage as a miniature skill challenge requiring a smaller number of successes to complete, but with a shared tally of failures among the three stages. An alternative, though, is to use more specific triggers to move from one stage to the next.

Transparency and Skill Challenges

Sometimes, it makes sense to tell the players that they face a skill challenge. Other times, signaling that you're using the mechanic jars the players out of the moment, reminding them that they're playing a game rather than negotiating with a green dragon for their lives. A skill challenge brings a structure to the game. When you decide whether to tell the players they are in a skill challenge, what you're really choosing is whether to let them know they are in that structure.

Tell the players they are in a skill challenge when that structure helps them handle the situation and understand what is going on. If they're adrift, stuck in neutral in the face of a bewildering array of options, then a skill challenge is a good way to focus their attention. They see what skills they can use and understand that they need successes while avoiding failures. As the players make skill checks, they can begin to understand the situation in a way that informs how they play their characters, allowing them to immerse themselves in the action.

Keep the skill challenge on your side of the DM's screen, not telling the players, when they clearly understand their goal and know what their options are. In this case, the players can engage the situation as their characters. Their PCs know what to do. Reminding the players that they are in a skill challenge introduces a layer of artificiality to the situation that breaks the drama and shatters the scene's immersive nature.

—Mike Mearls

When a specific triggering event occurs, something happens in the context of the skill challenge to change the challenge in a noticeable and interesting way. Consider the following trigger ideas:

- The characters get a success (or a failure) with a particular skill.
- The characters reach a certain number of accumulated failures.
- The characters seek out a specific character to talk to, location to visit, or otherwise initiate their own change of scene.
- Each player has had a chance to take one turn in the skill challenge.
- Some amount of time has passed.

A changing situation in a skill challenge introduces new opportunities for the characters, giving them the chance to use new skills or presenting new ways they can apply their skills. For example, a character who makes a successful Insight check while talking to the duchess might notice her eyebrow raised in interest when matters of history come up, opening the possibility for PCs to use History checks to impress her.

Branching Challenges

Sometimes you might want to construct a skill challenge in which the characters can succeed in one of two ways, making use of different skills or otherwise taking different approaches to the resolution of the challenge. When the possible outcomes include a variety of possible successes, you can create a branching challenge.

For example, in a diplomatic talk, failure in the challenge might mean the breakdown of the talks, leading to violence (and a series of combat encounters). Success, however, can mean one of two possible outcomes—one favoring each party involved in the negotiations. Over the course of the skill challenge, individual characters might contribute toward the success of one side or the other, or the group might coordinate effectively to ensure victory for one side.

In a branching challenge, each possible successful outcome has a target number of successes depending on the challenge's complexity. Each time a character scores a success with a skill, that success counts toward one of the two possible outcomes. The target that is reached first determines the outcome of the challenge.

A branching challenge can be a great way to allow for some conflict within the party of player characters, without that conflict growing too disruptive. The characters can disagree on the approach to take or the goal to pursue while still working together to avoid failing the challenge entirely. However, if you expect the characters to split their efforts between two goals, it's best not to set the complexity of the challenge higher than 3. Otherwise, you're asking the characters to achieve too many successes, assuming that they get more or less the same number of successes toward each goal.

"Chasing the Bandits" on page 91 and "War by Other Means" on page 96 are examples of branching challenges.

Skill Challenge Examples

The rest of this chapter includes examples—mostly drawn from published adventures—that illustrate the finer techniques of skill challenge design.

Closing the Portal

—Shawn Merwin, from Dungeon Delve

In the midst of a combat encounter against a demonic solo monster, the PCs must close a portal to the Abyss to prevent an army of demons from entering the world. They can attempt to complete this in-combat skill challenge (see page 84) either before or after they defeat the monster. Closing it afterward is easier, because the monster is no longer present, but closing it beforehand reduces the creature's power.

Choose an appropriate creature for the encounter. The skill challenge as it appeared in the Dungeon Delve supplement used an abyssal spitter, similar to the mordant hydra in the Monster Manual. You might apply the Demogorgon cultist or Orcus blood cultist theme (see Chapter 4) to an adult dragon or a fen hydra, or use a group of demons of an appropriate level. Each monster in the encounter gains this additional power:

Portal Energy
As long as the portal remains open, the monster deals 2 extra damage on each of its attacks.

Level: 11 (XP 600).

Complexity: 1 (requires 4 successes before 3 failures).

Primary Skills: Arcana, History, Thievery.

Arcana (DC 16, standard action): The PC bends the magic of the portal to his or her will, slowly closing it off. A character must be within 5 squares of the portal to attempt this check.

History (DC 16, minor action): The character recognizes the arrangement of runes around the portal as something he or she has read about before. This recollection provides a clue about the energy powering the portal.

This skill can be used to gain 1 success in this challenge. No character can attempt this check more than once, and this check cannot be retried if the PCs fail to complete the skill challenge on their first try.

Thievery (DC 21, standard action): The character manages to weaken the magical energy feeding the portal. A character must be adjacent to the portal to attempt this check.

Success: If the PCs get 4 successes, the portal closes permanently. The monsters lose the benefit of their portal energy power.

Failure: If the characters accumulate 3 failures and any demon is still alive within 10 squares of the portal, a barlgura (MM 53) appears in the portal and attacks the PCs. The PCs must begin the skill challenge again from scratch; each additional failed challenge brings one more barlgura than the previous failed challenge (two for the second one, three for the third, and so forth).

Even if the PCs can't close the portal, as long as all the demons in the vicinity are defeated, the portal can't get any stronger, and thus can't disgorge its army. However, from time to time additional abyssal denizens might slip into the world through this portal.

Opening the Ninth Ward

To reach the villain's sanctuary or the repository of a mighty artifact deep in a dungeon, the characters must bypass a powerful magical ward that binds the doors.

This encounter challenge (see page 84) operates in 10-minute turns. Each character in the party can make one skill check each turn, and each character must also make one Endurance check every turn.

Level: Any.

Complexity: 4 (requires 10 successes before 3 failures).

Primary Skills: Arcana, Endurance, History, Perception.

Arcana (moderate DC by level, 10 minutes): A character can use Arcana to sense the presence of magic and identify the nature of the ward. Additional successes indicate a breaking of the ward through arcane means. This skill can be used to gain 4 successes in this challenge.

Endurance (moderate DC by level, no action, group check): As soon as the characters begin investigating the ward, it starts to give off necrotic energy. Each 10 minutes, the characters must make a group Endurance check to measure how well they weather the life-draining energy. If at least half the group succeeds, they earn 1 success.

History (moderate DC by level, 10 minutes): A character can use History to recall a mention of the ward in an ancient text, indicating a useful step to take in bypassing the ward. Since the ward has a certain notoriety, this skill can be used to gain 4 successes in this challenge.

Perception (moderate DC by level, 10 minutes): A character using Perception notices very fine lines traced in the doorway and hears the faintest of vibrations when hands are moved over the door in a certain way. This skill can be used to gain 4 successes in this challenge.

Secondary Skills: Religion, Dungeoneering, Thievery, special.

Religion (moderate DC by level, 10 minutes): A character's knowledge of religious texts that mention the ward in passing can give one character a +2 bonus to the next Arcana or History check that character makes.

Dungeoneering (hard DC by level, 10 minutes): The character has heard of similar wards, and can either give one character a +2 bonus to the next Perception check that character makes, or change one character's failed Endurance check (as part of the group check) into a success.

Thievery (moderate DC by level, 10 minutes): The character's skill at fine manipulation helps a character with Arcana to undo the ward, giving a +2 bonus to the next Arcana check.

Special: Performing the Knock ritual gives the characters 1 automatic success. The ritual can be used only once for this purpose.

Success: If the characters achieve 10 successes, the ward is opened without harm and they can move into the next room of the dungeon.

Failure: If the characters get 3 failures, the ward erupts in necrotic energy that drains two healing surges from each character. The characters can still pass through, but creatures in the next room might be alerted or empowered by the sundering of the ward.

Hunting the Mastermind

—James Wyatt, adapted from the Eberron Campaign Guide

A demonic creature called forth by a mysterious ritual has attacked the characters, and now they need to find out where it came from. In this skill challenge, the characters make use of their deductive powers (Perception and Insight), their ability to navigate the streets and denizens of the city (Streetwise, Diplomacy, and Intimidate), and their knowledge of or research about the demon itself (Arcana). The characters must assemble what clues they have into a coherent picture of the threat that faces them as they make their way down to the lowest levels of the city to find the source of that threat.

Level: 1 (XP 500).

Complexity: 4 (requires 10 successes before 3 failures).

Primary Skills: Arcana, Diplomacy, Insight, Intimidate, Perception, Streetwise.

Arcana (DC 10): A character who makes a successful Arcana check identifies the creature as a demon that must have been summoned into the world. A second successful check reveals no lingering magical energy in the area of the demon's attack, implying that it was not summoned directly to that location. This skill can't grant any further successes until the characters have achieved 9 successes, but at that point it allows a character making a successful Arcana check to pinpoint the magical energy emanating from the villain's base. This skill can be used to gain a maximum of 3 successes in this challenge.

Diplomacy or Streetwise (DC 10): The character coaxes useful information from a witness at the scene or near the scene of the attack: either an indication of which way the demon came or a description of its haunting whisper as it moved through the city, which includes words pertinent to its purpose in attacking the characters.

After the characters have achieved 5 successes, they're close enough to the villain's base that they can learn more about his activities in the area. Witnesses in the area describe the villain's suspicious activity and physical appearance, and also mention the strange lights and sounds emanating from a townhome in the neighborhood.

Insight (DC 10): The character pieces together some of the information the group is learning. Characters can't attempt two Insight checks in a row; after a successful Insight check, the party must score a success with a different skill before anyone can attempt another Insight check. With a successful check, the character synthesizes information toward a more coherent picture of the threat they face: The demon made its way toward them from somewhere in a specific neighborhood, explicitly searching for them and apparently knowing where they were with some degree of accuracy.

Intimidate (DC 15): A character can use Intimidate as a substitute for Diplomacy to extract information from witnesses. Intimidate effectively substitutes for Diplomacy, although at a higher DC.

Perception (DC 15): The demon left some traces of its passing as it moved from the villain's base to the site of the attack. The character can use Perception to follow this trail. With a success, a character might find a wisp of fur that dissolves into mist when touched, a corpse tossed in a dark corner, or a witness describing the creature's passage. Such witnesses can then be the subjects of Diplomacy or Intimidate checks.

Success: If the characters earn 10 successes, they find their way to the villain's base. When they enter the tower, they start a combat encounter with the villain or his minions.

Failure: This skill challenge uses the principle of stages of failure (see page 87). Each time the characters fail a skill check, they have a brief combat encounter. The city can be a dangerous place, and asking the wrong questions or poking into dark corners can quickly get characters into trouble. Each time the characters fail a skill check as part of this challenge, they have a minor combat encounter. Build easy encounters worth between 300 and 400 XP—not even a full level 1 encounter. They'll be over quickly so characters can get back into the skill challenge.

If the characters fail their first skill checks, you can choose to wait until the characters have moved beyond the scene of the last encounter before presenting them with these complicating encounters.

If they fail three checks, you can let them continue until they achieve 10 successes, throwing combat encounters at them with each additional failure, or simply bring them to the villain's base right away. Either way, the villain's agents are on the lookout for their arrival, and the encounter at the tower is more challenging.

Chasing the Bandits

—Robert Donoghue and James Wyatt

The characters are chasing a small group of bandits across the countryside. In this branching challenge (see page 89), the characters have a choice of two paths to success. They can decide to move as quickly as possible, hoping to catch the bandits before they meet up with reinforcements. Or they can put a greater emphasis on stealth, hoping to get the drop on the bandits when they catch up to them. Each character can make one skill check for each day of the challenge, and the skill chosen determines which goal the success counts toward.

Although some of the skill checks in this challenge are individual efforts that seem to allow a particular character to gain an advantage that his or her companions don't enjoy, a certain amount of abstraction is necessary in how the challenge plays out. For instance, a PC who succeeds on an Endurance check to run fast doesn't actually outdistance his friends; the group still stays together, so that everyone is present when the challenge comes to a conclusion.

Level: Any.

Complexity: 2 (requires 6 successes of either sort before 3 failures).

Primary Skills: Athletics, Endurance, Nature, Stealth, Streetwise.

Athletics (moderate DC by level): The character pushes through obstacles with physical strength, leaping over gullies and climbing up cliffs in an attempt to catch the bandits as quickly as possible. A success with this skill counts toward the speed goal.

Endurance (moderate DC by level): The character concentrates on running as fast and long as possible. A success with this skill counts toward the speed goal.

Nature (moderate DC by level): The character uses knowledge of geography and the terrain of the region to choose the best course—either the quickest route to intercept the bandits, or one that provides good cover for the characters when they approach the bandits. A success with this skill counts toward the goal of the character's choice.

Stealth (moderate DC by level): The character opts for a slower but quieter approach, hiding in forested terrain so the bandits aren't aware they're being followed. A success with this skill counts toward the stealth goal.

Streetwise (moderate DC by level): As the party passes through farmsteads and villages, the character makes sure that no one runs ahead of them to warn the bandits. A success with this skill counts toward the stealth goal.

Success (Speed): The characters intercept the bandits before they meet up with reinforcements, so the resulting combat encounter is easier than it would otherwise be.

Success (Stealth): The characters get the jump on the bandits, gaining a surprise round in the combat encounter against them. However, the bandits have reinforcements, so the encounter is a little tougher.

Failure: The characters still catch up with the bandits, but the bandits have gained reinforcements. To make matters worse, they're alert to the characters' approach and set up an ambush, so the bandits get a surprise round in the encounter.

Traveling Through Gorgimrith

—Bruce Cordell, Chris Tulach, and Bill Slavicsek, from Kingdom of the Ghouls

In this challenge, the adventurers must travel through twisting tunnels inside a great mountain fortress for at least six hours to reach the other side. This is a structure challenge (see page 84) that boils a long underground journey down into six to eight group checks representing the party's ability to bypass and overcome obstacles that arise in their way. The challenge uses triggers (see page 88) to mark the changing environment as the group progresses, with each stage of the challenge calling for one group check.

Each hour of the journey, every character must make a skill check using a specific skill. If at least half the characters succeed on the check, the group earns 1 success toward their goal. Otherwise, they earn 1 failure. If they succeed on 6 checks in a row, they reach the far end of the tunnels in just 6 hours, but each failure adds an hour to the journey. At the end of the trip, they face a combat encounter.

Because much of the challenge involves avoiding the monsters that haunt these tunnels, each failed group check along the way results in a combat encounter (see "Stages of Failure" on page 87). Build encounters appropriate to the setting, aiming for relatively easy encounters 2 or 3 levels below the party. If the party fails an Endurance check (in hour 4 or hour 7), each character also loses a healing surge.

Level: 25 (XP 14,000).

Complexity: 2 (requires 6 successes before 3 failures).

Primary Skills: Athletics, Dungeoneering, Endurance, Perception, Religion, Stealth.

Hour 1, Dungeoneering (DC 26, group check): The characters find a safe path through the tunnels, realizing that the right direction lies in the tunnels that lead downward, away from the top of the mountain.

Hour 2, Stealth (DC 26, group check): The characters quietly work their way past a pack of monsters, remaining undetected.

Hour 3, Athletics (DC 17, group check): The characters easily climb over hazardous recesses in the tunnel and jump over black, foul-smelling eruptions to progress deeper into the mountain.

Hour 4, Endurance (DC 17, group check): The characters stave off the effects of the terrible smell, the hard travel over soft ground, the hot, humid air, and the lingering miasma that permeates the tunnels.

If the party fails this check, each character loses a healing surge.

Hour 5, Perception (DC 26, group check): The characters spot a roaming pack of monsters and avoid a battle.

Hour 6, Religion (DC 31, group check): The characters use their observations while traveling within the tunnels and their knowledge of Gorgimrith and undead to avoid a particularly dangerous area of unstable surfaces and necrotic cysts. You can replace this check with a different skill if the environment or the creatures that inhabit it suggest a better choice.

Hour 7, Endurance (DC 26, group check): The characters stave off the effects of the terrible smell, the hard travel over soft ground, the hot, humid air, and the lingering miasma that permeates the tunnels in their seventh hour of travel.

If the party fails this check, each character loses a healing surge.

Hour 8, Athletics (DC 26, group check): The characters easily climb over hazardous recesses in the tunnel and jump over black, foul-smelling eruptions to progress deeper into the mountain.

Success: If the characters earn 6 successes, they find their way to the final exit from the tunnels in good time and without further incident.

Failure: Each time the characters earn a failure, adjust the outcome of the hour's activities from that described above and run a combat encounter. After their third failure, you can either run a combat encounter immediately, or add monsters to the encounter the characters have when they emerge from the tunnels.

If the characters get 3 failures, the trip through the tunnels takes the characters longer than anticipated. They still reach the final exit, but each character loses a healing surge along the way.

The Restless Dead

–Richard Baker and Mike Mearls, from Thunderspire Labyrinth

This structure challenge (see page 84) involves gathering information from the spirits of a trio of adventurers who were slain years ago when they attempted to cleanse the demonic influence from an ancient stronghold. They managed to recover the four items needed to open the door to the inner sanctum, but they were then killed by the green dragon (called the Guardian) that serves as sentinel over the sanctuary.

The spirits can speak but are otherwise unable to affect the world. When the characters enter the area, the spirits manifest, greet the characters in Common, and ask what they seek in this place. Over the course of the challenge, the spirits attempt to determine the characters' intentions. If the characters can convince the spirits of their trustworthiness and that their cause is just, the spirits describe what the characters must do to reach the inner sanctum. Otherwise, the characters must stumble their way through the challenges in the subsequent encounters without any aid.

Level: 5 (XP 1,000).

Complexity: 5 (requires 12 successes before 3 failures), though the PCs gain some information even if they fail this challenge.

Primary Skills: Arcana, Athletics, Diplomacy, Dungeoneering.

Arcana or Dungeoneering (DC 12): The characters impress Mendara with their knowledge of mystic lore and dungeon environments.

Athletics (DC 12): As a cleric of Kord, Valdrog applauds feats of strength or athletic prowess. This skill can provide a maximum of 2 successes.

Diplomacy (DC 17): The PCs use the Diplomacy skill to convince the NPCs of their good intentions. However, the spirits believe that actions speak louder than words, so this is a hard check.

Secondary Skills: Bluff, Intimidate, Insight.

Bluff (DC 17): A character who has any ill intentions can use Bluff in place of Diplomacy to attempt to convince the spirits that his or her intentions are good.

Intimidate: The spirits cannot be intimidated, for they are beyond harm. Using this skill results in an automatic failure, and the PC who made the Intimidate check takes a -2 penalty to all other skill checks in this challenge.

Insight (DC 17): During the conversation, Mendara makes outrageous claims about the trio's exploits. If a character succeeds on this Insight check, that PC realizes she is lying. If the character questions Mendara and attempts to learn why she is lying, the PCs gain a success. Only 1 success can be gained in this way.

Conclusion: The PCs receive information based on the total number of successes achieved. Whether the PCs succeed or fail, the slain adventurers can finally rest in peace; they have attempted to help a group avenge their loss. Once the challenge ends, the NPCs say farewell (or they warn of impending death if the encounter went poorly) and fade from view.

Success: If the PCs attain 12 successes, the slain adventurers hail them as allies. The group provides all the information below.

Failure: If the PCs earn 3 failures, the spirits provide information based on the PCs' number of successes up to that point, as shown below (and see "Stages of Success" on page 88).

The following information is provided as read-aloud text that the spirits relay to the PCs after the skill challenge comes to a conclusion. Alternatively, you can dole out this information gradually over the course of the challenge, each time the characters reach a new threshold of successes.

0-1 Successes: This place is the Proving Grounds, a testing place for worshipers of the demon lord Baphomet. You must find four items: a knife, a mask, a bell, and a book. You must place each of these items on one of four circles of runes found in this complex. The items must be placed on the runes at the exact same time.

2-3 Successes: The knife, the mask, and the bell are held within chambers built to test Baphomet's worshipers. You can find these chambers to the north, west, and south of where we now stand, through these eastern double doors and then through another set of double doors that leads to the west.

The Slain Adventurers

Valdrog the Brute: Valdrog appears as a male human with a thick, black beard. His spectral chainmail is ripped apart because the Guardian killed him by tearing him in half. Valdrog was a cleric of Kord, and he speaks with a booming voice. He is rude, aggressive, and quick to challenge the PCs' bravery; he respects demonstrations of strength and wants to help a worthy group.

Sir Terris: This dwarf was a paladin of Pelor and served as the group's valiant defender. Terris wears plate armor and keeps his helm's faceplate closed. He was slain when the Guardian crushed his skull with a single bite. Sir Terris is wise and kind, though he is also judgmental. He asks many questions, seeking to trap the PCs in a contradiction or a lie. He is quick to make accusations and slow to trust. The PCs must prove their good intentions to win his support.

Mendara the Mystic: The group's wizard, Mendara is an elf who died by the dragon's breath. She wears green robes and carries a staff. Mendara is eager to recruit someone who has the intelligence and acumen to overcome the challenges that lie ahead. She lies to the PCs, hoping to expose their greed. She is haughty and talkative.

4-5 Successes: The fourth item, the book, is on an altar in a small shrine to the east.

6-7 Successes: To the east of the Proving Grounds is the inner sanctum. Its door opens only when the proper ceremony is completed. The items used for the ceremony disappear if you try to remove them from the Well of Demons, and upon completion of the ceremony, they return to their former locations.

8-9 Successes: Completing this ceremony summons the terrible Guardian and activates several traps in the area. The Guardian is a green dragon imprisoned here. It can swoop past its prey and attack. It emerges from a great pit in the center of the complex.

10-11 Successes: Each of the chambers in this complex has a magical trap designed to harass intruders. The central corridor is the fastest way to move around, but it also has its own trap: a crushing sphere of magical force that rolls along its length.

12 Successes: There is a treasure hidden beneath the altar in the chamber south of here.

The Rushing River

–Logan Bonner, from the Worldwide D&D Game Day adventure
Journey Through the Silver Caves

At the exit to the cave, you come to a stream that rushes over a small waterfall and joins up with a bigger river that stretches far into the distance ahead.

Near the stream is a raft. You see a few sloppy axe cuts. It looks like the orc you saw escaping made a hasty attempt to sabotage it as he ran out.

This skill challenge is a structure challenge (see page 84) that models the characters' attempt to navigate a twisting, bizarre river—a difficult task, especially for those who haven't made the trek before. The challenge uses stages of success (see page 88) to reflect the characters' progress along the course of the river, measured by the total number of successes they have accumulated so far. Some skills are useful in every stage, while others are useful only in the specific circumstances of certain stages of the journey.

YOU'RE SWIMMING? REALLY?

This challenge assumes the characters are using the raft provided in the cave. If they don't, every character needs to make a DC 15 Athletics group check at the start of the challenge. If at least half the characters succeed, the party gets 1 success. Otherwise, they get 1 failure. Give the characters a chance to get a watercraft after stage 1, such as a canoe sitting near the river they can steal. If they continue swimming, they make group checks to swim for each section; the DC is 20 during stage 2 and stage 5. They can't gain any more successes for swimming, but can gain failures.

The challenge assumes that the characters are following an orc who is escaping in a canoe, and that the orc damaged the raft the characters are using.

Level: 5 (XP 1,000).

Complexity: 5 (requires 12 successes before 3 failures).

Entire Challenge

These skills can be used at any point during the challenge, unless otherwise noted.

Primary Skills: Nature, Perception, Thievery.

Nature (DC 12): The character helps navigate the twisting, branching sections of the river. After the characters have a total of 7 successes, it's too late to use this skill.

Perception (DC 17): The character spots the orc's canoe up ahead, and is able to follow his course. This skill can be used to gain 1 success in each stage. An individual character can use Perception to contribute only 1 success to the entire challenge.

Thievery (DC 12): The character works to repair the damage the orc did to the raft. This skill can be used to gain 1 success in this challenge.

Secondary Skills: Endurance.

Endurance (DC 12): The character stays alert despite the rigors of the journey. This doesn't give any successes, but the character can reroll one failed skill check later in the challenge. A character can use this skill in this way only once in the challenge.

Stage 1: Wilderness

This is the first stage of the journey, right after the characters leave the cave.

Primary Skills: History, Nature.

History (DC 17): The character recalls a map of this section of the river, which helps the PCs choose a path among the twisting branches. If the group gains 2 successes with this skill, the characters remember that rapids lie ahead, and each character gains a +2 bonus to Acrobatics or Athletics checks to avoid falling off the raft at the start of stage 2.

Nature (DC 7): It's easier to navigate here, where the character can see the sky. Use this DC instead of the one in the "Entire Challenge" section.

Stage 2: Rapids

After 3 successes, the characters enter a channel where imposing stone cliffs rise up on all sides, then come upon a twisting, rocky patch of rapids. Read:

All around you, the water begins to churn, becoming white with foam. It comes out of nowhere: You couldn't even see the rapids until they were right upon you. As waves of rough water crash against the jagged rocks all around you, ephemeral voices fill the air, screaming in rage. It's as though the water itself wants to drag you to a watery grave.

When the characters enter this area, each makes an Acrobatics or Athletics check (DC 17, or DC 22 if the raft hasn't been repaired). A character who fails this check falls in the water. This check doesn't give any successes or failures, but sets up the skills for this part of the challenge.

Primary Skills: Acrobatics, Athletics, Endurance.

Acrobatics (DC 12): A character on the raft can make Acrobatics checks to keep the raft on course and stay balanced. This skill can be used to gain 2 successes in this challenge.

Athletics (DC 17): A character who has fallen into the water can swim to get back onto the raft or get through the rapids safely. Each character who has fallen in the water can gain up to 1 success in the challenge this way.

Endurance (DC 17): Any character can attempt this skill to weather the rapids, and each can gain up to 1 success doing so.

Secondary Skills: Diplomacy.

Diplomacy (DC 12): The PC speaks to the raging voices in the river, calming them. This gives no successes, but lowers the DCs for Athletics and Endurance checks by 5 for this stage of the challenge.

Stage 3: Respite

After 6 successes, the river returns to normal. The characters can use the skills noted above in "Entire Challenge" during this stage, but the respite is brief—as soon as they achieve 1 more success, they move on to the next stage of the challenge.

During this stage, the characters also find an old, wrecked boat at the end of the rapids. It might hold a treasure parcel, a combat encounter, or both.

Stage 4: The Guardian Ghosts

This stage occurs after the PCs have gained a total of 7 successes. Two guardian spirits, former arcanists of the empire of Nerath, stop the party just before the river enters a series of stone tunnels leading back underground. Read:

You stop in midstream, and it seems you've been transported to a different place. The air around you blurs and ripples, and at the bottom of the river you see the dead bodies of many travelers. In front of you, two ghostly humans in robes appear and address you. "We are guardians of this river. Present a token of passage, or prove you deserve to travel this waterway."

Roleplaying the Guardians

The river guardians are stoic and difficult to read. If they see a token of passage from Nerath, they allow the travelers to pass with no questions asked. Otherwise, they ask only that the characters convince them they aren't dangerous. They don't care if the travelers are altruistic or noble, only that they aren't going to cause trouble for the (now-defunct) empire. The guardians are unaware of Nerath's fall, and they don't accept evidence to the contrary.

Navigating is useless in the arcane realm the PCs currently occupy, so the Nature skill can't contribute to the group's success beyond this point.

Primary Skills: Arcana, Bluff, Diplomacy, Intimidate.

Arcana (DC 12): The character discusses magic with the guardians, showing a dedication to and respect for the arcane arts.

Bluff (DC 17): The character describes a noble purpose that the characters aren't actually pursuing.

Diplomacy (DC 12): The character offers evidence that the characters are noble and trustworthy.

Intimidate (DC 17): The guardians are not easily intimidated, and only characters who have obvious magical power that might be capable of banishing them can achieve a success with this skill.

Secondary Skills: History, Insight, Thievery.

History (DC 12): The character recalls that the fallen empire of Nerath sometimes used tokens of passage as authorization for travelers to pass along certain roads or waterways. A successful check allows a character to use Thievery as described below.

Insight (DC 12): The character realizes that the guardians are practitioners of arcane magic from the empire of Nerath. This gives no successes, but gives a +2 bonus to all further skill checks against the guardians.

Thievery (DC 17): Once a character has made a successful History check, the same or a different character can use Thievery to create a quick forgery of the token of passage the guardians ask for. A successful check lets the characters immediately move on to the next stage of the challenge if they choose, while failure gives them a -2 penalty to all further checks made in this segment.

Stage 5: Underground

When the characters have 10 successes, the river guardians allow them to pass into the stone tunnels near their destination. Read:

The river descends underground, and you soon reach a lake that splits off into seven paths. Nothing you've heard so far indicates which path is the correct one.

The characters can't use Nature to navigate here.

Primary Skills: Arcana, Dungeoneering, Perception, Religion.

Arcana (DC 12): By detecting the presence of residual magical energy, the character narrows the number of possible paths. This skill can be used to gain 1 success in this challenge.

Dungeoneering (DC 12): The character watches the currents and figures out which path is least likely to be a dead end.

Perception (DC 17): The character spots the orc's canoe heading down one of the passageways. This gives 2 successes (thereby ending the challenge).

Religion (DC 12): The character seeks guidance from a deity. If the character specifically called upon Avandra or Melora, the DC is reduced to 7, and succeeding on this check grants 2 successes instead of 1.

Ending the Encounter

After the skill challenge is over, the party travels into a long, curving (but placid) tunnel that deposits them in the expansive underground cavern in which their next encounter takes place.

Success: The characters successfully reach their destination.

Failure: The characters go off course, crash and are separated, or whatever makes sense based on the checks they failed at. Traveling on foot or on the wreckage of the raft, they get to the next encounter late and weakened. If the characters were speaking to the river guardians when they failed, they have to shield themselves from the guardians' arcane powers. Whenever they fail the challenge, each character loses a healing surge.

War by Other Means

—Robert Donoghue

The town of Parsain has long been contested ground between the Duchies of Hallber and Yranes, with each having a list of historical reasons for their claim. Until recently, the town had been under threat from nearby monsters, and neither was willing to press their claim and get entangled in local matters. However, after a group of heroes (perhaps the player characters) freed the town from the threat that loomed over it, both have taken an interest in reestablishing old claims. Each has sent a representative and a body of militia intent on making that happen, and tense negotiations have begun.

This skill challenge represents the player characters' efforts to oversee and perhaps influence the negotiations as they try to keep matters from devolving into violence. It works best if the characters have a strong interest in the fate of the town (perhaps because they were the ones who freed it from the monsters' yoke), but good reasons to support both sides of the conflict. In this branching challenge (see page 89), the characters can contribute their successes to either side of the negotiation, with the intent of either helping one side achieve its goals or finding a balanced and equitable resolution.

The negotiations stretch over a number of days. Each day, each player character can attempt one skill check as part of the challenge.

Hallber's Representative: Hallber is represented by Sir Anders Petrus, a soldier in the duke's service. He's a large, burly man with a great black beard, a booming voice, and a brash demeanor that makes it easy to overlook the fact that a cunning tactical mind lies behind those eyes. He views Parsain as a military holding, a place to secure a weak point on the duchy's border.

Before negotiations begin, or sometime during the first day of the talks, Anders approaches one or more of the characters who appear to be neutral or willing to favor Hallber and attempts to gain their support. The offer is this: Support Hallber throughout the negotiations, and if Hallber decisively wins the challenge (which means Hallber wins and Yranes gets fewer than 3 successes), the character will receive a reward—a magic weapon or implement of the character's level. If Anders is called out, he will of course deny that any such offer was made, and if the character acts against Hallber, the deal is off.

Yranes's Representative: Yranes is represented by Dame Venna Las, a half-elf wizard who has the practiced polish of a long-time diplomat and the well-concealed heart of a snake. Parsain is a commercial interest to her, and she has an eye on building some roads to and through the town.

Before negotiations begin, or sometime during the first day, Venna approaches one or more of the characters who seem to be neutral or willing to favor Yrane and attempts to gain their support. The offer is this: Support Yranes throughout the negotiations, and if Yranes decisively wins the challenge (which means Yranes wins and Hallber gets fewer than 3 successes), the character will receive a reward—a neck slot or arm slot magic item of the character's level. If Venna is called out, she will of course deny that any such offer was made, and if the character acts against Yranes, the deal is off.

Level: Any.

Complexity: 2 (requires 6 successes before 3 failures).

Primary Skills: Diplomacy, Dungeoneering, History, Intimidate, Stealth.

Diplomacy (moderate DC by level): A character can step in as an advocate for either side and argue on that side's behalf. A failed check suggests that the character didn't do very well at this task.

Alternatively, a character can use Diplomacy to try to keep negotiations on an even keel. If the character generates a success with this use of the skill, he or she can save it rather than applying it immediately to the skill challenge. At the end of a day of negotiations, the character can assign the success to whichever side has fewer successes. If the two sides are tied, the character might choose either side to receive the success, or choose not to apply the success at all.

Dungeoneering (moderate DC by level): One of Hallber's main arguments is that Parsain needs better defenses. The character can take the day to plan out defenses and make a case that Hallber's reinforcements are unnecessary, or use this study to underscore Hallber's arguments. A failed check means the character's disagreements with other experts leaves the issue muddied and tempers frayed.

History (moderate DC by level): The character makes a historical case for one side or the other. These arguments are well treaded, but a successful check brings some fresh detail to light. A failed check means the character's point does not hold up to examination and opens the door to a more devastating counterpoint. Each time this skill adds a success to one side or the other, the History DC for adding another success to that side increases by 5.

Intimidate (hard DC by level): Openly threatening the diplomats might not be the best approach, but there are more subtle ways to use this skill. The character whispers in the ears of the diplomats of one side, reminding them of the recent dangers facing this town and the likelihood that they'll return, perhaps making it seem a less desirable prize. A failed roll means the diplomats see through the character's actions.

Stealth (moderate DC by level): The character spends time eavesdropping on one side and shares that information with the other side. A failed check indicates that the character passed on misinformation.

Secondary Skills: Endurance, Nature, Religion.

Endurance (moderate DC by level): The stakes are high, and when matters are most heated, the negotiations stretch into the wee hours of the night. When a day's negotiations end with the two parties either tied in successes or with 2 failures accumulated, the characters must make a group Endurance check. If at least half the group succeeds, the characters' ability to stay in control of their faculties serves them well as fatigue shortens tempers and frays nerves, and the characters can negate 1 accrued failure. If less than half the party succeeds, someone has snapped, perhaps even one of the characters, and the side represented by most of the characters who failed their checks accrues another failure.

Nature (moderate DC by level): Haggling over discrepancies in their respective maps, both parties agree on the third day of negotiations to send out a surveying team to iron things out. If a character who is trained in Nature has not antagonized either side, the character is offered the opportunity to lead the expedition. If that character makes a successful Nature check, he or she can subtly influence the readings to favor one side or the other, granting that side a success. If the character does not choose a side, the side with fewer successes gains a success. On a failure, the mission reaches no consensus, and tensions run that much higher. The party can attempt only one Nature check in the course of the challenge.

Religion (moderate DC by level): On the second day of the negotiations, the town celebrates a holiday, and the townsfolk ask one of the characters who is trained in Religion to offer a few words at the ceremony. A successful Religion check can add 1 success to either side by couching subtle nods to that side's position in the address, or a speech on the virtues of understanding and fellowship can negate 1 accrued failure from either side. The party can attempt only one Religion check in the course of the challenge.

Success: If Hallber accumulates 4 successes, the negotiations end up favoring that duchy, and it lays claim upon the town. On the other hand, if Yranes accumulates 4 successes first, then the duchy of Yranes gains the town.

The winner gets ownership of the town, but the more successes the loser has, the more concessions it can demand. If Hallber has at least 3 successes, it earns the right to leave a garrison in town. If Yranes has at least 3 successes, it sets up warehouses and a mercantile post in town. Ultimately, the town will benefit most from the fairest arrangements.

If the arrangement is particularly equitable (which is to say the other side got its concession), the town thrives in the future, and the characters can expect to have a safe haven there. If the arrangement is imbalanced, then the winning duchy eventually absorbs the town completely, and the citizens will have no great reason to remember these events fondly.

Failure: If negotiations break down, war is the only option left on the table. If either side has fewer than 3 successes when the challenge ends, fighting breaks out immediately. Otherwise, the negotiators withdraw and the war proceeds more formally. In either case, the town of Parsain suffers as the battlefield for this conflict.

Moving Through Suderham

—Mike Mearls

Level: 9 (XP 2,000).
Complexity: Special.

This complex skill challenge stretches the definition of a skill challenge to an extreme, showing how you can use the basic framework of a skill challenge to structure an entire adventure. It's a structure challenge (page 84) that uses the choices of the characters as triggers (page 88) to move into different stages of the challenge. However, it turns some of the basic assumptions and rules of skill challenges on their head and incorporates a set of random events that respond to the failures of the characters as the challenge progresses.

The challenge represents the difficulty that characters face as they travel around Suderham, a city ruled by a band of foul slave traders known as the Slave Lords. The characters might need to enter the city to free someone from the Slave Lords' clutches, slay a particularly powerful villain, or otherwise take an active step to disrupt an evil plot. Use this skill challenge whenever the characters need to move through town.

There are four quarters in the city: the military quarter, the wealthy quarter, the thieves' quarter, and the official quarter. Regardless of where they are, the characters have four basic kinds of activity they can attempt: travel within their current quarter, travel to a different quarter, find directions, or gather information. In addition, if they find themselves chased by guards or facing conflict they would rather avoid, they can attempt to evade pursuit.

Whatever kind of activity the characters are attempting, each member of the party must make an effort to keep a low profile and contribute to the group's success. When the characters attempt one of these kinds of activity, or other some other activity defined as part of a random event, each character makes a check using one of the skills allowed by the activity. Different characters can use different skills. You can also allow a PC to improvise the use of a skill. Use DC 14, 19, or 24, depending on how clever and feasible the idea is.

In addition to making his or her own check, each character can aid another character's check. If at least half the characters succeed on their checks, the group is successful. A failed check adds 1 failure to the group's accumulated failures in the challenge, but the challenge does not end at 3 failures.

Travel in Their Current Quarter: The characters can move through a quarter with a group check using Athletics, Stealth, or Streetwise. Their current location determines the skill check DCs (see the Traveling Through Suderham table, below). Using this option takes 2d10 minutes. Success on this check means the characters arrive at their destination (assuming they know where they are going).

Travel to a Different Quarter: Moving between quarters is tricky, because the borders between quarters are heavily patrolled and long, wide avenues between them make sneaking or leaping from rooftop to rooftop difficult. Moving between quarters requires a group check using Diplomacy, Intimidate, or Streetwise, using the higher of the DCs for the two quarters the characters are traveling between. Traveling between quarters takes an additional 1d10 minutes (3d10 altogether). Failing this check counts as 2 failures in the challenge.

Find Directions: The characters can take a chance on finding directions. They spend 2d10 minutes asking around (or finding someone who knows where their destination is). They make a group check using Diplomacy or Streetwise. If they succeed, they learn how to get to their destination and arrive there if it is in their current quarter. Otherwise, they need to ask someone else.

Gather Information: The characters can spend some time ferreting out rumors, making a group check using Bluff, Diplomacy, or Streetwise. Success allows them to learn a rumor. It takes an hour to hit the local pubs and find any rumors.

Evade Pursuit: The characters make a group check using Athletics (to outrun their pursuers), Bluff (to create a disguise), Stealth (to hide), or Streetwise (to find a shortcut or other difficult-to-follow route), using the appropriate DC for the quarter. If they succeed, they escape. Otherwise, the PCs are cornered and must fight their pursuers. Failure on this check does not count as a failure in the skill challenge. Use the guidelines given below for the guard random encounter to determine the repercussions of a fight.

Suderham's Quarters

Each of the city's four quarters has a distinct flavor stemming from the kinds of businesses found there and the people who live there. The quarter the characters are moving around in determines the DCs for skill checks they make in that quarter.

Military Quarter: The military quarter features barracks, armories, and slave quarters. It lacks any taverns, inns, and similar establishments. Folk here keep to themselves. They are either laborers at work or guards on or off duty. The PCs are likely to land in trouble faster here, but most people leave them alone.

Guards here are usually off duty and looking to avoid trouble. Taking a gentle approach with Diplomacy is the best route. Intimidate checks are likely to be taken as a challenge.

Official Quarter: The official quarter is home to government buildings, temples, and warehouses that store trade goods. The guard maintains heavy patrols in this area, and the guards are on high alert, making Stealth and Bluff difficult skills to use. Athletics is relatively easy, since the tallest, most ornate buildings in town are found here.

Thieves' Quarter: The guards rarely enter the squalid thieves' quarter. Crumbling old buildings, flophouses, run-down taverns, and other seedy establishments dominate this quarter, along with tenements filled to overcrowding. The thugs and criminals of this quarter have little use for social niceties, so Diplomacy works poorly here. The Streetwise skill offers easy access to dives that the guards avoid, side alleys, and other ways to keep out of sight.

Wealthy Quarter: The slave lords and other rich merchants of the city make their homes in this quarter. It is the second most heavily patrolled area, after the official quarter. The wealthy quarter hosts sprawling mansions with well-tended grounds, high-end taverns and inns, and other establishments that cater to the upper class. The broad boulevards have plenty of trees, gardens, statues, and other decorations.

Streetwise offers little utility here, since the broad avenues and sprawling estates make this quarter of the city the least urban in character of all Suderham's quarters. In comparison, a group that uses Stealth has an easy time of it. The guards make frequent patrols, but the mansions provide many hiding spots. Many of them are walled, surrounded by lush gardens, and ornamented with other flourishes that offer plenty of ways to avoid notice.

Success and Failure

This challenge does not follow the normal rules for skill challenges. Successful skill checks help the characters accomplish relatively minor goals but don't accrue toward a final goal for the challenge. Likewise, failures don't determine the end point of the challenge; they simply measure how much attention the characters draw to themselves over the course of their time in the city. The challenge ends when the characters accomplish whatever other goals they're pursuing in the city, which should be the object of one or more quests. The challenge defines the context for the characters' other activities in the city.

When the characters fail skill checks, they draw some amount of attention to themselves and put the town watch on a higher level of alert. Armed patrols increase in strength and frequency. The secret police send out agents to track down the characters. Eventually, if the characters are foolish or unlucky, Suderham becomes an armed camp in which it's impossible for the characters to move around safely.

Keep track of the failures the characters accrue over the course of the challenge. Each time they fail a check, consult "Effects of Failure," below. The characters suffer all the consequences shown for the number of failures they've accrued and for all lesser number of failures. For example, when the characters have failed five checks, the consequences noted for 5 failures, 4 failures, and 3 failures are all in effect in the city.

In addition, in the big, interconnected social web of a city, failure breeds failure. Each time the characters accrue a failure, also roll on the random events list.

If the characters lie low, staying out of sight or even leaving the city, the city slowly returns to normal. Each day that passes without the characters accruing any failures (whether because they succeed on all their checks or because they don't attempt checks), roll a d20. On a 10 or higher, subtract 1 failure from their accrued total.

At the end of the adventure, when the characters have finished their business in Suderham, award them 400 XP each for overcoming this 9th-level challenge.

Effects of Failure

Three or more failures: The town guard schedules more patrols. Increase the DC of all Athletics and Stealth checks by 2.

Four or more failures: The secret police become more active in questioning townsfolk. Increase the DC of all Diplomacy and Streetwise checks by 2.

Five or more failures: The guard reserves are called into duty. Random encounter results of 6–10 become guard patrols in the military, wealthy, and official quarters (as if you had rolled a 15–20).

Six or more failures: The guards and secret police become more active. Increase all check DCs by an additional 2.

Seven or more failures: The city is on a high level of alert, with guards actively searching from house to house. Each time the characters attempt to take a short rest in a building or alley in town, roll a d20. On a 16 or higher, the characters encounter a guard patrol (as a random event result of 15–20). If they try to take an extended rest, a guard patrol encounter occurs on a roll of 10 or higher.

Eight or more failures: The town is in a state of combat readiness. All DCs increase by an additional 4, and all random events are guard encounters.

Random Events

Life in the big city is full of surprises, and Suderham is no exception. Whenever the PCs take an action as part of this skill challenge (except evading pursuit), roll a d20 and consult the following list of events. If the characters are in the official quarter, add 5 to the roll. The characters might avoid any complications, they might take a penalty (or a bonus) to the skill check made as part of the challenge, or they might need to make a few checks to avoid a potentially dangerous situation.

If the PCs fail a check made as part of a random event, they do not suffer a failure for the skill challenge unless the event states otherwise.

1-5: No event.

ZOLTAN BOROS & GABOR SZIKSZAI

6: The PCs encounter a merchant who offers them 2 gp each if they'll help him unload his cart. To help, the characters must make a group Athletics check (DC 19) to unload his fragile goods. If they succeed, the merchant offers them a ride. Once, at a time of their choosing, they can arrange to travel from this quarter to any other without making skill checks.

7: A spy seeking to help free a slave notices the characters. With a successful group Diplomacy check (DC 24), the group gains access to the network of liberators in the city. The Streetwise DC for this quarter is reduced by 5. If the characters fail, the spy suspects them of being turncoats. Roll a d20 twice and take the higher result when rolling for random events in this quarter.

8: A group of slaves tries to escape. The characters can help them with a group Stealth check (DC 19) to avoid detection, help capture them with a group Athletics check (DC 19), or do nothing. If the characters assist the slaves and succeed, the next time they fail a check to travel in the city, a group of slaves who heard of the characters' valor provide a distraction and cancel the failure. If the characters fail to help them, they accrue a failure. If the characters capture the slaves, they gain a +2 bonus to all skill checks involving guard patrols if they succeed but take a -5 penalty to all checks involving slaves and those sympathetic to them whether they succeed or fail.

9: A gang of hobgoblin mercenaries picks a fight with a guard patrol on the street in front of the characters. The characters can jump into the fight or do nothing. If they help one side or the other, then for the next week, any guard patrol made up of the group they help ignores them on a d20 roll of 15 or higher. However, the characters take a -5 penalty to skill checks against patrols of the other side for the next week. Killing any combatants gives the characters 2 failures in the skill challenge.

10: A group of drunken off-duty soldiers tries to pick a fight with the characters. A successful group check using Bluff or Intimidate (DC 19) scares them off. On a failed check, the guards attack. If the characters defeat the guards, they gain a +2 bonus to all Intimidate checks in this quarter. If the characters kill any guards, they immediately accrue 3 failures in the challenge. Beating the guards unconscious brings no ill consequences (brawls are common here; the guards end up in the brig).

11: A cart loaded with goods topples over, blocking the street. The characters must make another check to travel through this quarter.

12: A thief runs past the characters, with a shopkeeper close behind. The characters can stop the thief with a group Athletics check (DC 19) or ignore him. If they ignore him, the shopkeeper curses at them and attracts a guard patrol. If they catch the thief, the shopkeeper covers them with praise, and the next time the characters are pursued by guards in this quarter, they can hide in the shopkeeper's business and automatically escape detection.

13: The characters come across an old building. A group check using History or Religion (DC 19) allows them to realize it was once a temple of Tiamat, the god of greed, and should have a secret meeting chamber in the back. If the characters are chased in this quarter, they can make Stealth checks with a +5 bonus by hiding in that chamber.

14: A horde of rats emerges from a nearby sewer grate, throwing the street into chaos. Each character must attempt an individual Athletics check (DC 19) to avoid the rats. A character who fails this check takes 1d10 + 5 damage. A character who inspects the grate sees that, although it is too narrow for a humanoid to fit through, it does open to a wide tunnel. A successful group check using History or Streetwise (DC 19) allows the characters to find a nearby entrance to the sewer tunnels. From now on, the characters can use the tunnels to travel in this quarter without making skill checks. Each time the characters use the tunnel, though, one character must make an unaided History check (DC 19) to plot a usable path to the party's destination. If this check fails, the characters encounter monsters that lurk in the sewers.

15-20: The characters run into a guard patrol and must make a group check to avoid the guards. Roll a d20 to determine what type of patrol they encounter and what skills they can use to evade the patrol.

1-9: 1d6+1 hobgoblin soldiers (Monster Manual, page 139). The group check can use Athletics (DC 14), Bluff (DC 19), Diplomacy (DC 24), Intimidate (DC 19), or Stealth (DC 14). These hobgoblin mercenaries are poorly paid and undisciplined. They are eager for a fight (thus the high Diplomacy DC) but are inattentive as they patrol (allowing low Athletics and Stealth DCs).

10-20: 2d4 human guards (Monster Manual, page 162). The group check can use Athletics (DC 19), Bluff (DC 14), Diplomacy (DC 19), Intimidate (DC 24), or Stealth (DC 19). An Insight check (DC 19) reduces the DC for either Diplomacy or Intimidate by 5 (determine at random) as the character notes the guards' moods—either eager to move on or easily cowed. The human guards are thorough in their work but seek any excuse to avoid a fight. They are well paid, and dead men can't spend their gold at the local pub.

Failure: If the PCs fail their group check to avoid the guards, they accrue 1 failure in the challenge, and the guards try to arrest them. The characters can fight or flee. If the PCs fight, they accrue 3 additional failures if they kill any guards. At the end of each round of combat, roll a d20. On a result of 16 or higher, another guard patrol arrives on the scene. On each round after the first, apply a cumulative +2 modifier to this check.

Customizing Monsters

The Monster Manual books offer hundreds of enemies to include in your encounters, but you can further customize these monsters, to tailor them to fit the feel and flavor of your campaign. This chapter adds more elements to your DM's toolbox by expanding the options from the Dungeon Master's Guide and adding a new tool: monster themes.

This chapter includes the following sections:

- Monster Themes: Each monster theme provides a suite of powers you can draw upon to add to existing monsters or use when you create new monsters. You then create thematic links across encounters, even when using monsters that might not normally be associated with each other. The section also details nine themes drawn from D&D lore.
- Templates: First introduced in the Dungeon Master's Guide, this section on templates includes more than a dozen new monster templates, as well as class templates for each of the nine classes from Player's Handbook 2 and the Forgotten Realms® Player's Guide.
- Creating Monsters: Updated guidelines for how to create your own elites, solos, and minions.

Monster Themes

Many of the iconic monsters of D&D come in themed groups or varieties, from packs of slavering gnolls to the deceptive rakshasas. These creatures share not only physical traits, but also tactics and even powers. Encounters with these creatures take on a distinctive flavor because of these shared characteristics.

Using the monster themes presented here, you can add that same distinctive flavor to any array of creatures. Each theme provides story-based and mechanical changes that modify existing monsters to better fit the flavor you've chosen. For example:

- A troglodyte curse chanter whispers a blasphemous prayer to Demogorgon and brings madness to her enemies.
- The proximity of Telven Vale to the Feywild imbues many of its denizens—including a tribe of ogres—with powers of stealth and trickery.
- Kobolds dedicated to Tiamat ignore the streams of acid that drip from the ceiling of their accursed temple . . . and unleash their own acidic breath upon unwary intruders.

Each monster theme begins with an explanation of the theme, then presents a suite of options for customizing your monsters. These options include story-based changes—such as alterations to a monster's appearance or behavior—as well as mechanical adjustments in the form of new powers and skill modifications. Finally, each theme includes a sample stat block showing how you can customize an existing monster by using the theme.

You can use these themes to modify existing creatures, to tweak your own creations, or to serve as the nucleus of an entirely new monster. Most of the advice here concerns modifying existing monsters. See the sidebar "Designing Your Own Themed Monsters" for how to use this concept in conjunction with creating your own monsters from scratch.

Using Themes

Applying a monster theme is a straightforward procedure. You don't need to rebuild the monster's stat block—you can run the monster with a few extra notes jotted in the margin that detail its new powers.

Step 1. Choose a Theme: If you're thinking about this idea, you've probably already picked out a theme that works for your campaign. But if you don't see one that fits, you can craft one easily. See "Designing Your Own Themes" for details.

Step 2. Choose a Monster: After you've selected the theme, pick the monster you want to modify.

Some themes work better with particular kinds or roles of monsters, and within the theme each power describes the roles it fits best. For example, the Demogorgon theme works well with brutes, because many of the new powers described in that theme are designed to fit those monsters. You can choose to modify a lurker or a soldier with one of these powers, but keep in mind that the modified monster is going to end up feeling a bit like a brute. This doesn't change the monster so much that it can't fulfill its original role, so you shouldn't change its role.

One exception: If you give a monster a leader power, the monster gains the leader role.

Step 3. Choose Story Changes: A theme is more than a menu of new powers. It also has a story template that you can use to turn a mundane creature into a unique opponent.

It's easy to forget about description and story elements when assembling a monster's statistics and powers, but story plays an important role in how a monster functions in a game. A monster without a good story is merely a pile of numbers, and that frequently leads to forgettable encounters or adventures.

When adding a theme to a monster, note how its appearance or behavior changes. These changes should reflect not only the monster's altered powers, but also its new allegiance to a specific deity, primordial, or other villainous master.

This step could just as easily occur after choosing the new powers. In fact, some powers might suggest particular story alterations, and vice versa, so you might jump back and forth between these two steps.

Step 4. Choose Powers: After selecting the theme, the monster, and any story-based changes, you need to choose the powers to add.

Choose one attack power and one utility power from the theme and add those to the monster's stat block. You can also apply some or all of the skill modifications in a theme description, though this isn't necessary.

Attack Powers: Each theme includes a number of different attack powers. Some are new at-will attack powers, while others are per-encounter or recharge-based enhancements to the monster's existing basic attacks. In some cases, powers in this category don't include an attack, but instead enhance the monster's offensive prowess in other ways.

Utility Powers: In addition to attack powers, each theme also includes options that don't involve attack rolls or directly deal damage, such as beneficial auras, healing powers, special movement options, situational benefits, and so on.

In most cases, adding a utility power doesn't alter a monster's core identity or tactics as drastically as adding a new attack power.

THEMED GROUPS

When first experimenting with themes, try to limit yourself to no more than one or two themed monsters in any given group. This helps you deal with the added complexity more gradually, and it also helps spotlight these "new" monsters for your players.

For instance, debuting a full tribe of Demogorgon-themed troglodytes is exciting, but allowing the players to meet these new troglodytes gradually enhances the unique nature of the monsters. Players can become inured to special monsters if you overuse them, so dole them out with care . . . that is, until you unleash a whole pack of Demogorgon-themed zombies with lashing tentacles and carnage in a big, climactic encounter!

Within a themed group, strike a balance between uniformity and variety. It's fine if all the themed monsters in an encounter display the same "new" at-will power, but in that case their encounter and utility powers should have more variety.

When themed monsters appear repeatedly in an adventure—a good thing, by the way, since it draws attention to the importance of the theme—use the same combination of monster plus changes so that your players start learning the connections.

For example, if the opening encounter of your adventure features a pair of Legion of Avernus dwarf hammerers with inspiring death, make sure the dwarf hammerers in the fourth encounter use the same power. Players feel rewarded when they figure out even the simplest of puzzles, and even though "dwarf hammerer plus inspiring death" doesn't seem like a puzzle to you, from the other side of the screen that realization can feel like an epiphany.

DESIGNING THEMES

If your campaign includes a particularly notable master villain, cult, or thematic element, consider creating a monster theme tied to that story element. Doing so is easier than crafting new monsters from scratch, but it has a similar effect: enemies with a unique feel that stand out from the everyday foes.

A theme is composed of two main parts: the story elements and the mechanical elements (the powers). When these two parts work well together, you and your players will remember the encounters featuring the themed monsters.

Start with the story of your theme to form an idea of where your theme is going. The answers to these two questions can point you in the right direction.

What's the basic concept? This first step points the way for everything to come. For example, are you modeling monsters on your archvillain, are you detailing an organization, or are you positing a regional influence on the monsters?

How do the monsters visibly demonstrate the theme? These visible cues help players understand what they face. Do your themed monsters wear a different style of clothing? Are they physically misshapen? What do their new powers look like in use?

After you have the story basics, move to the mechanical elements of attack and utility powers. In many cases, your story choices point toward particular powers. For example, if you intend to create a monster theme based on the Prince of Frost and his Winter Fey (see Manual of the Planes), you already know that cold-themed powers are a good choice.

Aim for two to five new powers in each new category. If you use too small a range of powers, all your themed monsters start feeling the same. Use too many, and it becomes hard for players to recognize the theme when they see it.

Link the powers strongly to the theme, avoiding generic effects that any monster could have. Ideally, a player encountering one of these monsters should identify it as belonging to the theme: "Hey, those zombies have tentacles for arms . . . keep your eyes open for a priest of Demogorgon around here somewhere!"

Also, as you can see from the themes presented here, it's fine to reuse (or adapt) existing monster powers. That's particularly true when the theme you're creating is linked to or based on that monster.

Attack powers include anything that deals damage or adds offensive punch to an attack. Damaging auras, harmful conditions, and extra-damage conditional effects all count as attack powers.

Utility powers include anything that isn't an attack. Healing effects, ally boosts, special movement, and defensive benefits are all examples.

When crafting a power, you might have to scale its effect by level or tier. See the examples in this chapter for guidance.

THEMES FOR MINIONS

Using a theme with a group of minions can be a great way of showcasing the theme, since its effect is multiplied over several monsters. However, when a theme power mentions an amount of damage or an amount of healing, halve that value (rounding down) when you give the power to a minion.

For dice of damage or healing, convert the value to half the average result. For example, a kobold minion with dragon breath would deal 2 damage to enemies in the blast (rather than 4.5, which is the average result of a 1d8 roll).

This method keeps a big group of minions from having too great an impact on combat.

DEMOGORGON CULTIST

One of the mightiest of demon lords, Demogorgon is a two-headed fiend who embodies madness and absolute destruction. The Prince of Demons commands his followers to engage in wanton destruction, laying waste to all that they find.

Demogorgon finds most of his adherents among troglodytes, kuo-toas, ogres, and other savage humanoids given to mindless, destructive violence. His human cults arise in times of chaos, when brute strength and blood lust allow even the weakest peasant to survive and, in the madness of battle, flourish. Other creatures that might align themselves to Demogorgon's cause include ettins, trolls, giants, titans, the occasional aberrant monster, and of course, demons. Worshipers of Demogorgon keep beasts such as drakes or otyughs as pets, and particularly vicious magical beasts—even rare dragons—might throw in with a cult dedicated to this demon prince.

Brutes, controllers, and skirmishers make the best Demogorgon-themed monsters. Some powers in this theme upgrade the monster's melee prowess, while others exemplify the madness inherent in the Demon Prince's cultists.

Creatures of this theme display bestial, even inhuman characteristics, such as forked tails or even tentacles instead of (or in addition to) arms. Extraordinarily dedicated followers sometimes boast two heads.

Demogorgon appears in Monster Manual 2, along with a number of related monsters.

Skill Modification: +2 bonus to Intimidate checks.

Attack Powers

Demogorgon's cultists favor overwhelming force, preferably delivered quickly, to defeat their enemies. His priests enjoy magic that twists and turns their enemies' minds.

Death Fury

Death fury turns melee-oriented monsters into ravening terrors of pure damage. The power is ideal for a brute or a soldier and is well suited for monsters with few other attack powers. You might try giving it to a troglodyte mauler so that it can mark multiple characters each round while bloodied even as it accelerates its own demise by drawing more attacks.

Death Fury (minor; usable only while bloodied; encounter)
Until the end of the encounter, this creature can make two melee basic attacks as a standard action, each with a -2 penalty to the attack roll. After this creature uses death fury, the only attack powers it can use until the end of the encounter are basic attacks.

Dominating Glare

This power is ideal for a controller or a creature that enjoys being surrounded by enemies. An oni night haunter, for example, might dive into battle before unleashing a dominating glare.

Dominating Glare (standard; recharge ⚅) ✦ Psychic
Close blast 3; targets enemies; level + 3 vs. Will; the target is dominated until the end of this creature's next turn.

Lashing Tentacles

When added to a melee-based monster, this aura slightly increases its damage output. For a monster that favors ranged attacks, lashing tentacles serves as an incentive for enemies to keep their distance. Try applying this power to artillery, brutes, or controllers. An ogre warhulk with lashing tentacles growing from its shoulders makes for an imposing—and potent—foe, particularly as it wades into the middle of the party to subject multiple characters to the aura.

Lashing Tentacles (Fire) aura 1; any enemy that enters the aura or starts its turn there takes 2 fire damage.
Level 11: 4 fire damage.
Level 21: 6 fire damage.

Maddening Strike

Maddening strike works best for brutes and controllers that are likely to be in the thick of melee. An immolith can use its reach to deliver a maddening strike against one character adjacent to another.

Maddening Strike (standard; encounter)
This creature makes a melee basic attack. If the attack hits, the target makes a melee basic attack as a free action against a creature of this creature's choice.

Utility Powers

These powers favor large groups of melee combatants.

Carnage

Give this power to brutes, skirmishers, or soldiers that fight in teams, allowing them to grant the bonus to each other. Kuo-toa guards that have carnage can seize the PCs' attention when they gang up on the characters.

Carnage
This creature gains a +1 bonus to melee attacks if one or more of its allies are adjacent to its target.

Demonic Frenzy

A monster that has demonic frenzy should spend plenty of time in the middle of combat. Pair it with multiple brutes or soldiers (specifically leaders) to maximize the effect. An ogre warhulk with demonic frenzy surrounded by a bunch of ogre savages makes a tough encounter.

Demonic Frenzy aura 5; any bloodied ally within the aura gains a +1 bonus to attack rolls.

Dual Brain

Though useful for any monster, dual brain is particularly helpful for elite and solo monsters—or any monster with a low Will—since it prevents them from being taken out of the fight for long by mental effects. This feature manifests physically as a second, mostly vestigial head sprouting from the monster's shoulders. Two-headed barlguras with dual brain are tough to slow down with mental effects.

Dual Brain
At the end of this creature's turn, it saves against dazed and stunned conditions and charm effects.

Threatening Reach

A Large or Huge brute or soldier can influence a wider swath of the battlefield with this power. This ability typically manifests as long, sinewy limbs that look like tentacles. A squad of ogre thugs with threatening reach can create an effective wall between the characters and a villain.

Threatening Reach
This creature can make opportunity attacks against any enemy within the reach of its melee basic attack.

Ettin Spirit-Talker of Demogorgon Level 12 Elite Controller (Leader)
Large natural humanoid (giant) XP 1,400

Initiative +6 Senses Perception +17
Demonic Frenzy aura 5; any bloodied ally within the aura gains a +1 bonus to attack rolls.
Lashing Tentacles (Fire) aura 1; any enemy that enters the aura or starts its turn there takes 4 fire damage.
HP 252; Bloodied 126
AC 28; Fortitude 27, Reflex 21, Will 26
Saving Throws +2
Speed 6
Action Points 1

Club (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; +17 vs. AC; 1d8 + 7 damage, and the target is pushed 1 square.

Curse of Shattered Bone (standard; at-will)
Ranged 10; +15 vs. Will; the next time the spirit-talker hits the target with a melee attack, the attack is treated as a critical hit and deals 1d12 extra damage. The curse lasts until the end of the ettin spirit-talker's next turn.

Spirit Call (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Necrotic
Close burst 5; +15 vs. Fortitude; 2d6 + 6 necrotic damage, and the target slides 3 squares.

Double Actions
At the start of combat, the ettin spirit-talker makes two initiative checks. Each check corresponds to one of the ettin spirit-talker's heads, and the ettin spirit-talker takes a turn on each initiative count. The ettin spirit-talker has a full set of actions on each of its turns, and its ability to take an immediate action refreshes on each turn.

Dual Brain
At the end of each of its turns, the ettin spirit-talker saves against dazed and stunned conditions and charm effects.

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Giant
Skills Intimidate +10, Religion +12

Feywild Denizen

The denizens of the Feywild are known for their stealth and trickery. From the wily gnome to the graceful eladrin, these creatures display abilities that allow them to elude attack and escape pursuit.

The Feywild Denizen theme allows you to add elements of these iconic creatures to other monsters. Whether you want to craft the perfect pet for an eladrin hunting party or build a singularly elusive squad of enemies to frustrate your characters, this theme offers a variety of options to suit your tastes.

This theme appears commonly among fey and natural creatures. Any type of creature might have the Feywild Denizen theme, from humanoids such as elves or gnolls to animates such as a shambling mound. Skirmisher, controller, and lurker abilities mesh well with the powers provided by this theme.

You can add this theme to creatures that already have fey-themed powers (such as eladrin or gnomes) to enhance their fey nature, or layer it onto other creatures—deathjump spiders, vine horrors, or wights—to create a connection to the plane. Such creatures might be natives unusual to the plane or might have taken on fey properties due to the Feywild's influence on their home region.

Creatures of the Feywild Denizen theme appear more lithe and agile than their unmodified counterparts. They might have luminous, pupilless eyes, melodic voices, or faintly glowing auras.

Origin: The creature's origin becomes fey.

Skill Modifications: +2 bonus to Acrobatics, Bluff, Nature, and Stealth checks.

Attack Powers

Creatures that have the Feywild Denizen theme favor attacks that harass and frustrate foes. The powers available in this theme favor monsters that like to keep enemies at bay or launch ambushes.

Befuddling Shot

This power gives the allies of artillery, controller, or lurker monsters combat advantage and the chance to move away from the target without provoking opportunity attacks. An ettercap webspinner can use befuddling shot with its web net so that its fang guard allies can deliver spider bites with combat advantage.

Befuddling Shot (standard; encounter)
This creature makes a ranged at-will attack. If the attack hits, the target is dazed until the end of its next turn.

Beguiling Strike

Controllers and lurkers like this power because they have melee attacks but dislike being attacked in return. Don't use this power for brutes or soldiers, because they're supposed to be attacked. A specter that pops up in the middle of the party and unleashes its beguiling strike can cause a cascade of opportunity attacks against the target.

Beguiling Strike (standard; encounter) ✦ Charm
This creature makes a melee basic attack. If the attack hits, the target is beguiled (save ends). While the target is beguiled, it makes an opportunity attack against any one of its allies that attacks the creature that used beguiling strike on it.

Distracting Illusion

An at-will attack that can slow multiple characters is great for any artillery or controller monster that favors ranged and area attacks, because it keeps the characters at a distance. It also prevents characters from breaking away from a combat to pursue another foe. A cyclops impaler that has distracting illusion uses it to prevent the PCs from evading its cyclops warrior allies.

Distracting Illusion (standard; at-will) ✦ Illusion
Area burst 2 within 10; level + 5 vs. Will; the target is slowed and can't shift until the end of this creature's next turn.

Surprise Attack

Add this power to an artillery or a lurker that has a good Stealth modifier or an invisibility power. An elf archer with surprise attack takes on a strong lurker flavor, using its Stealth skill to become hidden before launching a longbow attack.

+ or ↣ Surprise Attack (standard; usable while this creature is hidden; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞)
This creature makes a melee or ranged at-will attack that deals 1d8 extra damage.
Level 11: 2d8 extra damage.
Level 21: 3d8 extra damage.

Utility Powers

Feywild creatures are known for their stealth and trickery, and these powers reflect those qualities.

Change Shape

This power is great for keeping characters from knowing what they're facing until it's too late. Only humanoid monsters can use this power. A medusa archer's snaky hair gives its identity away—unless it has change shape.

Change Shape (minor; at-will) ✦ Polymorph
The creature can alter its physical form to appear as an attractive humanoid of its size and any race or gender (see "Change Shape," Monster Manual 2, page 216).

Fade Away

Fade away performs double duty as a defensive power and as a way for an artillery monster, a lurker, or a skirmisher to gain combat advantage for its next barrage of attacks. Don't use it for monsters that are supposed to draw attention (including brutes and soldiers). A stirge with fade away that grabs a character becomes harder to kill, since you can hit it only once before it turns invisible for a round.

Fade Away (immediate reaction, when this creature takes damage; encounter) ✦ Illusion
The creature becomes invisible until it attacks or until the end of its next turn.

Fey Step

This power gives an artillery monster a quick escape, allowing it to keep launching ranged attacks from a safe distance. It also works well for skirmishers and soldiers, particularly those that benefit from positioning on the battlefield (such as flanking). A macetail behemoth with fey step can teleport into the middle of a group of enemies to use tail sweep—much easier than moving normally!

Fey Step (move; encounter) ✦ Teleportation
This creature teleports 5 squares.

Feywild Positioning

This power can change a combat significantly, bringing a controller's or skirmisher's allies from vulnerable positions into superior ones. Use it to set up (or escape from) flanks, converge on a bloodied character, or slip away through difficult terrain. A gnoll claw fighter can use Feywild positioning to allow its allies to shift adjacent to a foe, so it can deal extra damage with pack attack in the next round.

Feywild Positioning (minor; encounter)
Each fey ally within 5 squares of this creature can shift 2 squares as a free action. The creatures ignore difficult terrain during the shift.

Fey Bodak Skulk Level 16 Lurker
Medium fey humanoid (undead) XP 1,400

Initiative +16 Senses Perception +10; darkvision
Agonizing Gaze (Fear, Gaze, Necrotic) aura 5; each creature within the aura that makes a melee or a ranged attack against the bodak skulk takes 5 necrotic damage before the attack roll is made and takes a -2 penalty to the attack roll.
HP 124; Bloodied 62
AC 29; Fortitude 29, Reflex 27, Will 29
Immune disease, poison; Resist 15 necrotic; Vulnerable 5 radiant; a bodak skulk that takes radiant damage cannot weaken a target until the end of its next turn.
Speed 6
⊕ Slam (standard; at-will) ✦ Necrotic
+21 vs. AC; 1d6 + 5 damage plus 2d6 necrotic damage, and the target is weakened until the end of the bodak skulk's next turn.
+ Surprise Attack (standard; usable while the bodak skulk is hidden; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞)
The bodak skulk makes a melee at-will attack that deals 2d8 extra damage.
↣ Death Gaze (standard; encounter) ✦ Gaze, Necrotic
Ranged 10; targets a living creature; +19 vs. Fortitude; if the target is weakened, it drops to 0 hit points; otherwise, the target takes 1d6 + 6 necrotic damage and loses a healing surge.
Spectral Form (standard; at-will)
The bodak skulk becomes invisible and gains insubstantial and phasing. It can do nothing but move in its spectral form, and it can return to its normal form as a free action.
Change Shape (minor; at-will) ✦ Polymorph
The bodak skulk can alter its physical form to appear as an attractive humanoid of its size and any race or gender (see "Change Shape," Monster Manual 2, page 216).
Skills Stealth +14
Alignment Evil Languages Common
Str 21 (+13) Dex 19 (+12) Wis 15 (+10)
Con 22 (+14) Int 6 (+6) Cha 23 (+14)

Encounter Group

A ruthless eladrin uses a couple of bodak skulks infused with fey powers as bodyguards and also to hunt his enemies.

Level 17 Encounter (XP 8,400)
- 2 fey bodak skulks (level 16 lurker)
- 1 bralani of autumn winds (level 19 controller; Monster Manual, page 102)
- 2 firebred hell hounds (level 17 brute; Monster Manual, page 160)

GOBLIN ALLIES

The prolific, ill-tempered creatures known as goblins—including their hobgoblin and bugbear cousins—live in nearly every corner of the world. By extension, then, they live near almost every kind of creature in the world. From time to time, these tribes adopt, enslave, or domesticate nongoblins. Some of these creatures serve the goblins, while others live alongside them or even lead them.

Whatever their place in the tribe, these creatures inevitably learn new tricks from the goblins around them. Hobgoblins teach military tactics and discipline, while bugbears share their predatory, bullying ways. And of course, you can't live in a goblin tribe without picking up basic methods of sneaky survival.

Common goblin-friends include pets such as wolves, worgs, and drakes. Ogres, ettins, and other big humanoids find work as guards in goblin society. Some hobgoblin tribes welcome devils in their midst, and in rare instances a truce between goblins and a rival humanoid tribe (such as lizardfolk) might lead to a sharing of traditions. Of course, goblins of all kinds also learn tricks from each other, so the sight of bugbears learning hobgoblin discipline or tough goblins learning to bully the smaller among them are quite common.

Although physical changes aren't common to monsters that have this theme, such creatures bear particular symbols of the tribe. These might take the form of crude icons painted onto armor, garish tattoos, or simple brands.

If your campaign features more than one notable goblin tribe, differentiate them by choosing dissimilar pets and allies (or powers) for each tribe. For instance, if the mighty Red Hand tribe is known for its drakes and ogres, perhaps the lowly Broken Spear clan favors wolves and enslaved kobolds.

Skill Modifications: +2 bonus to Athletics checks or Stealth checks. The Athletics bonus represents hobgoblin-style military training, while the Stealth bonus is picked up from hanging around with goblins and bugbears.

Attack Powers

This selection includes options flavored for all three of the main kinds of goblins.

Minion Sacrifice

This power works best in the hands of an artillery monster, a controller, or a lurker that leads minions from a distance. Effectively, it turns each minion into a one-use ranged attack. A goblin hexer feels little remorse when ordering its goblin cutter minions to throw themselves onto the swords of its enemies. With its incite bravery power, it can even maneuver them into the ideal position.

Minion Sacrifice (standard; at-will)
Area burst 1 within 10; targets one enemy adjacent to this creature's minion ally; level + 7 vs. AC; the target is dazed until the end of this creature's next turn. One minion ally adjacent to the target drops to 0 hit points.

Predatory Eye

Give this power to a brute, a lurker, or a skirmisher that can achieve combat advantage easily. Some bugbears teach this trick to their dire wolf pets.

Predatory Eye (minor; encounter)
This creature deals 1d6 extra damage on the next attack it makes against a creature granting combat advantage to it. It must apply this bonus before the end of its next turn.
Level 11: 2d6 extra damage.
Level 21: 3d6 extra damage.

Tactical Opportunity

This power draws melee attacks from adjacent goblin allies to this creature. Thus, a soldier monster that has this power pairs well with any goblin that doesn't like to be attacked (which includes most goblins). With his reach, the human guard can make excellent use of this power (since he doesn't have to be adjacent to the triggering attacker).

Tactical Opportunity (immediate reaction, when an enemy misses an ally and that ally uses goblin tactics; at-will)
This creature makes a melee basic attack against the triggering enemy.

Tactical Orders

From sneaky goblins to tactical hobgoblins to predatory bugbears, virtually all goblin brutes, controllers, and soldiers (leaders are best) benefit from good positioning. A hobgoblin commander who has tactical orders can turn a rabble of goblin cutters, blackblades, and sharpshooters into a deadly threat by enhancing their existing benefits from combat advantage.

Tactical Orders aura 5; any bugbear, hobgoblin, or goblin ally within the aura deals 1d6 extra damage to a creature granting combat advantage to it (or 1 extra damage if the ally is a minion).

Utility Powers

Most of these powers are designed to benefit groups of allies, from the great numbers favored by bullying demeanor to the hobgoblin allies required by phalanx soldier and rallying cry.

Bullying Demeanor

This power works best when you give it to a brute or a soldier that has the most hit points in the group and surround it with lower-level allies (or even minions). A bugbear warrior with bullying demeanor brings along a dozen goblin cutters to make him feel tough.

Bullying Demeanor
This creature gains a +2 bonus to melee attack rolls while its allies (including itself) outnumber its enemies. While no ally is within sight, this creature takes a -2 penalty to all defenses.

Goblin Tactics

This power works well for artillery, lurker, and skirmisher monsters both as an escape maneuver and as a positioning trick (to flank a foe). Goblin tribes sometimes train gray wolves in goblin tactics, allowing the beasts to take up the flanking positions they and their goblin masters enjoy.

Goblin Tactics (immediate reaction, when missed by a melee attack; at-will)
This creature shifts 1 square.

Phalanx Soldier

A minion or a soldier that has this power needs hobgoblins around to benefit from it, so use it in groups. A bugbear warrior trained to fight in an orderly fashion alongside its hobgoblin allies can become a dangerous foe.

Phalanx Soldier
This creature gains a +2 bonus to AC while at least one hobgoblin ally is adjacent to it. This creature also counts as a hobgoblin for the purpose of other creatures' phalanx soldier ability.

Rallying Cry

Thanks to hobgoblin resilience, this power, which works well with a brute or a soldier, is likely triggered during most combats, as long as the creature stays near its hobgoblin allies. A bugbear warrior (perhaps trained by hobgoblin commanders) appreciates this power, particularly when it teams up with a bunch of hobgoblin grunts.

Rallying Cry (immediate reaction, when a hobgoblin ally within 2 squares of this creature saves; encounter)
This creature gains temporary hit points equal to 3 + its level.

Young Blue Dragon Goblin Ally Level 6 Solo Artillery
Large natural magical beast (dragon) XP 1,250

Initiative +5 Senses Perception +10; darkvision
Tactical Orders aura 5; any bugbear, hobgoblin, or goblin ally within the aura deals 1d6 extra damage to a creature granting combat advantage to it (or 1 extra damage if the ally is a minion).
HP 296; Bloodied 148; see also bloodied breath
AC 23; Fortitude 24, Reflex 21, Will 21
Resist 15 lightning
Saving Throws +5
Speed 8, fly 10 (hover), overland flight 15
Action Points 2

⊕ Gore (standard; at-will) ✦ Lightning
Reach 2; +11 vs. AC; 1d6 + 5 plus 1d6 lightning damage.

⊕ Claw (standard; at-will)
Reach 2; +9 vs. AC; 1d4 + 5 damage.

Draconic Fury (standard; at-will)
The dragon makes a gore attack and two claw attacks.

Breath Weapon (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Lightning
The dragon targets up to three creatures with its lightning breath; the first target must be within 10 squares of the dragon, the second target within 10 squares of the first, and the third target within 10 squares of the second; +11 vs. Reflex; 1d12 + 5 lightning damage. Miss: Half damage. This attack does not provoke opportunity attacks.

Bloodied Breath (free, when first bloodied; encounter)
Breath weapon recharges, and the dragon uses it.

Frightful Presence (standard; encounter) ✦ Fear
Close burst 5; targets enemies; +11 vs. Will; the target is stunned until the end of the dragon's next turn. Aftereffect: The target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls (save ends).

Lightning Burst (standard; at-will) ✦ Lightning
Area burst 2 within 20; +11 vs. Reflex; 1d6 + 4 lightning damage. Miss: Half damage.

Phalanx Soldier
The young blue dragon gains a +2 bonus to AC while at least one hobgoblin ally is adjacent to it. The dragon also counts as a hobgoblin for the purpose of other creatures' phalanx soldier ability.

Alignment Evil Languages Common, Draconic
Skills Athletics +20, Insight +10, Nature +10
Str 20 (+8) Dex 15 (+5) Wis 14 (+5)
Con 18 (+7) Int 12 (+4) Cha 13 (+4)

Encounter Group

Hobgoblins enjoy raising fierce pets, and what creature fits that description better than a dragon?

Level 9 Encounter (XP 2,066)
- 1 young blue dragon goblin ally (level 6 solo artillery)
- 1 hobgoblin commander (level 5 soldier; Monster Manual, page 140)
- 7 hobgoblin warriors (level 8 minion; Monster Manual, page 138)

Of the many vast armies that have marched across the fiery plains of the Nine Hells, none is as well known to mortals as the infamous Legion of Avernus. Named for the uppermost layer of the Hells, this army theoretically owes its allegiance to the pit fiend Bel. In reality the legion has no one ruler, since its teachings and influence have long since spread beyond the astral dominion of the devils.

Today, splinter groups calling themselves the Legion of Avernus exist across the world and even on other planes. These groups frequently serve as mercenaries for anyone willing to meet their high price. They care little for the cause and are willing to kill anyone, anywhere . . . with one exception: Some say that no legionnaire will ever knowingly battle another, even if they belong to different platoons bearing no alliance other than their shared origin.

Veterans of the legion invariably bear scars both physical and mental from their inhumanly intense training regimen. Their loyalty to one another bears no question; to the last member, every unit lays down its life for the legion.

Though the group was once entirely made up of devils, humanoids now compose the largest section of the Legion of Avernus. Humans and hobgoblins are common among the legion, but many tieflings, dwarves, dragonborn, and half-orcs find the legion to their liking as well.

The legion trains mighty beasts such as rage drakes, owlbears, and dire wolves to fight alongside its soldiers.

Most members of the legion are (or soon become) evil; it's just too hard to engage in emotionless slaughter without turning dark inside, and the legion has no room for sensitive souls. However, chaotic evil creatures lack the discipline to survive long in the legion.

Particularly infamous legion platoons include the Broken Fangs (a squadron of hobgoblins and low-level devils, with several dire wolves and a young red dragon), and the Infernal Infantry (a group of azers and legion devil veterans led by a fire giant forge-caller named the Crimson General).

Skill Modifications: +2 bonus to Athletics, Endurance, and Intimidate checks.

Attack Powers

The attack powers of the Legion of Avernus reward good positioning and tactics.

Fire Shield

This power adds a bit of damage-dealing ability to a melee-based monster, or provides stay-away incentive when fighting more fragile foes. A tiefling heretic's fire shield gives PCs a good reason to stand back.

Fire Shield (Fire) aura 1; each enemy that enters the aura or starts its turn there takes 2 fire damage.
Level 11: 5 fire damage.
Level 21: 8 fire damage.

Infernal Wound

Give this power to a soldier that otherwise lacks the ability to mark PCs. A squad of hobgoblin warriors with infernal wound keeps the PCs' attention away from the hobgoblins' leaders.

Infernal Wound (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅)
This creature makes a melee basic attack. If the attack hits, the target is marked and takes ongoing 5 damage (save ends both).

Inspiring Death

This power works best in the hands of any minion or soldier likely to die before its comrades do. Legion devils of any level are proud to offer their platoon an inspiring death.

Inspiring Death (when this creature drops to 0 hit points)
One ally within 2 squares of this creature gains a +2 bonus to the next attack roll and damage roll it makes before the end of that ally's turn.

Minion Sacrifice

A minion ordered by an artillery, a controller, or a lurker monster to throw itself onto the blade of a PC is sure to call attention to itself, so make sure you have plenty of legion devil minions of the appropriate level. A tiefling darkblade with minion sacrifice can throw minion after minion at the characters while hidden, setting up its other allies to take advantage of the dazed targets.

Minion Sacrifice (standard; at-will)
Area burst 1 within 10; targets one enemy adjacent to this creature's minion ally; level + 7 vs. AC; the target is dazed until the end of this creature's next turn. One minion ally adjacent to the target drops to 0 hit points.

Utility Powers

The following powers represent both tactical training and physical hardening.

Fire Resistance

Pair a fire-resistant creature with fire-using allies for maximum effect. A cambion hellfire magus doesn't need this resistance . . . but the rakshasa warriors serving it appreciate the protection from its soulscorch power.

STEVE ARGYLE

Fire Resistance
This creature gains resist 10 fire.
Level 11: Resist 20 fire.
Level 21: Resist 30 fire.

Legion Initiative

This power benefits monsters that want to choose where the fight occurs, whether by charging at PCs before they can react or by moving to a more defensible position. Bearded devils with legion initiative can win initiative more easily, exposing PCs to their beard tendrils aura when the characters' first turn comes up.

Legion Initiative
This creature gains a +5 bonus to its initiative check if at least one ally is within sight.

Squad Defense

Obviously, this power requires appropriate allies to have any effect, so pair a controller, a minion, or a soldier with legion devils or other creatures of this theme. A line of hobgoblin soldiers with squad defense becomes nearly unbreakable.

Squad Defense
This creature gains a +2 bonus to all defenses while adjacent to a legion devil or any creature that has the Legion of Avernus theme.

Triumphant Surge

This power works best when its owner, a brute or a soldier, can survive late into the battle. Most ogres don't have the discipline for the legion, but the rare ogre warhulk that doesn't wash out gains great effect from triumphant surge.

Triumphant Surge (whenever this creature bloodies an enemy or reduces an enemy to 0 hit points)
This creature gains temporary hit points equal to one-half its level.

Hobgoblin Legionnaire of Avernus Level 5 Soldier (Leader)
Medium natural humanoid XP 200
Initiative +8 Senses Perception +5; low-light vision
HP 64; Bloodied 32
AC 21; Fortitude 21, Reflex 18, Will 19; see also squad defense
Speed 5
⊕ Spear (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+12 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage. If the hobgoblin commander hits with an opportunity attack, it shifts 1 square; see also lead from the front.
Tactical Deployment (minor; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞)
Close burst 5; allies in the burst shift 3 squares.
Infernal Wound (standard; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞)
The hobgoblin commander makes a melee basic attack. If the attack hits, the target is marked and takes ongoing 5 damage (save ends both).
Lead from the Front
When the hobgoblin commander's melee attack hits an enemy, allies gain a +2 bonus to attack rolls and damage rolls against that enemy until the end of the hobgoblin commander's next turn.
Hobgoblin Resilience (immediate reaction, when the hobgoblin commander becomes subject to an effect; encounter)
The hobgoblin commander rolls a saving throw against the triggering effect.
Squad Defense
The hobgoblin commander gains a +2 bonus to all defenses while adjacent to a legion devil or any creature that has the Legion of Avernus theme.
Alignment Evil Languages Common, Goblin
Skills Athletics +14, Endurance +7, History +10, Intimidate +9
Str 20 (+7) Dex 14 (+4) Wis 16 (+5)
Con 16 (+5) Int 12 (+3) Cha 10 (+2)
Equipment scale armor, heavy shield, spear

Encounter Group

Many hobgoblins find the Legion of Avernus to their liking. Those who rise to positions of command lead small platoons of devils into battle.

Level 6 Encounter (XP 1,330)
- 1 hobgoblin commander (level 5 soldier)
- 10 legion devil grunts (level 6 minion; Monster Manual, page 64)
- 2 spined devils (level 6 skirmisher; Monster Manual, page 66)

LOLTH'S CHOSEN

The vile and sinister drow serve their Spider Queen with a mixture of loyalty and fear. Priests rule with ruthless authority, and those who show promise receive special blessings from their divine ruler.

Although drow, driders, and spiders are the most common creatures to become Lolth's Chosen, the Spider Queen's gifts can seem unexplainable to mortals. Many monsters considered to be of the "servant class" receive these gifts as well, from goblins and ettercaps to grimlocks and rage drakes. Powerful allies such as demons and vampires are also occasionally chosen by the Spider Queen.

Lolth has need of both foot soldiers and specialists, so her chosen include creatures of all roles from minion to controller. Each one knows its place in the hierarchy, never daring to question those above it in status.

Chosen drow typically wear an ornate platinum spider embossed or embroidered on their clothing as an emblem of their status. Lesser creatures of this theme instead bear tattoos or brands in the shape of a spider. Some also grow spidery limbs or fangs, and compound eyes are a common mutation as well.

Skill Modifications: +2 bonus to Dungeoneering and Stealth checks.

Attack Powers

These powers include options derived from existing drow. All work well with drow tactics and allies.

Darkfire

Combat advantage is useful to any creature, but this power shines when an artillery, a lurker, or a skirmisher monster (or its allies) relies on combat advantage for additional effects. A bugbear strangler with darkfire can set up its own strangle attack without needing to flank or ambush the enemy.

Darkfire (minor; encounter)
Ranged 10; level + 1 vs. Reflex; until the end of this creature's next turn, the target grants combat advantage and can't benefit from invisibility or concealment.

Lolth's Authority

Though normally the purview of drow priests, the authority of Lolth is sometimes granted to other beings judged worthy of leading her "children." Controllers and soldiers (specifically leaders) can make best advantage of this power. An ettercap fang guard uses Lolth's authority to enhance its deathjump spider allies.

Lolth's Authority aura 5; each drow or spider ally within the aura gains a +1 bonus to attack rolls and a +2 bonus to damage rolls.

Poison Weapon

Encountering the drow's poison in the hands of another creature, such as a controller or lurker, is a great way to foreshadow the appearance of drow later in an adventure. A squad of grimlock ambushers hints at the group's secret master's identity when their poisoned weapons find the mark.

Poison Weapon (minor; recharge ⚅) ✦ Poison
The next time this creature hits a creature with a weapon attack, it makes a secondary attack against that creature. Secondary Attack: +16 vs. Fortitude; the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target is weakened (save ends). Second Failed Saving Throw: The target is knocked unconscious (save ends; the target takes a -5 penalty to this saving throw).

Virulent Poison

Give this power to a spider or similar creature that has a poison attack to impart additional punch to that attack. A squad of drow warriors with virulent poison can open with a devastating volley of attacks.

Virulent Poison (standard; encounter)
The creature makes a melee basic attack. The attack gains the poison keyword, and if the attack hits, the target takes ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends). If the attack already deals ongoing poison damage, increase that value by 5.

Utility Powers

Drow and spider characteristics are mixed here, offering abilities to Lolth's Chosen that are both useful and unsettling.

Blessing of the Spider Queen

Give this power to any creature allied to a drow, or to those that have special powers affecting drow or spiders. Bugbear warriors with blessing of the Spider Queen can deliver devastating attacks to enemies enveloped by a drow's cloud of darkness, and they also benefit from a drow priest's Lolth's authority aura (see above).

Blessing of the Spider Queen
This creature is not blinded while within a cloud of darkness, nor does that power block this creature's line of sight. This creature is considered a drow and a spider for the purpose of the effects of allies' powers.

Cloud of Darkness

This power lets an artillery monster, a lurker, or a skirmisher attack with combat advantage or slip away from adjacent enemies without provoking opportunity attacks. Some flameskulls crafted from the heads of drow spellcasters retain the ability to create a cloud of darkness to disguise their escape.

Cloud of Darkness (minor; encounter) ✦ Zone
Close burst 1; the burst creates a zone of darkness that lasts until the end of this creature's next turn. The zone blocks line of sight for any creature except this one. Any creature except this one is blinded while within the zone.

Scuttling Escape

This power is best in the hands of a leader, an elite, or a solo monster—the kind of enemy you expect to last until the retreat is sounded. Of course, the commander leaves all nondrow and nonspider allies behind to "guard the escape route." A drow blademaster with scuttling escape can last long enough to turn a potential rout into a chance for its comrades to fight another day.

Scuttling Escape (move; encounter)
This creature and each drow or spider ally within 5 squares of it can shift 4 squares as a free action.

Spider Climb

This power lets a monster reach a defensible position, escape enemies, or even just look extra creepy. A drow arachnomancer scuttling across the wall alongside its spider allies is sure to send a shiver down the PCs' spines.

AMELIA STONER

Spider Climb
This creature gains a climb speed equal to its normal speed, and can use its climb speed to move across overhanging horizontal surfaces (such as ceilings) without making Athletics checks.

Chosen Mezzodemon Level 11 Soldier
Medium elemental humanoid (demon) XP 600

Initiative +9 Senses Perception +13; darkvision
HP 113; Bloodied 56
AC 27; Fortitude 25, Reflex 22, Will 23
Resist 20 poison, 10 variable (2/encounter)
Speed 6

Trident (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; +18 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage.

Skewering Tines (standard; requires a trident; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; +18 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage, and the target is restrained and takes ongoing 5 damage (save ends both). While the target is restrained, the mezzodemon can't make trident attacks.

Poison Breath (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Poison
Close blast 3; targets enemies; +16 vs. Fortitude; 2d6 + 3 poison damage, and ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends).

Poison Weapon (minor; recharge ⚅) ✦ Poison
The next time the mezzodemon hits a creature with a weapon attack, it makes a secondary attack against that creature. Secondary Attack: +16 vs. Fortitude; the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target is weakened (save ends). Second Failed Saving Throw: The target is knocked unconscious (save ends; the target takes a -5 penalty to this saving throw).

Blessing of the Spider Queen
The mezzodemon is not blinded while within a cloud of darkness, nor does that power block this creature's line of sight. The mezzodemon is considered a drow and a spider for the purpose of the effects of allies' powers.

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Abyssal

Orcus Blood Cultist

Known as the Demon Prince of the Undead, Orcus rules from the palace of Everlost, deep within the Abyss. From there, his influence spreads across his realm of Thanatos and into the world in the form of countless undead servants as well as scattered cults that gather in graveyards and similar locations.

Such cults invariably include undead among their number, from the lowly skeleton or zombie to mummies and liches. Many of these creatures manifest new powers as a mark of their allegiance to the Blood Lord.

Humanoids also serve Orcus, from death-crazed acolytes to dark hierophants. Cult leaders share the Demon Prince's corpulent physique, while rank-and-file members might be gaunt and skeletal, or they might even encourage rotting wounds to fester in their flesh. The most "blessed" among them teeter on the brink between life and undeath.

As one of the most powerful denizens of the Abyss, Orcus also counts demons among his faithful. These demons take on aspects of undeath, and some bear ram's head brands deep in their flesh.

Monsters of all roles find service in the cults of Orcus, though the Prince of Undead favors brutes, controllers, and lurkers.

Skill Modification: +2 bonus to Religion checks.

Attack Powers

The attack powers detailed here run the gamut of flavors of undeath, including both ranged and melee options.

Aura of Impending Death

This power is great in the hands of an artillery monster or a brute that has lots of hit points, but it also helps keep characters away from more fragile monsters. An ogre warhulk with aura of impending death draws a lot of attention, since characters must struggle to defeat it before the aura kills them.

Aura of Impending Death (Necrotic) aura 2; while this creature is bloodied, each enemy that enters the aura or starts its turn there takes necrotic damage equal to one-half this creature's level (minimum 1).

Bloodstained Strike

This power is appropriate for any brute, lurker, skirmisher, or soldier, but it works best in the hands of a monster that can easily maneuver to reach a chosen target. A group of dark creepers with bloodstained strike can quickly converge on a bloodied character.

Bloodstained Strike (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Necrotic
This creature makes a melee basic attack against a bloodied target. This creature gains a +2 bonus to the attack roll and deals extra necrotic damage equal to one-half its level.

Penumbra of Doom

Combine artillery, lurker, and soldier monsters (specifically leaders) that have this power with multiple undead allies. A troglodyte impaler with penumbra of doom can make an unfortunate character into an excellent target for its honor guard of boneshard skeletons.

Penumbra of Doom (standard; at-will)
Ranged 10; level + 5 vs. Fortitude; the target is weakened until the end of this creature's next turn. Also, this creature's undead allies deal 1d6 extra damage until the end of this creature's next turn (2 damage if the creature is a minion).
Level 11: 2d6 extra damage (4 damage if the creature is a minion).
Level 21: 3d6 extra damage (6 damage if the creature is a minion).

ZOLTAN BOROS & GABOR SZIKSZAI

Rotting Strike

A creature that has this power needs to survive until characters are bloodied, so it either needs good hit points or the ability to stay safe until the right moment. Brutes, lurkers, and skirmishers make excellent candidates for this power. Zombies become a more significant threat when they unleash rotting strikes midway through the fight.

Rotting Strike (free, when this creature hits with a melee basic attack during its turn; encounter) ✦ Necrotic
The target takes ongoing necrotic damage equal to 2 + one-half this creature's level (save ends).

Utility Powers

These powers bestow a strong essence of undeath on any creature.

The Dead Rise

This power is appropriate only for monsters of 16th level or higher. The more creatures that are around one that has this power, the more chances a monster with this power gets to use it, so be sure to include plenty of foes in the encounter. Don't give this power to more than one creature in a fight—it's just too confusing to keep track of all the dead rising. A dracolich gets extra value from its rakshasa warrior allies thanks to this power.

The Dead Rise aura 6; one dead nonminion creature within the aura at the start of this creature's turn rises as an abyssal ghoul hungerer to fight at this creature's command.
Level 26: The dead creature rises as an abyssal ghoul myrmidon instead.

Death's Embrace

Give this to a creature you expect to be in the middle of combat. If you put this aura on multiple creatures, spread them out to cover the entire battlefield. A swarm of abyssal ghoul hungerers with death's embrace ensures that PCs won't ignore them in favor of the ghouls' master.

Death's Embrace aura 5; each enemy within the aura takes a -2 penalty to death saving throws.

Necrotic Burst

Any brute, controller, or soldier (preferably leader) in a team of undead can benefit from a timely necrotic burst. A battle wight with necrotic burst can make his zombie hulk servants even more durable.

Necrotic Burst (minor; encounter)
Each undead ally within 5 squares of this creature gains temporary hit points equal to 2 + this creature's level.

Spirit of Undeath

This power makes any creature feel like one of the undead, rewarding good player character tactics as well as augmenting appropriate monster powers. A deathlock wight that employs human guards that have spirit of undeath can bring them back from the dead with its reanimate power.

Spirit of Undeath
The creature gains resistance to necrotic damage equal to 5 + one-half its level, and it gains vulnerability to radiant damage equal to half that value. This creature is considered undead for the purpose of the effects of allies' powers.

Zombie Hulk of Orcus Level 8 Brute
Large natural animate (undead) XP 350

Initiative +2 Senses Perception +3; darkvision
Death's Embrace aura 5; each enemy within the aura takes a -2 penalty to death saving throws.
HP 88; Bloodied 44; see also rise again
AC 20; Fortitude 23, Reflex 17, Will 18
Immune disease, poison; Resist 10 necrotic; Vulnerable 10 radiant
Speed 4

⊕ Slam (standard; at-will)
Reach 2; +12 vs. AC; 2d8 + 5 damage.

⸸ Zombie Smash (standard; recharge ⚅)
Reach 2; targets a Medium or smaller creature; +12 vs. AC; 4d8 + 5 damage, and the target is knocked prone.

Rotting Strike (free, when the zombie hulk hits with a melee basic attack during its turn; encounter) ✦ Necrotic
The target takes ongoing 6 necrotic damage (save ends).

Rise Again (the first time the zombie hulk drops to 0 hit points)
The zombie hulk makes a new initiative check. On its next turn, the zombie hulk rises (as a move action) with 44 hit points.

Alignment Unaligned Languages –
Str 21 (+9) Dex 6 (+2) Wis 8 (+3)
Con 18 (+8) Int 1 (-1) Cha 3 (+0)

Encounter Group

Zombie hulks of Orcus frequently serve priests of the Demon Prince of Undead, working alongside other undead servants.

Level 7 Encounter (XP 1,700)
- ✦ 1 deathpriest of Orcus (level 9 controller; Monster Manual, page 210)
- ✦ 3 wraiths (level 5 lurker; Monster Manual, page 266)
- ✦ 2 zombie hulks of Orcus (level 8 brute)

SNAKETONGUE CULTIST

The Monster Manual details several human snaketongue cultists, but by using this theme you can create an endless variety of devotees of Zehir. Regardless of the original creature's form, after transformation into a snaketongue it becomes a loyal disciple of the god of poison.

The yuan-ti prefer human cultists, because these servants can pass for normal in society. However, Zehir welcomes evil humanoids from all races and backgrounds, from tieflings and hobgoblins to savage lizardfolk and corrupt eladrin. The snaketongue cult also includes serpentine and reptilian creatures of all sizes, including snakes, wyverns, drakes, and hydras. You can also enhance existing snaketongue cultists and even yuan-ti with these powers.

The powers common to the snaketongue cult are appropriate for all roles, since the cult welcomes all to the service of Zehir. The yuan-ti deem minions, brutes, and soldiers expendable, but they prize lurkers and controllers for their key talents of assassination and battlefield leadership.

All snaketongue cultists bear minor reptilian traits. In some cases, these traits are readily visible: scaled skin, sharp claws, or slitted eyes. Other cultists display more subtle transformations, including forked tongues or unusually sinuous limbs. Least common of all are the massive bodily transformations, such as a cobra's hood or a snakelike body in place of legs.

Skill Modifications: +2 bonus to Bluff checks and Stealth checks.

Attack Powers

Unsurprisingly, most snaketongue attack powers are related to poison use—either that of the cultist or of its allies.

Serpent's Words

Although useful in many situations, this power is best when the wielder (a controller works well) has allies that gain benefits from combat advantage. A hobgoblin warcaster allied with plenty of goblin blackblades and sharpshooters can use serpent's words to great effect.

Serpent's Words (standard; at-will)
Ranged 5; targets a nondeafened creature; level + 5 vs. Will; the target is dazed until the end of this creature's next turn.

Snaketongue Poison

Any weapon-wielding creature can benefit from this power, but it's even better if the creatures can expect to survive long enough to recharge the power. A doppelganger assassin can deliver a snaketongue poison attack, then use cloud mind to hide until it recharges.

Snaketongue Poison (minor; recharge ⚅) ✦ Poison
The next time this creature hits with a weapon attack, the target of the attack takes ongoing poison damage equal to one-half this creature's level (save ends).

Touch of Zehir

A creature that has this power need not be able to deal ongoing poison damage, as long as it's paired with creatures that can. Artillery and controller monsters make the best use of this power. A medusa archer with touch of Zehir can use the power in concert with its own or any of its snaketongue allies' poison attacks.

Touch of Zehir (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison
Ranged 10; targets a creature that has ongoing poison damage; level + 5 vs. Fortitude; the target takes poison damage equal to its ongoing damage, and it is dazed until the end of this creature's next turn.

Venom Enhancement

This power is most effective for a monster, preferably a leader, that stands in the thick of the fight, and the monster should have plenty of allies who deal ongoing poison damage. Rumors of a massive yuan-ti breeding project bent on releasing thousands of deathrattle vipers with venom enhancement into the wild are the product of overactive imaginations . . . perhaps.

Venom Enhancement aura 2; each enemy within the aura that has ongoing poison damage takes a -2 penalty to all defenses and saving throws.

CHIPPY

Utility Powers

Snaketongue utility powers lend themselves to tactics of defense and escape, which plays on the yuan-ti's tendency to slip away rather than fighting to the death.

Chameleon Defense

This power is good for discouraging ranged attacks. It can protect fragile monsters from ranged attacks, or it can encourage characters to stay close to dangerous melee monsters. Give this power to an entire group of snaketongues to protect them from being picked off at range.

Chameleon Defense
This creature has concealment against enemies that are more than 3 squares away.

Serpent Form

This power is appropriate only for monsters of 5th level or higher. It can grant formidable melee capabilities, or provide a way to escape a fight. After expending its encounter powers, a greenscale marsh mystic transforms into a serpent to bring the battle directly to its enemies.

Serpent Form (minor; at-will) ✦ Polymorph
The creature transforms into a deathrattle viper. Any equipment the creature is carrying merges with the new form. The creature uses the deathrattle viper's statistics instead of its own, except for hit points. Reverting to its true form is a minor action.
Level 9: The creature becomes a crushgrip constrictor.
Level 16: The creature becomes a shadow snake.

Serpentine Body

This power is fun to unleash on a party that favors immobilizing and restraining attacks, but don't overdo it. A guardian naga that has serpentine body becomes nearly impossible to pin down.

Serpentine Body
This creature gains a +5 bonus to saving throws against being immobilized or restrained, and a +5 bonus to checks made as part of an escape action. This creature can also stand up from prone as a minor action.

Slither Away

Give this power to artillery, lurker, or skirmisher monsters that move around during combat to maximize its benefit. An iron gorgon's trample becomes more dangerous when its speed and defenses increase.

Slither Away (while bloodied)
This creature gains a +2 bonus to speed and a +2 bonus to all defenses.

Snaketongue Wyvern Level 10 Skirmisher
Large natural beast (mount, reptile) XP 500

Initiative +10 Senses Perception +12; low-light vision
Venom Enhancement aura 2; each enemy within the aura that has ongoing poison damage takes a -2 penalty to all defenses and saving throws.
HP 106; Bloodied 53
AC 24; Fortitude 24, Reflex 20, Will 19
Speed 4, fly 8 (hover)

⊕ Bite (standard; at-will)
Reach 2; +15 vs. AC; 1d8 + 7 damage.

⊕ Claws (standard; usable only while flying; at-will)
+15 vs. AC; 1d6 + 7 damage, and the target is knocked prone.

⨽ Sting (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison
Reach 2; +15 vs. AC; 1d6 + 4 damage, and the wyvern makes a secondary attack against the same target. Secondary Attack: +13 vs. Fortitude; ongoing 10 poison damage (save ends).

⨽ Flyby Attack (standard; at-will)
The wyvern flies 8 squares and makes one melee basic attack at any point during that movement. The wyvern doesn't provoke opportunity attacks when moving away from the target.

Aerial Agility +2 (while mounted by a rider of 10th level or higher; at-will) ✦ Mount
While flying, the wyvern grants its rider a +2 bonus to all defenses.

Slither Away (while bloodied)
The wyvern gains a +2 bonus to speed and a +2 bonus to all defenses.

Alignment Unaligned Languages –
Skills Stealth +10

Encounter Group

Some yuan-ti breed wyverns to display serpentine characteristics. These foul beasts frequently guard lairs of snaketongue cultists.

Level 9 Encounter (XP 2,150)
- ✦ 1 snaketongue celebrant (level 11 controller; Monster Manual, page 273)
- ✦ 6 snaketongue zealots (level 12 minion; Monster Manual, page 272)

Strange, alien entities press at the boundaries of the cosmos. Their horrid, unknowable forms burrow endlessly at the walls of creation, desperate to break through the wards and barriers that keep them at bay, eager to destroy all that lives as they turn the planes into their feasting grounds. These beings are the denizens of the Far Realm, a place beyond nightmare and outside all mortal and divine reason. In the Far Realm, the rules and laws that bind the cosmos together break down into utter chaos.

The alien beings of the Far Realm press against the borders of the cosmos and project their minds into the world to twist, subvert, and control the creatures that would be their prey. The entities of the Far Realm use their powers to rend the minds of mortal creatures. Their corrupted victims call themselves Those Who Hear, because the entities of the Far Realm appear within their minds first as helpful voices that urge them toward achieving their personal desires. Soon the voices change, pushing Those Who Hear to engage in blasphemous rites that call forth Far Realm entities. The voice's desires become the victim's, and in time the unfortunate soul is a puppet controlled by his or her Far Realm masters.

A creature contacted by a Far Realm being becomes a member of a cult centered on the acquisition of esoteric knowledge and forbidden lore. The first creature contacted by the Far Realm serves as the cult's leader. The leader uses innate charm, promises of power, and borrowed magical abilities to gather more cultists to him. Power-hungry mages might also join the cause, along with druids and heretical priests who are disillusioned with the world and who seek new paths to power. Those Who Hear promise not only power, but a fast, easy path to attaining it. This pledge is a siren's lure to the young, ambitious, and reckless. The greatest tragedy of these cults is that many of their members realize the group's true nature only when it is too late to turn against it.

Those Who Hear typically gather in cities and towns, hiding in bastions of civilization. The secrets they need rest in libraries and temples, while they effectively recruit from among young and impressionable apprentices, disaffected youth, and frustrated, petty nobles. Sometimes these cults gather in dungeons and other forgotten corners of the world, particularly if the dungeon hides some secret tied to the Far Realm.

Members of a Far Realm cult typically have a tattoo inscribed over their hearts to mark their membership, or they could have a glyph or other strange symbol hidden beneath their clothing. Although a cult's membership consists primarily of humans, elves, tieflings, and dragonborn, its leaders also call aberrant creatures to their side. Foulspawn, gricks, grells, and carrion crawlers serve the cultists as allies.

Cultists range from unaligned to chaotic evil, moving more and more toward chaos and madness as they delve into the cult's deepest mysteries.

Skill Modifications: +2 bonus to Arcana, Endurance, and Perception checks.

Attack Powers

The attack powers of Those Who Hear allow them to subvert and control their enemies. Some of their abilities transform them into hideous beings of the Far Realm for short periods of time.

Aura of Madness

This aura is great for sliding enemies into flanking situations or moving allies into defensive positions. Controllers or leaders can also push characters into areas of difficult terrain in which they can't shift. A foulspawn berserker's allies use this power to push enemies into its berserker aura.

Aura of Madness (opportunity, when a creature starts its turn within 3 squares of this creature)
This creature slides the triggering creature 1 square.
Level 11: 2 squares.
Level 21: 3 squares.

Far Realm Manifestation

This power horrifies the players while keeping their characters rooted in place. Soldiers are great beneficiaries of the power. The dragonborn soldier loves the ability to mark adjacent enemies. When this power is combined with the dragonborn's impetuous spirit and martial recovery, characters have a rough time disengaging from it.

Far Realm Manifestation (minor 1/round; usable only after this creature is first bloodied; at-will)
Close burst 1; targets enemies; level + 3 vs. Reflex; the target is slowed until the end of this creature's next turn. Effect: The target is marked until the end of this creature's next turn.

Mind Twist

This power works well for a creature that already has abilities that can manipulate its enemies' positions. A tiefling heretic can lure characters into melee, use cloak of escape to evade them, and then unleash this power on the closely grouped characters.

Mind Twist (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Charm
Ranged 10; level + 3 vs. Will; the target makes an at-will attack against one of its allies. The creature that uses mind twist chooses the attack and its target. In addition, the target makes opportunity attacks against its allies (save ends).

Psychic Scream

A well-placed psychic scream ruins the PCs' plans and forces them to confront enemies they would rather avoid, such as minions that have seed of madness (see below). This power works well for controllers and soldiers. The foulspawn berserker loves to use this power to force enemies to remain close to it.

Psychic Scream (standard; recharge ⚅) ✦ Psychic
Close blast 5; targets enemies; level + 3 vs. Will; 1d8 + one-half level psychic damage. The target is dazed and during its turn, the target must attack the enemy nearest to it at the start of its turn (save ends).

Seed of Madness

This power transforms minions into walking land mines. Though it has a low attack bonus, each minion killed is one more chance for the cultists to control a character. Mobs of human rabble that have this attack are great from a story perspective, since they represent the hapless victims recruited into the cult, and they can serve as living shields that protect the cult's leaders.

Seed of Madness (when an enemy reduces this creature to 0 hit points) ✦ Charm
This creature makes the following attack against the triggering enemy: Ranged 20; level + 1 vs. Will; the target is dominated until the end of its next turn. The creature that used seed of madness still chooses the dominated creature's action, even if it is dead or unconscious.

Utility Powers

These powers represent the ways that creatures are transformed by their exposure to Far Realm energy.

Far Realm Action

An extra action point is insurance against a missed attack, allowing the creature to use an at-will power again. It can also set up a combination attack with its own abilities. Any creature that deals extra damage with combat advantage, such as the foulspawn mangler, loves an action point. It turns a round of powerful attacks into a devastating flurry.

Far Realm Action
This creature gains 1 action point.

Mind of Movement

Artillery, controller, and leader monsters can make excellent use of this power. Pair them with minions and creatures that gain benefits from flanking. For example, a gnome arcanist loves to use this ability to pull its allies into its aura of illusion.

Mind of Movement (minor; recharge ⚄ ⚅)
Each ally within 5 squares of this creature can shift 2 squares as a free action.

Psychic Feedback

Another minion booster, this feature is a great addition to all the members of the cult to create the feel of a hive mind. Creatures that are low-level compared to the PCs and minions make the most of psychic feedback.

Psychic Feedback (when this creature drops to 0 hit points) ✦ Psychic
Each enemy adjacent to one or more creatures that have psychic feedback takes 2 psychic damage.

Crazed Human Rabble Level 2 Minion
Medium natural humanoid XP 31

Initiative +1 Senses Perception +1
HP 1; a missed attack never damages a minion.
AC 15; Fortitude 13, Reflex 11, Will 11; see also mob rule
Speed 6

⨺ Club (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+6 vs. AC; 4 damage.

Aura of Madness (opportunity, when a creature starts its turn within 3 squares of the human rabble)
The human rabble slides the triggering creature 1 square.

Psychic Feedback (when the human rabble drops to 0 hit points) ✦ Psychic
Each enemy adjacent to one or more human rabble takes 2 psychic damage.

Mob Rule
The human rabble gains a +2 power bonus to all defenses while at least two other human rabble are within 5 squares of it.

Encounter Group

A mob of cultists teaches the PCs that the press of numbers sometimes outweighs their skill at arms, particularly when they face the power of the Far Realm. The gnome and the mage are the cult's priests, the guards are bodyguards clad in ornate armor, and the scout is a spy who works for the cult.

TIAMAT'S RED HAND

Since ancient times, many cults dedicated to Tiamat have borne the bloody insignia of the Red Hand. These cults typically arise behind a powerful, charismatic leader; when the world is fortunate, they fall not long after at the hands of bold heroes. But the influence of the Queen of Evil Dragonkind never disappears from the world, and the cycle continues.

Tiamat's cults can include any sentient creatures seeking wealth and power, from humans or lizardfolk to ogres or giants. Although one incarnation of the Red Hand might be linked to a particular race—such as the hobgoblins of Kulkor Zuul who sought to establish a new empire in the smoking ruins of Elsir Vale some years ago—the next might include members of a dozen races working side by side for the common cause.

Whatever the primary membership of the Red Hand, it invariably includes creatures of draconic descent. Dragons and evil dragonborn flock to Tiamat's banner, eager to serve their dark queen, and dragonspawn and drakes walk alongside the armies as well.

Most creatures belonging to the Red Hand display their loyalty with the group's symbol painted on a tunic or shield: a crimson hand, its five fingers pointed upward. Some also display draconic characteristics, such as scales, fangs, or claws.

Skill Modifications: +2 bonus to Intimidate checks and Perception checks.

Attack Powers

These powers call to mind the most formidable weapons of the dragon: fear and destruction.

Bloodied Recharge

This power makes any creature feel like a dragon by allowing it to reuse a key power when it becomes bloodied. A bodak skulk with bloodied recharge can unleash an extra and unexpected death gaze.

Bloodied Recharge (free, when first bloodied; encounter)
One of this creature's encounter attack powers recharges, and this creature uses it.

Dragon Breath

A single monster that has dragon breath might not make much of an impression . . . but a horde of such monsters does. Use this power with brutes, controllers, skirmishers, and soldiers to achieve the best result. Kobold dragonshields with dragon breath keyed to the dragon they serve can use this power without worrying about damaging each other.

Dragon Breath (minor; encounter) ✦ Varies
Close blast 3; level + 1 vs. Reflex; 1d8 damage. Choose acid, cold, fire, lightning, or poison when a creature receives this power. This power deals damage of that type.
Level 11: 2d8 damage.
Level 21: 3d8 damage.

Frightful Presence

This is a great opening attack for controllers, lurkers, and soldiers because it leaves characters reeling while the monster's allies pour in. Add this to a wyvern and keep its enemies on their toes.

Frightful Presence (standard; encounter) ✦ Fear
Close burst 3; targets enemies; level + 3 vs. Will; the target is stunned until the end of this creature's next turn.

Tiamat's Will

Dragons often keep a trusted servant (preferably a leader) that has this power nearby, usually safely out of melee. An elder red dragon might be accompanied by a pair of fire giant forgecallers blessed with Tiamat's will.

Tiamat's Will (standard; encounter)
Ranged 10; targets one dragon or dragonborn that has breath weapon or dragon breath; the target's breath weapon or dragon breath recharges.

CHIPPY

Utility Powers

The utility powers of Tiamat's Red Hand support the teamwork and loyalty common among her cults.

Chromatic Boon

Give this to any brute, skirmisher, or soldier likely to be caught in an ally's burst or blast (such as dragon breath). A team of dragonborn soldiers with chromatic boon can use dragon breath without fear of including their allies in the blast.

Chromatic Boon (immediate interrupt, when an enemy hits or misses this creature; encounter)
The creature gains resist 5 acid, resist 5 cold, resist 5 fire, resist 5 lightning, or resist 5 poison until the end of the encounter.

Devour Minion

A big brute, controller, or soldier that has this power and plenty of minions around changes the tenor of battle; now, those minions aren't just annoyances. A young white dragon can use devour minion on its large supply of kobold minions for a boost during combat.

Devour Minion (minor; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃)
This creature reduces one adjacent minion ally that is smaller than it to 0 hit points. This creature gains temporary hit points equal to 5 + the minion's level.

For the Master

The more monsters that have this power the better, so give it to a bunch of minions or brutes for maximum effect. For example, when they are not being devoured by their young white dragon master, a horde of kobold minions that have for the master can prove daunting.

For the Master
This creature gains a +1 bonus to attack rolls while it is within 5 squares of a dragon. This creature is considered a dragon and a dragonborn for the purpose of the effects of allies' powers.

Telepathic Warning

Primarily a story element, this power doesn't affect combat . . . unless, of course, the dragon master is near enough to join the fray. Having a few well-placed kobold slyblades with telepathic warning throughout a dragon's lair can ensure that their master isn't taken by surprise.

Telepathic Warning (standard; encounter)
This creature sends a short message to a dragon that is up to 1 mile away. This creature can also use this power as a free action when it drops to 0 hit points, even if has already expended the power.

Dragonborn Gladiator of Tiamat Level 10 Soldier

⊕ Bastard Sword (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+15 vs. AC (+16 while bloodied); see also lone fighter; 1d10 + 5 damage.

⸸ Finishing Blow (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Target must be bloodied; +15 vs. AC (+16 while bloodied); 2d10 + 5 damage, and the dragonborn gladiator's allies gain a +2 bonus to attack rolls until the end of the dragonborn gladiator's next turn.

✧ Dragon Breath (minor; encounter) ✦ Fire
Close blast 3; +12 vs. Reflex (+13 while bloodied); 1d6 + 4 fire damage.

✧ Frightful Presence (standard; encounter) ✦ Fear
Close burst 3; targets enemies; +10 vs. Will; the target is stunned until the end of the dragonborn gladiator's next turn.

Chromatic Boon (immediate interrupt, when an enemy hits or misses this creature; encounter)
The dragonborn gladiator gains resist 5 acid, resist 5 cold, resist 5 fire, resist 5 lightning, or resist 5 poison until the end of the encounter.

Dragonborn Fury (only while bloodied)
A dragonborn gains a +1 racial bonus to attack rolls.

Gladiator's Strike
When a dragonborn gladiator hits an enemy with an opportunity attack, the target is knocked prone.

Lone Fighter
The dragonborn gladiator gains a +2 bonus to melee attack rolls while adjacent to only one enemy.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common, Draconic
Skills Athletics +15, History +7, Intimidate +17, Perception +8

- ✦ 2 redspawn firebelchers (level 12 artillery; Monster Manual, page 88)

Templates

A template adds features to a monster, making it more powerful in a number of ways—it increases a monster's hit points, its saving throws, and the number of powers it has, its action points, and, in the case of a class-based template, its defenses. Frequently it grants battlefield functionality and story considerations the monster didn't have before.

Typically, you give a template to a monster when you want it to have a special impact in your game. Monsters with templates can serve as elite guards, spies, favored beasts, chief lieutenants of major villains, or just about anything out of the ordinary.

The two types of templates are functional templates and class templates. A functional template allows you to customize a creature to fulfill a story or combat role. Some functional templates allow you to change some aspect of the creature's nature (for instance, the terrifying haunt template transforms a living creature into an undead one) while others provide a number of abilities that allow the creature to epitomize a certain monster theme. A functional template can work well with a monster theme (discussed in the earlier part of this chapter), and you can use one to create an elite or a solo monster that serves as a "boss" monster or generate a powerful creature within the theme.

A class template grants a creature a limited number of feature and powers from a class, allowing you to flavor the creature to that class without having to treat it like a player character. With the release of the Forgotten Realms® Player's Guide and Player's Handbook 2, nine new classes have been added to the game. Toward the end of this section, you'll find templates for the classes from these two books.

Applying a Template

Full details for applying templates to creatures are provided starting on page 175 of the Dungeon Master's Guide. The basic procedure is outlined below.

Templates work best when you apply them to a creature that is not a minion, elite, or solo creature. When you apply a template to a standard creature, the template upgrades the creature to elite. Follow these steps when applying a template to a standard creature.

- Make sure the monster meets the prerequisite of the template.
- Change the creature's role to the one specified in the template entry.
- Change the creature's type and origin, if applicable, and add any keywords specified in the keyword entry.
- Go through the template line by line and add all the new features and powers given in the template entry.
- If a monster has a vulnerability and the template grants a resistance of the same type, combine them and apply the difference. For example, a creature that has vulnerability 5 fire and is granted resist 10 fire by a template would now have resist 5 fire.
- If the template grants an encounter power the monster has already, the monster gains two uses of that encounter power.

You can apply two templates to a standard monster, or apply a template to an elite monster and thereby make it a solo creature, but do so with care. In many cases, finding or designing a solo creature can serve your purposes better than constructing one through a template. If working with a template (or two) is a better option for the situation, apply the template or templates, but do not change the monster's defenses, hit points, saving throws, and action points. Then make the following adjustments.

- Don't add the hit points that the template specifies to an elite creature to make it solo. Instead, double the creature's hit points, or, if the elite creature is 11th level or higher, multiply its hit points by 2.5.
- Class templates also provide defense bonuses to the creature. When applying a class template's bonuses to defenses to a creature that has two class templates, apply only the higher bonus to each defense rather than stacking the bonuses.
- A solo creature's bonus to saving throws becomes +5.
- Solo creatures have 2 action points.

FUNCTIONAL TEMPLATES

Functional templates allow you to add story and combat hooks to your monsters. Many functional templates allow the monster to work more smoothly with monster themes, such as the ones presented earlier in this chapter, or with the less implicit themes that already exist in the various Monster Manuals and other game supplements. A functional template might grant leader powers to an ordinary creature, or make it a unique and truly fearsome foe.

Like all templates, each of the following functional templates transforms the modified creature into an elite monster—a force to be reckoned with on the game table.

Beast of Demogorgon

Blindly destructive and insanely bloodthirsty, these two-headed mutants are revered as the "blessed" of the demon lord by the insane cults that serve him. In most cases, a cult of Demogorgon creates these odd two-headed mutants by using torture and agonizing rituals. Other times, the evil forces of the Abyss warp these creatures and thrust them out into the world. No matter the method of their creation, these creatures are the focus of fear, awe, and reverence among the demented worshipers of the demon lord, and they hold a place of honor . . . though they are frequently bound to that place by chains and other protections until the beast is needed for its master's work.

When you apply this template, the subject of the template gains an extra head.

Prerequisite: A one-headed beast or magical beast.

| Beast of Demogorgon | Elite Brute XP Elite |
|---|---|

Senses All-around vision
Hit Points +8 per level + Constitution score
Saving Throws +2, +4 against fear
Action Points 1

Double Bite (standard; at-will)
If the creature this template is applied to already has a bite melee basic attack, it can make two of those attacks with a standard action. If it does not have a bite melee basic attack, it gains the following attack:

Bite (standard; at-will)
Level + 3 vs. AC; 1d8 + Strength modifier.
Level 11: 2d8 + Strength modifier.
Level 21: 3d8 + Strength modifier.

Rage of Demogorgon (when first bloodied; encounter) ✦ Healing
The beast of Demogorgon gains regeneration 5 and scores a critical hit on a roll of 18–20 until it is no longer bloodied or drops to 0 hit points.
Level 21: Regeneration 10.

Champion of Bane

When Bane sends his followers marching on the world, he puts one of his special champions in the lead. These fierce warlords epitomize the devotion to pure tyranny and carnage that Bane desires. They can resist the effect of fear-based attacks, and inspire that same emotion among their troops. These soldiers become tougher the closer they are to the brink of death, and they fight on even after receiving a mortal wound.

Prerequisite: Humanoid or magical beast.

| Champion of Bane Humanoid or magical beast | Elite Soldier (Leader) XP Elite |
|---|---|

Tyrant's Blessing aura 3; each bloodied ally within the aura deals 1d6 extra damage with melee attacks.
Hit Points +8 per level + Constitution score
Saving Throws +2, +4 against fear and charm effects
Action Points 1

Last Command (immediate interrupt, when an ally within 10 squares of the champion of Bane drops to 0 hit points; at-will)
The triggering ally can make a melee basic attack as a free action with a +2 bonus to the attack roll.

Inspiring Carnage (minor; recharge ⚅)
Close burst 3; targets allies; the target can make a melee basic attack as a free action.

Chaos Warrior

Chaos can destroy. It can also corrupt. When chaos corrupts a creature, the creature becomes a killing machine infused with elemental energy. These corrupted creatures are known as chaos warriors.

Chaos warrior

EVA WIDERMANN

Chaos warriors sometimes gain this strange boon from a primordial or a powerful servant of one. Mere contact with the Elemental Chaos or a part of the world touched with intense elemental energy can transform a creature. Whatever the source of the boon, a chaos warrior not only takes on some of the powers of its elemental masters, including an elementally charged breath weapon, but it also adopts the destructive behavior and entropic desires that mark primordials and their servants.

Prerequisite: Humanoid.

| Chaos Warrior | Elite Brute |
|---|---|
| Humanoid | XP Elite |

Destructive Wake aura 5; each enemy within the aura takes a –5 penalty to saving throws against ongoing damage.
Hit Points +10 per level + Constitution score
Resist 5 variable (1/encounter)
Level 11: 10 variable (1/encounter)
Level 21: 15 variable (2/encounter)
Saving Throws +2
Action Points 1

Devastating Assault
Whenever a chaos warrior hits with a charge attack or hits a creature granting combat advantage to it, the attack also deals ongoing 5 damage (save ends).
Level 11: Ongoing 10 damage.
Level 21: Ongoing 15 damage.

Destabilizing Breath (standard; encounter) ✦ Varies
Close blast 5; level + 3 vs. AC; 2d6 + Constitution modifier cold, fire, lightning, or thunder damage, and the target takes ongoing 5 damage of that type and a –2 penalty to AC and Fortitude (save ends both).
Level 11: Ongoing 10 damage.
Level 21: 3d6 + Constitution modifier damage and ongoing 15 damage.

Cursed Guardian

Although some guardians are willing servants, others are pressed into service by strange magic, and through that magic they can sometimes gain terrifying powers.

Cursed guardian

Creatures with this template can have varying origins and be affected by it in different ways. The following template has a Far Realm theme, but by slightly changing to its recharge attack power, you can create a different application for this template. For instance, by changing the ongoing damage of soul siphon to fire, you can make the modified creature into an infernal-themed cursed guardian.

Prerequisite: Humanoid or magical beast.

| Cursed Guardian | Elite Soldier |
|---|---|
| Humanoid or magical beast | XP Elite |

Soul Void aura 1; each enemy that starts its turn within the aura can't spend action points until the end of its next turn.
Hit Points +8 per level + Constitution score
Saving Throws +2; +4 against fear and charm effects
Action Points 1

Beckoning Gaze (minor 1/round; at-will) ✦ Gaze
Ranged 3; level + 5 vs. Will; the target is pulled 3 squares and marked (save ends).

Caged Mind
A cursed guardian that is dominated is instead dazed for the same duration that the dominated effect would have.

Soul Siphon (free, when the cursed guardian hits an enemy with a ranged attack; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Psychic
That enemy takes ongoing 5 psychic damage and is dazed (save ends both).
Level 11: Ongoing 10 psychic damage.
Level 21: Ongoing 15 psychic damage.

Dragontouched Destroyer

A dragontouched destroyer is fused with the power of dragons to make a rampaging scaly machine of death that serves among the hosts of those who follow Tiamat.

Some dragontouched destroyers are created from corrupted dragon eggs that produce these hybrid creatures instead of true dragons. Others are shaped by agonizing rituals performed by the priests of Tiamat on those who dared to steal from the Queen of Evil Dragonkind or her faithful.

A dragontouched destroyer is a brute in mind and body. Cowed and trained to follow the orders of a commander, be that a warlord of the Red Hand, a priest of Tiamat, or anyone else in a position of leadership, the destroyer wades through its foes with claw, tooth, and its dangerous spewing breath. It fights ferociously until it or its commander is dead.

Prerequisite: Beast, humanoid, or magical beast.

LUCIO PARRILLO

Dragontouched destroyer

| Dragontouched Destroyer | Elite Brute |
|---|---|
| Beast, humanoid, or magical beast | XP Elite |

Senses Darkvision
Hit Points +10 per level + Constitution score
Saving Throws +2
Action Points 1

⊕ Bite (standard; at-will)
Level + 2 vs. AC; 1d8 + Strength modifier damage, and ongoing 5 damage (save ends). If the modified creature already has a bite basic attack, increase the damage of this template's bite attack or the creature's original bite attack (whichever deals more damage) by one die step.

⸸ Claw (standard; at-will)
Level + 2 vs. AC; 1d6 + Strength modifier damage, and the target is knocked prone. If the modified creature already has a claw attack, increase the damage of this template's claw attack or the creature's original claw attack (whichever deals more damage) by one die step.

✧ Destroyer's Breath (standard; encounter) ✦ Varies
Close blast 3; level + 2 vs. Reflex; 2d10 + Constitution modifier damage. Choose acid, cold, fire, lightning, or poison when a creature receives this power. This power deals damage of that type.
Level 11: 3d10 + Constitution modifier damage.
Level 21: Close blast 5, and 4d10 + Constitution modifier damage.

Bloodied Breath (free, when first bloodied; encounter)
Destroyer's breath recharges, and the destroyer uses it.

Grizzled Veteran

A grizzled veteran is a survivor—rough around the edges, tough as nails, and both deadly and decisive. When the going gets dangerous, a grizzled veteran is someone you want on your side. Often, though, a veteran's survivalist nature comes into conflict with the idealism that drives adventurers. When you are always looking out for number one, everyone else is a potential enemy.

Unlike other more villainous templates, the grizzled veteran works best when applied to an NPC the PCs have worked with before or have even learned to trust. Its tough and tricky nature makes the NPC's betrayal that much more painful.

Prerequisite: Humanoid.

| Grizzled Veteran | Elite Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Humanoid | XP Elite |

Hit Points +8 per level + Constitution score
Saving Throws +2
Action Points 1

⸸ Dirty Trick (minor 1/round; at-will)
No attack roll; the target grants combat advantage to the veteran until the end of the veteran's next turn.

⸸ Veteran's Retort (immediate reaction, when an enemy misses the grizzled veteran with a melee attack; at-will)
The grizzled veteran makes a melee basic attack against the triggering enemy.

Veteran's Luck (minor; encounter)
The grizzled veteran makes a saving throw against each effect on it that a save can end.

Combat Advantage
A grizzled veteran deals 1d6 extra damage against any target granting combat advantage to it, and after the attack, the grizzled veteran can shift 2 squares as a free action.

Skills The grizzled veteran gains training in Bluff.

Hellbound Soldier

Although many creatures take on pacts with the powers of the Nine Hells for their own benefit, some beings make deals with devils to avoid death or defeat. Warriors who are on the verge of death or generals who are about to lose everything sometimes call upon infernal powers to save their lives or the day on the battlefield. Those who take this path serve as hellbound soldiers, powerful pawns in the armies of the Nine Hells.

Hellbound soldiers are pitiful beings who vocally lament their service and choice with each swipe of their blade. They are powerless to resist the will of their diabolical masters.

Prerequisite: Nondevil humanoid.

JASON A. ENGLE

| Hellbound Soldier | Elite Soldier |
|---|---|
| Humanoid | XP Elite |

Hit Points +8 per level + Constitution score
Resist 5 fire
Level 11: Resist 10 fire.
Level 21: Resist 15 fire.
Saving Throws +2
Action Points 1

Devilish Mark (minor; at-will) ✦ Fire
The target is marked until the end of the hellbound soldier's next turn. If the marked target makes an attack that does not include the hellbound soldier, it takes 5 fire damage.
Level 11: 10 fire damage.
Level 21: 20 fire damage.

Agonizing Smite (free, when the hellbound soldier hits a target it has marked with a melee attack; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Fire
The attack deals ongoing 5 fire damage, and the target is dazed (save ends both). Aftereffect: The target takes ongoing 5 damage (save ends).
Level 11: Ongoing 10 damage.
Level 21: Ongoing 15 damage.

Devil's Pawn
When a devil adjacent to the hellbound soldier takes damage, that damage is reduced by 10, and the hellbound soldier takes 10 damage.

Hellbound soldier

Mad alchemist

Mad Alchemist

Alchemists can be a little off kilter by nature, but years of pondering esoteric formulas and inhaling or imbibing the results of one too many experiments gone wrong can send even the sanest alchemist over reason's edge. Though they are masters of their craft, mad alchemists dabble in unstable and bizarre formulas that explode with strange effects. Sometimes even they are surprised by the mad effects they create with their admixtures, elixirs, and concoctions.

Prerequisites: Humanoid or magical beast, Intelligence 12.

Mad Alchemist and Alchemy

If you have access to Adventurer's Vault, you can customize the mad alchemist by swapping out the alchemist fire power with another volatile alchemical item of its level or near it. If you want a more complicated mad alchemist, you could even give one two different types of volatile alchemical items to throw during combat.

RAVEN MIMURA/KEREM BEYIT

Mad Alchemist Elite Artillery (Leader)
Humanoid or magical beast XP Elite

Hit Points +8 per level + Constitution score
Resist 5 poison
Level 11: Resist 10 poison.
Level 21: Resist 15 poison.
Saving Throws +2; +4 against fear and charm effects
Action Points 1

Alchemist Fire (standard; at-will) ✦ Fire
Area burst 1 within 10; level + 3 vs. Reflex; 2d6 fire damage. Miss: Half damage.
Level 11: 3d6 damage.
Level 21: 4d6 damage.

Toughening Concoction (minor; recharge ⚅)
Close burst 3; targets allies; the target gains 1d6 temporary hit points (roll once and apply the temporary hit points to all allies) and a +2 bonus to AC and Fortitude until the end of the mad alchemist's next turn.
Level 11: 2d6 temporary hit points.
Level 21: 3d6 temporary hit points.

Unstable Admixtures
Each time the mad alchemist scores a critical hit with its alchemist fire (or any swapped alchemical power; see the sidebar), or grants temporary hit points to three or more allies with toughening concoction, it gains another random effect from its power. Roll a d6 and consult the following table. The effect applies to one enemy hit by the alchemist fire power, or one enemy within the burst of the toughening concoction power. If multiple targets are available, the alchemist chooses which target is affected.

| Roll | Effect |
|---|---|
| 1 | The target is dazed (save ends). |
| 2 | The target takes 5 ongoing poison damage (save ends). Increase the ongoing damage by 5 per tier. |
| 3 | The target gains vulnerable 5 cold, fire, lightning, poison, or thunder (mad alchemist's choice) (save ends). Increase the vulnerability by 5 per tier. |
| 4 | The target is immobilized (save ends). Aftereffect: The target is slowed (save ends). |
| 5 | The target is blinded (save ends). |
| 6 | The target is polymorphed into a frog (save ends). While in this form, it is slowed and dazed, and cannot make attacks or use powers. |

Slithering Idol

The corrupt and degenerate yuan-ti are fervent followers of Zehir, the god of poison and serpents. When a cult or cabal of these snake-worshiping mutants is blessed by their dark god, they are served and protected by a slithering idol—a physical manifestation of Zehir's favor. Powerful, nimble, and able to calm the violent urges of enemies around them, these snake hybrids can take many forms, but the one they prefer is that of a giant snake. Many yuan-ti revere these creatures as walking gods, and the zealous lay down their lives in an instant to protect the existence of a slithering idol.

Prerequisite: Beast (reptile), humanoid, or magical beast.

Slithering Idol Elite Skirmisher (Leader)
Beast (reptile), humanoid, or magical beast XP Elite

Senses Low-light vision
Slither Blessing aura 5; each ally within the aura ignores difficult terrain when shifting.
Hit Points +8 per level + Constitution score
Resist 5 poison
Level 11: Resist 10 poison.
Level 21: Resist 15 poison.
Saving Throws +2
Action Points 1

Hypnotic Eyes (minor 1/round; at-will) ✦ Charm
Ranged 5; level + 5 vs. Will; the target can't make opportunity attacks (save ends).

Slither Shift (move; at-will)
The slithering idol shifts 3 squares, ignoring difficult terrain.

STEVE ARGYLE

Slithering idol

Spectral Assassin

Skillful killers move with the stealth of a ghost, and the best take on the aspect of one. Through an ancient ritual, mystical training, or the blessing of a dark power, spectral assassins gain the ability to walk through walls and avoid enemy attacks by turning into a whiff of insubstantial mist. Worse still, when they manifest, their weapon's strike is murder.

Prerequisite: Humanoid.

| Spectral Assassin | Elite Lurker |
|---|---|
| Humanoid | XP Elite |

Initiative +4 (or +2 if the modified creature is a lurker)
Hit Points +6 per level + Constitution score
Saving Throws +2
Action Points 1

Assassin's Fading (immediate interrupt, when an enemy makes a melee or ranged attack against the spectral assassin; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞) ✦ Illusion
The spectral assassin becomes invisible until the end of its next turn, and it can shift 1 square as a free action.

Combat Advantage
A spectral assassin deals 2d6 extra damage against any target granting combat advantage to it.
Level 21: 3d8 extra damage.

Invisible Killer
While invisible, a spectral assassin scores a critical hit on a roll of 19-20 and deals 1d10 extra damage with a critical hit.

Skills Stealth +4

Spiderblessed Spinner

Lolth, Queen of Spiders and Mistress of Intrigue, is known for blessing those whom she finds worthy with an aspect of the arachnids that she holds dear. Transformation into a drider is one such blessing typically reserved for her favored drow agents; the spiderblessed spinner is another that Lolth applies more freely to those who follow her. In a painful transformation process, the host grows extra eyes, six spiderlike appendages, and spinnerets on another part of their body—usually the host's natural hands. The creature uses these new tools to control and wreak havoc on the battlefield, where it binds foes in webs and pushes those who dare approach toward the sword point of other agents of the Queen of Spiders.

Prerequisites: Humanoid or magical beast, level 11.

| Spiderblessed Spinner | Elite Controller |
|---|---|
| Humanoid or magical beast | XP Elite |

Senses All-around vision; darkvision
Hit Points +8 per level + Constitution score
Saving Throws +2; +4 against poison effects
Action Points 1

Repelling Legs (standard; at-will)
Close burst 1; targets enemies; level + 3 vs. Fortitude; 2d6 + Strength modifier damage, and the target is pushed 3 squares.

Poison Web of Lolth (standard; encounter) ✦ Poison
Area burst 2 within 10; level + 3 vs. Reflex; 3d10 + Constitution modifier poison damage, and the target is grabbed. The target takes a -4 penalty to attempts to escape the grab.

Spider's Escape (immediate interrupt, when hit with a melee attack; recharge ⁞⁞)
The spiderblessed spinner shifts 4 squares and can move through enemy spaces during the shift.

Terrifying Haunt

Ghosts can come in many forms. Some are cursed to roam until a past sin is righted, or a wrong undone. Others are merely the animus of hate, raging eternally in undying terror. A terrifying haunt is a particularly hateful and enduring form of ghost. These ghosts can take any shape, but one thing is common to every one of them—it hates the living and uses its powers to spread fear and death to any living creature that dares cross its path.

Victim of the Mad Dance

The korred (see Manual of the Planes, page 135) are masters of ecstatic dance. Their music is so enchanting that some who stumble upon their heathered hills dance themselves to death. Others become deeply enthralled and enslaved by the maddening rhythms, and they take on the savage ways of the korred and other deadly fey.

A victim of the mad dance has embraced its plight, embodying the deadly jig of the korred and other fey enraptured by the dancing lunacy of the Feywild.

Mad Dance (standard; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞)
The victim of the mad dance shifts its speed and makes a melee basic attack.

Insane Resolve (minor; recharge ⁞⁞)
The victim of the mad dance makes saving throws against each effect on it that a save can end.

Combat Advantage
A victim of the mad dance knocks prone any target granting combat advantage to it when it hits with a melee attack.

CLASS TEMPLATES

These templates feature the classes from Player's Handbook 2 and the Forgotten Realms Player's Guide. Follow the normal method for applying a template, and choose powers for the monster from the class. Here are general guidelines on how to do this.

- At-Will Attack Powers: Typically you'll pick one. Sometimes you might want to choose more, but do so sparingly. Pick two when you apply the druid template, since druids split their at-will attacks between their normal form and beast form.
- Encounter Attack Powers: Choose one power of a level equal to or lower than the monster's level. For monsters of 21st level or higher, choose one additional encounter power. You can't take two powers of the same level.
- Daily Attack Powers: Choose one power of a level equal to or lower than the monster's level. For monsters of 21st level or higher, choose one additional daily power. You can't take two powers of the same level.
- Utility Powers: Choose one power of a level equal to or lower than the monster's level. For monsters of 11th level or higher, choose one additional utility power. For monsters of 21st level or higher, select a third utility power. You can't have more than one power of the same level.

The possible downside to applying a class template is that you'll end up with a complicated monster that has a potentially overwhelming number of powers. Sometimes this is fine, because these templates work best for memorable elite monsters that should be harder to beat and have more resources available to them. At the same time, don't be afraid to simplify these monsters when you can. If a single utility power is enough to make your frost giant warden interesting, don't feel as though you have to use the other features of the warden template.

Monster-Making Tips

Creating new monsters brings risks. Look out for these pitfalls when creating monsters and encounters.

Effects that Take Away Actions: The dazed and stunned conditions (and to a lesser extent, immobilized and restrained) should be used sparingly.

Effects that Reduce Damage Output: The weakened condition and monsters with insubstantial or swarm traits can be interesting problems for characters to deal with, but being weakened for the majority of a fight just isn't fun! Make sure you use these abilities only in diverse monster groups, so the PCs aren't all dealing low damage.

Too Much Healing: Monsters shouldn't have a strong ability to heal themselves, especially not in large amounts (such as a healing surge). It can make a fight drag, or even turn it into a stalemate.

Repetitious Resistances: Remember what damage types your PCs use, and use a variety of resistances. If your group has a fire wizard, don't throw the group against only azers for several encounters in a row.

Stealing Resources: Avoid monsters that take away or turn off the PCs' resources, such as healing surges, limited-use powers, or magic items.

Action Points 1
Hit Points +8 per level + Constitution score
Weapon Proficiency Simple melee, military light blades, military heavy blades, simple ranged
Armor Proficiency Cloth, leather
Trained Skills Arcana, plus one other skill from the swordmage class skills list
Class Features Swordbond, Swordmage Aegis, Swordmage Warding
Implements Any light blades or heavy blades

Warden

Power Source: Primal.

Warden — Elite Soldier

Defenses +1 Fortitude, +1 Will
Saving Throws +2
Action Points 1
Hit Points +8 per level + Constitution score
Weapon Proficiency Simple melee, military melee, simple ranged
Armor Proficiency Cloth, leather, hide, light shield, heavy shield
Trained Skills Nature, plus one other skill from the warden class skills list
Class Features Font of Life, Guardian Might, Nature's Wrath

Creating Monsters

More art than science, monster creation can be tricky—and it's about more than just the numbers.

Monster Manual 2 introduces a few tweaks to monster creation, particularly for elites, solo monsters, and minions. Use the following information to supplement what's presented on page 184 of the Dungeon Master's Guide.

Creating New Elites

Elites no longer gain additional bonuses to all defenses. Instead, follow the same rules as for standard monsters. If you want to adjust an older monster to use the same scale, dropping all its defenses by 2 can work in a pinch (but might be a bit generous to the PCs).

Creating New Solos

The creation of solo monsters has changed in three major ways.

Hit Points: Multiply hit points by 4. Monsters of 11th level or higher no longer have quintuple hit points.

Defenses: Solos no longer gain extra bonuses to all defenses. Use the same defenses as for a standard monster.

Better When Bloodied: This type of change isn't as straightforward. When a solo monster is bloodied, it should become more dangerous and more mobile. Add a couple of abilities from the following list to reflect this advantage.

- Recharge one or more limited powers, and possibly use one right away (such as a dragon's bloodied breath power).
- Gain an at-will attack that deals more damage, or deal more damage with all attacks while bloodied.
- Gain an extra attack per round (as a minor action, part of a multiple attack power, or a larger area or close power).
- Gain a damaging aura.
- Move after becoming bloodied, or gain a new movement power. Movement might include shifting, teleportation, flight, or phasing—anything to keep the fight from becoming static.

These guidelines are intended to make the monster feel more deadly, but without allowing the fight to get too long. Therefore, don't give a monster additional hit points or higher defenses when it's bloodied.

Creating New Minions

Expendable fodder, minions appear in big groups with the sole purpose of dying quickly and making the PCs feel cool. They should have simple mechanics to match, and they also have roles to make it easier to determine the types of combat tactics they use.

You can create a new minion from scratch, or remove abilities from a standard monster to make a simpler minion. Most steps in creating a minion (including setting defenses and attack bonuses, as well as determining its role) are the same as for a standard monster, with the following exceptions.

1. Adjust Hit Points: All minions have 1 hit point, and a missed attack never damages a minion.

2. Keep It Simple: Minion abilities shouldn't require record-keeping. For instance, a minion's attack shouldn't have an effect that a save can end, nor should it have recharge abilities (and probably not encounter abilities). Immediate action powers are also rare. Some exceptions, though, are fine: A goblin minion might have the immediate action goblin tactics power so that it still feels like a goblin.

3. Set Damage for Attacks: Use the Minion Damage by Level table to set damage amounts for a minion's attacks. Remember that minions don't use dice for damage, just flat values. Minion damage is roughly half of a standard creature's damage.

MINION DAMAGE BY LEVEL

| Level | Standard Damage | Brute Damage |
|---|---|---|
| 1st-3rd | 4 | 5 |
| 4th-6th | 5 | 6 |
| 7th-9th | 6 | 7 |
| 10th-12th | 8 | 10 |
| 13th-15th | 9 | 11 |
| 16th-18th | 10 | 12 |
| 19th-21st | 11 | 13 |
| 22nd-24th | 13 | 16 |
| 25th-27th | 14 | 17 |
| 28th-30th | 15 | 18 |

Artillery minions deal 25% less damage on multitarget and melee attacks. At the heroic tier, four minions are equivalent to one standard monster. Five minions are equivalent to one standard monster at the paragon tier, and six at epic. Design encounters at the paragon tier with five minions of a given type instead of four, and at the epic tier with six minions instead of five.

Adventures

Chapters 6–8 of the Dungeon Master's Guide cover creating and running adventures, weaving them into campaigns, and rewarding players. This chapter expands on the information presented in that book. The range of topics presented here can help you create exciting, immersive stories and epic campaigns for your players' enjoyment.

- Alternative Rewards: Sometimes player characters appreciate rewards that are less tangible than a magic item or monetary reward. This section discusses divine and legendary boons and grandmaster training, which function like magic items but allow you to tell different stories in your game.
- Item Components: As an alternative to simply handing out magic items, you can require characters to gather the ingredients of an item and assemble it to earn their treasure.
- Artifacts: Building on the four artifacts presented in the Dungeon Master's Guide, this section further discusses how to use artifacts and presents seven new artifacts. Unique artifacts in this section include a few designed to benefit a whole party of characters and one intended to remain relevant for an entire campaign.
- Organizations: This section discusses how to add depth to your campaign with organizations, such as villainous groups, rivals to the player characters, and friendly organizations that might be patrons to the characters.
- Campaign Arcs: The chapter concludes with four example campaign arcs—broad storylines for campaigns that take characters from levels 1–30. This section gives special emphasis to the paragon tier, leading into the paragon campaign material presented in the next chapter.

ALTERNATIVE REWARDS

Brother Allwen pushed the ogre's corpse from atop the altar to Kord. How could this chapel have remained hidden in the dungeon depths for so long? As he pulled out his holy symbol to begin the ceremony of consecration, a voice roared out, "Truly you are the worthiest of my clerics! Accept this boon of strength and might!"

Nerrida dashed past Grissom as the dragon died, reaching for the iron flask she kept on her belt. With just a few drops of the beast's boiling blood, she could imbue her staff with the spirit of the seventh fire.

The old gnome whom Sherrek had rescued from an orc prison treated Sherrek like a snot-nosed beginner rather than a seasoned adventurer, but he seemed to have skills to teach. "You hold that dagger like a blind kobold. And I don't want to start on how you dodged those arrows. You're lucky you don't have one dangling out of your eye socket. I, Vallario Seven-Cuts, shall teach you the fine art of the blade."

In a D&D game, rewards can take on a wide variety of forms. Your players might most appreciate piles of gold coins and glimmering magic weapons, but characters in books, movies, and comics rarely receive such rewards. Who wants to always read about a boring miser who counts his coins or a brute who believes his magic sword makes him the greatest warrior in the world?

Stories and characters do draw on such themes, but for your game, consider those themes the exception rather than the rule. In D&D campaigns, DMs can award treasure as a pat on the back for a job well done. Treasure acts as a reward that boosts power in addition to that gained with a new level. A hard-fought, tense victory over a troll horde feels greater if the trolls' treasure chest contains magic armor a PC desires.

Yet not every fight plays out as a tense, life-or-death affair, and not every treasure chest contains items the PCs want. This section discusses variant rules for treasure, with a focus on more story-focused rewards that can increase the sense of mystery and wonder in your game. Players might find it more interesting if, instead of treasure, you hand out a boon from the gods or an offer of training from the world's greatest fencing master.

CHOOSING REWARD LEVELS

To make alternative rewards feel special, use them to replace the highest-level magic items you would otherwise give out. If you plan to give 10th-level characters two alternative rewards and two items, use rewards to replace parcels 1 and 2 (a level 14 item and a level 13 item), and use items for parcels 3 and 4 (the level 12 and level 11 items). Over time, the characters acquire items of a higher level than their alternative rewards. In the short term, this approach makes alternative rewards feel appropriately weighty.

Overview

The alternative rewards presented in this section share the following rules characteristics:

- An alternative reward replaces a magic item. When you place treasure parcels, you can use an alternative reward in place of an item.
- You can use alternative rewards alongside traditional magic items. Without additional changes to the rules, you should replace one magic item per level with an alternative reward. Optional rules later in this section explain how to make alternative rewards more prevalent.
- These rewards occupy the same mechanical space as magic items. They balance on the same power curve and aim at the same place within the body of a character's abilities.
- An alternative reward lasts for five levels of play and then fades. This rule applies because characters normally sell or replace items as they gain levels. Alternative rewards occupy the same space in the game, so a similar process applies to them. However, see "Decide on Duration" on page 138 for exceptions to this rule.

Reward Types

This section describes three types of alternative rewards: divine boons, legendary boons, and grandmaster training. These reward categories reflect three iconic stories of how and why characters earn such rewards.

Divine Boons

Individuals who aid a deity's holy cause receive wondrous, divine gifts. A particularly blessed character, or one who earns a deity's gratitude, can gain a divine boon.

Legendary Boons

Great deeds can confer wondrous powers on individuals. A character could earn a legendary boon by bathing in the blood of an ancient dragon, reading a tome of esoteric knowledge, or solving the riddle of an immortal sphinx.

Grandmaster Training

The absolute master of a craft, such as an archmage or the greatest living swordmaster, can teach techniques and abilities that transcend a character's normal limits.

How Rewards Work

An alternative reward works the same as a magic item, except it doesn't take up a item slot or require a character to hold it, because it isn't a physical object. In addition, characters can't buy, sell, or disenchant a reward. (They might be able to "enchant" an alternative reward using a ritual comparable to the Enchant Magic Item ritual; see "A Reward-Based Game" on page 138 for more details.)

Alternative rewards never grant enhancement bonuses. Characters must still rely on magic items to gain enhancement bonuses to attack rolls and damage rolls, AC, and other defenses. An alternative reward can replicate any other property or power granted by a magic item, including item bonuses. If you use a magic item property that gives an item bonus as an alternative reward, the bonus still counts as an item bonus. Do not associate the alternative reward's bonus with a physical item, and don't stack the alternative reward's item bonus with other item bonuses to the same statistic.

Otherwise, treat a reward the same as you would an item. Using an alternative reward's daily power works the same as using a magic item's daily power, and it counts against a character's limit of item daily power uses between milestones.

Creating a Reward

An alternative reward replaces a magic item the characters would otherwise find. Pick the magic item parcel you want to replace, and use the item's level as the reward's level. Then follow these four steps to create an ideal reward for your characters and your campaign.

1. Create the Story: Choose one of the types of rewards detailed in this section and use the advice included for it to create a story and other background details for the reward.

Don't underestimate the importance of this step. A reward shares the same basic mechanics as a magic item. Without a good story to back it up, a reward might seem like merely a magic item that the characters can't sell or trade. Read over the advice given for each type of reward, and think about how to create a compelling experience for the players.

Alternative rewards offer you a chance to bring your world to life. They connect a player's desire for magic loot with your desire to create a vivid, entertaining story and game world.

2. Plant the (Story) Seeds: A reward works best when it is woven seamlessly into the story, especially if the characters have to work hard to gain it or make use of it. The characters might hear about the reward and seek it out, or they might stumble across it and immediately realize its importance. You could craft the story and background of your campaign so that the characters know the importance and value of the reward before they find out about its mechanics.

3. Choose Powers and Effects: You can create the powers and properties of a reward by borrowing the mechanics of a magic item of the same level. This advice comes with a caveat, though: Players who are familiar with the game and who know how items work place extra pressure on the DM to use story and background elements to make the reward seem distinctive and compelling. If the players figure out you simply used bracers of mighty striking to define the property of the reward you call blessing of the Sword Lord, the reward might lose its mystery, wonder, and uniqueness.

Start by finding an item that has effects that connect with the flavor and story of the reward you want to create. If you know the level of the reward you want to create, you should limit your search to items of that level; alternatively, you can find an appropriate item and use its level as the level of your reward.

If you find more than one appropriate item, you could use a property from one item and a power from another one. This approach helps to conceal your source when you draw on existing material. You must still ensure that the potency of the resulting reward corresponds appropriately to its level.

Since story plays an essential role in a reward's design, concoct a basic description of how the reward manifests and what happens when a character uses it. The blessing of a deity might cause an image of the deity's holy symbol to appear on the character's hand. A specific description of how a character executes a special attack breathes life into a new technique a character learned by training with a master.

Applying Boons to Items

For your own convenience, you can transform mundane items, such as weapons or armor, into magic items by imbuing them with divine and legendary boons. When Ivella the tiefling fighter pierces the dying dragon's heart with her broadsword, the fiery blood of the ancient wyrm transforms her sword into a flaming weapon. When Uldane the halfling paladin performs a great service for Avandra, she transforms his +5 magic short sword into a holy avenger.

Using boons in this manner offers you another way of giving magic items as treasure. This approach has more flavor than hiding an item under a monster's bunk or buying or creating the items, and it remains firmly in the realm of the standard D&D reward system.

4. Decide on Duration: A reward typically fades after the character gains about five levels. This rule exists to enforce the same sort of turnover that occurs with normal magic items. A paladin eventually replaces his +2 plate armor with +3 armor. A casque of tactics (see Adventurer's Vault) might give way to a clockwork cowl.

You can design rewards with different durations. A reward might last for as little as one level or as many as ten. A legendary boon might last until the character takes an extended rest (useful if you want to draw characters into more encounters between rests; see "Drawing Characters Onward" on page 54). A divine boon might be equivalent to a consumable magic item—Avandra grants a character the ability to reroll three saving throws, and then the boon expires. If you use future treasure parcels to increase the power of a type of grandmaster training instead of giving a new item or reward, the benefit could be permanent and grow in power as the character gains levels.

Don't overload the characters with temporary rewards, and don't rob them of rewards they use frequently unless you design the reward as a short-term enhancement.

Weigh the duration of an alternative reward against the normal useful life of a comparable item. If you make the duration shorter, give more rewards to compensate, or don't count the rewards against the treasure the party receives. If you make the duration longer, use future rewards to improve the item, instead of giving new rewards or items.

A REWARD-BASED GAME

You can remove magic items from the game entirely and replace them with alternative rewards. Doing so results in a game that feels different from traditional D&D and might help you create a particular tone you want for your campaign.

In a campaign with no magic items, magic holds less value. Your players might dislike the lack of variety, but it allows you to create a story-driven campaign—rather than one driven by mechanics—that gives magic a rare and wondrous feel.

Don't ditch magic items without thinking it over. Discuss your decision with your players, so they understand what your campaign would entail. Players might appreciate the added layer of customization that items offer, and losing that feature could reduce their enjoyment of the game.

More important, without magic items as an easy reward, the pressure on you increases to provide a compelling story that propels the PCs forward. This option works best if you have experience as a DM and have already run several successful campaigns. You can use the following suggestions to replace magic items in your campaign.

AC, Defense, Attack, and Damage Bonuses: Without magic items, the PCs' attacks, defenses, and damage lag behind. You can solve this problem by giving the PCs flat bonuses as they advance in level. These bonuses stack.

Attack and Damage: All characters gain a +1 bonus to attack rolls and damage rolls at 2nd, 7th, 12th, 17th, 22nd, and 27th level.

Defenses: All PCs gain a +1 bonus to AC, Fortitude, Reflex, and Will at 4th, 9th, 14th, 19th, 24th, and 29th level.

Parcels: Remove the highest- and lowest-level magic item parcels from each level of treasure you hand out. You can dole out fewer magic items because the PCs do not need those items to boost their attacks and defenses.

Masterwork Armor: Give characters masterwork armor as treasure in addition to the rewards and monetary treasure you give. Treat masterwork armor as a magic item of a level equal to the lowest-level magic armor made from that type of masterwork armor. For example, a suit of crysteel armor (see Adventurer's Vault) has a minimum enhancement bonus of +4. A suit of +4 magic armor is a 16th-level magic item, so treat the masterwork armor as a 16th-level item as well.

Use Rewards: Replace the remaining magic item parcels with rewards designed using this section.

The rewards you use affect your campaign. Divine rewards reflect a world where the deities take an active role in mortal affairs. If you create a world where people consider magic a scarce or dangerous tool, you should rely on grandmaster training rewards. Legendary rewards fit a campaign that features magical vistas and bizarre locations where people still view magic as a mysterious and mistrusted source of power.

Spending Money: In a standard D&D campaign, characters find heaps of gold partly so they can buy or enchant magic items they choose. If you eliminate magic items from your campaign, think about what else characters can do with their monetary treasure.

You could allow characters to spend their money on rituals that grant them boons, effectively restoring an amount of player control over character customization. Replace the Enchant Magic Item ritual with three distinct rituals: Implore Divine Boon, Invoke Legendary Boon, and Grandmaster Training. These rituals might have special requirements beyond the Ritual Caster feat and the expenditure of gold—perhaps characters can perform Implore Divine Boon only at a significant temple and must be in their deity's good graces. Otherwise, the rituals function the same as Enchant Magic Item and allow characters to acquire a boon of their choice of their level or lower.

Allowing characters to buy alternative rewards can diminish the specialness of those rewards in players' eyes. You could instead reduce monetary treasure drastically to account for the fact that characters no longer need to buy as much stuff. If you cut monetary rewards in half, characters would still have enough money to purchase rituals and consumable items, as well as support their standard of living.

Divine Boons

Although the deities in the D&D world do not have omniscient powers, they do take an active interest in important events. A character might gain a divine boon as a reward for doing something that directly aids a deity or harms a deity's enemies.

An adventurer's typical activities fall into that definition. A divine boon comes into play when the gods take a personal interest in an event, such as a character performing a task worthy of drawing the gods' attention. Killing orcs that attack a temple does not deserve a divine boon. Slaying the high priest of Tiamat as he attempts to rally an army to conquer an entire continent in the Dragon Queen's name—now, that accomplishment deserves a divine boon.

Divine Boons in the Campaign

Divine boons can come into play when the characters perform a great deed for a deity. Alternatively, a boon might come out of nowhere, and its appearance kicks off the next story arc in your campaign. The boon might come with a quest, or the character who receives the boon could draw the attention of the deity's enemies. Perhaps the boon comes from the rival of the character's chosen deity.

In any event, make receiving a divine boon a major affair in a campaign. A deity has just taken notice of a character!

A divine boon is a good reward for one of the following activities:

- Avenging the death of a deity's beloved servant.
- Rediscovering a long-lost temple.
- Foiling a major plot by the deity's enemies.
- Saving one of the deity's favorite servants from danger.

You might also bestow a divine boon as a preemptive reward, a gift handed out before the characters undertake a perilous quest. Bahamut might appear to a paladin the night before an adventure, providing advice for the coming quest and granting the paladin a boon to aid him or her in a future encounter.

Boons never occur in a vacuum. When the deities meddle in the world, the other deities (and other entities, such as primal spirits) might involve themselves. If Bahamut grants his champion a boon, Tiamat might target that champion for death or create a dark prophet of her own to oppose him.

The actual mechanics of the boon take one of two forms. You can duplicate the effects of a magic item, or you can use one of the following sample divine boons, designed to correspond with the deities of the D&D pantheon. A boon effect equates to an item of its level and feels like a divine gift.

BOONS OF EVIL DEITIES

What happens when an evil deity grants a character a boon? The sample divine boons here cover the good, lawful good, and unaligned deities presented in the Player's Handbook, but not the more sinister deities detailed in the Dungeon Master's Guide. Plenty of circumstances exist in which the characters might receive a blessing from a deity who has no sample boon presented here. Unaligned player characters might worship Bane, Tiamat, or even Vecna, or at least perform deeds that advance the cause of those deities without qualifying as evil deeds. The characters might also aid an evil deity when faced with a greater evil—a demon prince or primordial, for example.

Use the sample boons presented here as a model for the divine boons of evil deities, or use the guidelines on page 137 to create an appropriate divine boon based on a magic item. Bane's boon might be similar to Bahamut's, for example, or it could have the same power as a terror weapon.

Level 28: Immediate Interrupt. Trigger: You take damage. Effect: You teleport 8 squares, become invisible until the end of your next turn, and can make a Stealth check to hide as a free action.

Legendary Boons

A character gains a benefit from a legendary boon when he or she completes a specific act, such as slaying a powerful beast or visiting a site of untold power. Legendary boons, like divine boons, fill a similar role to that of magic items.

You might need to sell the idea of a legendary boon to your players. Use story and flavor elements to prevent the boon's mechanical effects from seeming dull and rote.

A legendary boon could kick off a quest or otherwise push the PCs to acquire the boon. The wizard in the party might hear about the library of a great archmage hidden in a dungeon. If the wizard reaches the library and studies its contents, he or she could gain a greater mastery over magic. Of course, a fearsome lich (perhaps a continuing villain from your campaign) guards the place. Even worse, the characters last saw the map to the library's location in the hands of a cleric of Bane.

Characters should have strong motivations to seek out legendary boons. Dangle a boon in front of the PCs like a carrot, but guard it with powerful monsters and other obstacles that require planning and fighting to overcome. The word "legendary" holds critical importance here. You want your players to feel that the mighty forces they confront have a strong root in the campaign world and the story.

It doesn't hurt to lay the groundwork for a legendary boon early in the campaign. Ask the PCs what items they want, and turn those items into legendary boons.

To make a legendary boon more interesting, you can incorporate any of the following features.

- A Legendary Story: Drinking the waters from the first spring to erupt after the deities created the world grants untold power.
- A Powerful Figure in Myth or Legend: Bathing in the blood of the dragon Festergrim, slayer of King Algus and ravager of the forest of Lorem, grants a character immunity to fire. The blood of an unnamed dragon just stains a character's favorite hauberk.
- A Place in the Larger Story: Reading the Book of Five Truths gives a character a legendary boon and provides a map showing the resting place of the artifact the characters need to cure the deadly green plague.

Similar to other alternative rewards, a legendary boon lasts about five levels. At higher levels, the characters can seek more powerful versions of the boon, or you can tie them to the ongoing story of your campaign. For example, the wizard Fenstern gains the silver hands of power at the pool of Ralyar. Later in the campaign, when Fenstern and his companions defeat the cambion mage Gallrak, the silver hands absorb Gallrak's arcane power and grow even more potent. In game terms, you just handed the PC a higher-level version of the boon, replacing a treasure parcel as appropriate. In the story, Fenstern reclaims the power that Gallrak once stole from the pool. As an alternative, perhaps Fenstern must return to the pool after defeating Gallrak, and place the cambion's heart in the pool to improve the boon of the silver hands.

Sample Legendary Boons

Book of Five Truths — Level 8+

Scribes recorded five truths on scrolls at the start of the Dawn War and then scattered the scrolls throughout the planes of existence. Each scroll grants its reader essential insight into the nature of being.

Legendary Boon

The First Truth Lvl 8 3,400 gp
Property: Gain a +2 item bonus to Insight checks and Perception checks.

The Second Truth Lvl 13 17,000 gp
Property: Gain a +1 item bonus to Wisdom ability checks and Wisdom-based skill checks (but not Wisdom attacks).
Power (Daily): Immediate Interrupt. Trigger: You are hit by an attack that targets your Will. Effect: You gain a +5 power bonus to Will against the attack.

The Third Truth Lvl 18 85,000 gp
Property: When performing a ritual, roll twice and take the better result.

The Fourth Truth Lvl 23 425,000 gp
Property: Gain a +2 bonus to Will.
Property: Gain a +5 item bonus to initiative checks.

The Fifth Truth Lvl 28 2,125,000 gp
Property: Gain darkvision and a +6 item bonus to Insight checks and Perception checks.
Power (Daily): Minor Action. You can see invisible creatures as if they were visible. Sustain Minor: The power remains in effect.

Fortune's Nod — Level 3

Lidda's luck was uncanny. When all hope seemed lost and she was sighing her last breath, fortune smiled on her. She rose to her feet, drove her sword into the young dragon's eye, and smiled.

Legendary Boon 680 gp
Power (Daily): No Action. Gain a +2 power bonus to a saving throw you just rolled; use the new result.

Heartblood of Festergrim — Level 19+

Bathing in the blood of the slayer of King Algus and ravager of the forest of Lorem might not make you immune to fire, but it helps.

Lvl 19 105,000 gp Lvl 29 2,625,000
Lvl 24 525,000 gp

Legendary Boon

Property: Gain resist 10 fire.
Level 24 or 29: Resist 15 fire.

Power (Daily): Immediate Interrupt. Trigger: You are hit by a fire attack. Effect: You and each ally within 5 squares of you gain resist 20 fire until the start of your next turn.
Level 24 or 29: Resist 30 fire.

Quickening Waters — Level 22

The fey spring that feeds the gleaming Sehalandria River, which rushes from the Feywild to the world, grants preternatural speed to anyone who drinks from it.

Legendary Boon 325,000 gp

Property: Gain a +2 item bonus to speed.

Power (Daily): Minor Action. Take a move action.

Silver Hands of Power — Level 14 or 19

The pool of Ralyar glows with arcane power. When the wizard Fenstern dips his hands into the pool, he shrieks in pain. In exchange for this power, Fenstern accepts the momentary agony of the pool transforming his hands into living quicksilver.

Legendary Boon Lvl 14 21,000 gp

Power (Daily): Free Action. Trigger: You are hit with a daily power. Effect: You can use an at-will power.
Lvl 19 105,000 gp

Power (Daily): Free Action. Trigger: You score a critical hit using an encounter power or a daily power. Effect: That power is not expended.

Grandmaster Training

Garras had traveled for weeks across the fire-blasted Plains of Iron to find this simple thatch hut that belongs to Davros Elden, the finest swordfighter the world has ever known. Garras throws his cloak over his shoulder and adjusts his armor as he strides toward the door.

As Garras raises his hand to knock, a middle-aged male human wearing a frayed robe throws open the door. His gut hangs over his belt, and his right hand grasps a tankard of ale.

"First, you took too long to arrive. Second, you have terrible balance, and I doubt I can teach you anything. Third, that cloak is ugly. Return in a year, and show me you've improved. Maybe then I'll take you in."

The door slams shut. Garras turns, and his back stiffens as shame, anger, and defeat rush over him. He reaches down to the flask at his belt, and the door flies open again.

"Do I smell Barovian whiskey? Maybe you're not as stupid as you look. Bring that flask over here, and let's talk."

As an unmatched warrior, spellcaster, trickster, or priest, the grandmaster writes the texts and creates the disciplines that others follow. A character who displays persistence, luck, or determination could earn the chance to study at the feet of such a master and learn techniques beyond the normal limits of mortal achievement.

Similar to divine boons and legendary boons, grandmaster training gives characters access to magic item powers without the need to own those items. In this case, a character masters a new ability through hours of focused, intense training. This training requires more than rote practice; it involves study with an expert in armed combat or magecraft.

GEORGI SIMEONOV "CALADER"

Make your grandmaster more than a faceless NPC who bestows powers on characters who visit him or her. Why replace magic items with grandmaster training if the net result in play remains the same? Build the grandmaster as a living, breathing, active NPC in the campaign. A character who studies under a grandmaster equates to a novice apprenticed to an expert artisan. The character can expect the master to assign tasks that range from the trivial (cleaning the master's home) to the daunting (venturing into the mountains and slaying the high priest of Baphomet's cult).

You might use the stereotypical grandmaster—the elderly martial arts master who takes the young student under his wing, interspersing the student's training with menial jobs and verbal (and physical) abuse. The master has too little time and too much talent to bother with a gentle approach. Either his students learn, or they can seek out a lesser, easier master.

You might find the stereotype fun to play with, or you could explore other options. A grandmaster might be a stern parental figure who offers insight and advice to the characters and never seems satisfied with their work. She could be an old drunk who, unknown to the characters, once held the title of greatest wizard in the city. If the characters sober her up, she recovers enough of her skills to impart them to the characters. A grandmaster could be a deva on the brink of divine ascension, or a deity cloaked in mortal form.

Most important, flavor a grandmaster NPC with interesting quirks, and have him or her participate actively in the characters' lives. Again, this approach falls flat unless you instill the master NPC with interesting details. You want your PCs to remain in the master's training despite the tasks he expects them to perform, the complications he causes, or his meddling in their lives.

A grandmaster comes to life if you incorporate the following features:

- A Vivid Personality: This key trait, played at maximum volume, outperforms a number of subtle traits. You want your players to associate the grandmaster's personality with his or her name.
- Goals and Desires: Grandmasters have their own objectives; they assign tasks that help their cause.
- A Place in the Larger Story: The characters' enemies might kidnap the grandmaster, or the grandmaster might play a direct and pivotal role in developing the story of the campaign.

The training provided by a grandmaster gives a PC the equivalent benefit of a magic item. The PCs might find an item for the master or complete an assigned task to earn their training, which takes the place of an appropriate treasure parcel. It might take a few days or a week for the master's training to sink in.

Obviously, masters provide great ways to drive adventures. A master might require his paladin pupil to go on a quest to prove his dedication to the deity they both worship. A wizard's master could send her into a dungeon to recover a set of lost books. And a master might betray her pupil or reveal that the party's sworn enemy was once her greatest student.

Sample Grandmaster Training

Davros Elden's Defensive Step Level 7

The fencing master's first lesson adjusted Garras's position in a duel, maximizing defense.

Grandmaster Training 2,600 gp
Property: When you shift, you gain a +1 item bonus to AC and Reflex until the end of your next turn.
Power (Encounter): Minor Action. Shift 2 squares.

Davros Elden's Hasty Resurgence Level 9

When Garras returned for a second lesson, he learned to steady himself when an enemy wore him down.

Grandmaster Training 4,200 gp
Power (Daily): Minor Action. Use this power when you are bloodied to gain temporary hit points equal to your healing surge value.

Davros Elden's Blinding Strikes Level 11

On Garras's third visit, he learned the technique of making two hasty strikes in blinding succession.

Grandmaster Training 9,000 gp
Power (Daily): Standard Action. Make two melee basic attacks, each with a -2 penalty to the attack roll.

Davros Elden's Aerial Step Level 13

When Garras returned a fourth time to the master's hut, he learned that Davros Elden had more skill than he let on.

Grandmaster Training 17,000 gp
Property: You take no damage from a fall and always land on your feet.
Power (Daily): Move Action. Fly a number of squares equal to your speed. At the end of your turn, you float down to the ground if you aren't already there.

ITEM COMPONENTS

Sometimes, you might want to strike a middle ground between magic items and mechanics. The concept of item components replaces the flavor of magic items but retain the mechanics, and components allow you to add more background to an item.

The idea behind item components is simple. To ultimately obtain a magic item, the characters must find specific objects or ingredients and perhaps gain the help of an NPC or access a magical location.

Mechanically, an item component replaces a magic item treasure parcel with a number of elements that, when combined, form the item.

For example, you could replace treasure parcel 4 in a set of rewards for a 12th-level party with the components needed to create a level 13 magic item, such as a +3 assassin's short sword (see Adventurer's Vault, page 63). In this case, the characters need to collect a shard of obsidian from the grand altar to Bane, the poison gland from a venom-eye basilisk, and water drawn from a cistern in the black ore mines. The characters can make the sword when they retrieve these components.

To incorporate the idea of item components into your game, use the following steps:

1. Pick a Parcel: Choose a magic item treasure parcel you want to divide into components and pick an item to fill it.

2. Determine the Components: Divide the selected item into three components. Such an arrangement gives the characters a sense of starting the process of gathering the item's parts, making progress, and then finishing it, without making the process either too simple (two parts) or too involved (four or more parts).

The actual components you devise depend on your campaign. Some or all of them might fit into one or more of the following categories.

Help from an NPC: The characters might need help from an NPC to complete the item. Maybe a priest must bless a sword to make it holy, or a character might need a dryad to kiss a staff to enhance its charm powers. The characters can gain a component of this sort by helping the NPC, by roleplaying the interaction, or by succeeding on a skill challenge.

Harvested Ingredients: Rare herbs, organs taken from slain monsters, or metals or objects taken from special locations fall into this category. The characters might need to hunt down and defeat a certain kind of monster, or they could have to find a rare plant.

Forbidding Sites: Gaining an item component might require the characters to travel to a distant location and use a magic forge, or perhaps they must craft a portion of the item within a certain area of the Elemental Chaos.

3. Place the Components: Think of the components as three miniature treasures. The PCs uncover the final piece at around the same time when they would have found the treasure parcel you replaced. You might include specifics about what the PCs must do to create the item as part of the game's overall plot or a secondary story that comes into play when the PCs attempt to assemble or create the item.

The characters can learn of the components in a number of ways. Have them find the first component, as well as directions explaining the initial step to making the item. The characters could also discover notes on creating the item in an old journal or learn of the process from a mentor. Or the components might pose a mystery: The PCs know they can make an item by assembling the components, but they don't know what the item does.

4. Upgrade or Replace? An item created using these guidelines could replace an old item. Or the process could impart a new power to an existing item, upgrading it to a higher level. If the components improve an existing item, consider augmenting another treasure parcel with gold equal to 20% of the older item's value. Because PCs likely sell older items when they receive upgrades, the extra gold makes up for the loss of those items to sell.

5. Decide How Characters Make the Item: Once the characters have the components, what do they need to do to assemble or create the item? Do they have to follow a specific set of steps to complete the process? You might want to require the PCs to complete a ritual, but avoid requiring the PCs to pay gold to do so. After all, the components fuel the making of the item.

You might require a skill challenge, but if failure means that the PCs ruin the item, you risk frustrating the players. Instead, use a skill challenge to serve as a backdrop during a battle or some other encounter that occurs while the PCs make the item. The skill challenge might determine the number of undead creatures the PCs awaken while they complete the item. If the characters fare poorly in the challenge, they have to fight their way past a deadly encounter to escape, or maybe the party must divide, some fighting fight waves of undead while others finish making the item. If the characters succeed on the skill challenge, the undead leave the PCs alone as they finish the item.

In such a skill challenge, Arcana, Religion, and Nature can reflect the knowledge needed to bind the item's magic. Athletics and Endurance checks represent the physical labor of forging a weapon or some other object. Fine detail work, such as runes etched into a stone, uses Thievery.

ARTIFACTS

At a fundamental level, artifacts are magic items whose role in the game has far more to do with the story of your adventure or campaign than it does with the actual game effects of the item. Characters might buy, sell, enchant, and disenchant any of the hundreds of magic items found in the Player's Handbook and Adventurer's Vault volumes. They might even quest after those items. But when an artifact enters the characters' lives, the story of the campaign revolves around the artifact for a time.

Artifacts are completely under your control. It's up to you when you introduce an artifact to your game, and it's up to you when the artifact leaves the characters' hands. Ownership of an artifact is the one element of a character's capabilities that the character's player has no control over—it rests entirely in your hands. Use that power for good—the good of your campaign story.

This section introduces seven new artifacts to supplement the ones that appear in the Dungeon Master's Guide, and it leads off with some tips to help you incorporate these special items into your game.

Use Artifacts at Any Level: An artifact's overall power level isn't what makes it special. Magic items appear at every level, and there's nothing inherently more special about a level 30 item than there is about a level 1 item. Artifacts are different. There are artifacts appropriate for heroic-level characters as well as epic-level characters, and even the lowliest artifacts are significantly different from ordinary magic items of roughly the same level—not necessarily more powerful, but definitely more significant. So, go ahead and use artifacts even in your heroic tier game. Introducing an artifact at low levels helps the players see the grand scope of the story they're involved in.

Tie Artifacts to Campaign Themes: Use artifacts to reinforce the story you want to tell in your campaign. If you want to explore themes of how power corrupts those who wield it, introducing the Eye of Vecna into your campaign can help reinforce that story. If your campaign involves fighting an oppressive ruler or exploring the cost of freedom, then the Invulnerable Coat of Arnd can help expound on those themes.

Recast Stories and Goals: Add details from your campaign to the origin story for an artifact, or alter its goals to strengthen its ties to the themes of your campaign. Does a powerful eladrin villain play an important role in your campaign? Perhaps he is a descendant of Ossandrya, and knowledge of the Emblem of Ossandrya is part of his family's lore.

Wait Until Players Have Bought In: Hold off on introducing an artifact into your campaign until after the characters have completed an adventure or two and the players are fully invested in the story of the campaign. They should already know what's at stake and have at least a hint of the nature of the major villain in the story. With that groundwork laid, an artifact's arrival carries the appropriate weight. The players will appreciate the Invulnerable Coat of Arnd all the more after they understand the nature of the tyrant they have to overthrow.

Sometimes introducing an artifact can also serve to introduce the villain or theme of a campaign. If you plan to take your campaign in a dramatic new direction in the paragon tier as a major war breaks out in your campaign world, for example, you could introduce the conflict by having the Standard of Eternal Battle fall into the characters' hands.

Allow for Conflict: Make sure there's potential for characters to come into conflict with the goals of an artifact. The Axe of the Dwarvish Lords seeks to be an inspiration to honorable people. What if the characters discover that there's an easier way to achieve their goals (and the Axe's goals) using deceit and dishonor? Do they take the easy route and displease the artifact, or stick to the Axe's lofty principles and follow a harder road? A decision like this enriches your story and reinforces the idea that player choices matter in the game.

Allow Time for Goodbye: When it's time for an artifact to move on, if the characters are in good standing with it, make the occasion appropriately solemn. Let the characters participate in the artifact's departure, perhaps seeking out appropriate successors or returning it to a special location where it can be found when it's needed again. Give the players a chance to say goodbye to this member of your supporting cast.

"I CHOSE YOU"

You might decide to introduce an artifact into your campaign in one of two basic ways: Either the characters seek out the artifact, or it falls into their hands—possibly even seeking the characters out. Which approach is better for your campaign depends on the extent to which the players understand what's at stake in the campaign.

If the players understand the stakes and are already determined to pursue the story to its conclusion, then it's fine to send them on a quest to find and acquire an artifact that can help them achieve that goal. This approach can also help you reinforce campaign themes of heroic choice and consequences, particularly if deciding to use the artifact clearly helps the characters accomplish one goal, but might prove a hindrance in other ways.

On the other hand, if your campaign includes the idea that characters are born to a heroic destiny, you can reinforce that idea by having an artifact seek them out. Arthur didn't go on a quest to find Excalibur so he could become king; the fact that he was destined to be a great and heroic king led to the artifact coming into his possession.

Adamantine Horse of Xarn

The Adamantine Horse of Xarn is appropriate for mid-heroic-level characters.

Adamantine Horse of Xarn Heroic Level

At first glance, this artifact appears as an adamantine plate-barded warhorse of particularly powerful build, but further inspection reveals that the entire horse is made of metal and is powered by gears and hidden arcane devices. Due to the genius of its craftsmanship, its noble form moves naturally despite its unyielding material.

Wondrous Item

Property: The Adamantine Horse of Xarn is a construct in the form of a warhorse that serves as a mount for its owner. Its statistics depend upon its concordance with its owner.

Adamantine Horse of Xarn Lore

Arcana or History DC 16: Unlike most other artifacts that are held, worn, or wielded, the Adamantine Horse of Xarn is meant to be ridden. The artifact is coveted by warriors who serve the cause of good and who struggle against greed, injustice, and destruction, especially that caused by chromatic dragons.

Arcana or History DC 21: Tales say that Bahamut gave the Adamantine Horse to the legendary dragonslayer Xarn, a champion of the young human race. Xarn had already proved his worth against a champion of Tiamat, but he went on to ride the Adamantine Horse into battle against one of Tiamat's aspects. Xarn disappeared from history after that battle, but tales of great heroes who waged war against the Dragon Queen with the help of the artifact are scattered throughout history.

AMELIA STONER

Goals of the Adamantine Horse

- Serve as a mount for a hero devoted to the tenets of law and good.
- Protect the weak and uphold justice for the innocent.
- Fight against tyranny and greed, especially that perpetrated by chromatic dragons.

Roleplaying the Adamantine Horse

If it is owned by a character who shares its philosophy and helps it to achieve its goals, the Adamantine Horse of Xarn is a stalwart companion, providing timely aid to its owner. The Adamantine Horse can be extremely stubborn, however, with a character who is less perfectly aligned with its goals. The Adamantine Horse can't communicate with its rider verbally, but it understands Draconic, Common, and Supernal, and it makes its desires known with a gentle (or not so gentle) nudge, a derisive whinny, or the placement of its metal body to block or reroute passage.

CONCORDANCE

| Starting Score | 5 |
|---|---|
| Owner gains a level | +1d10 |
| Owner is lawful good | +2 |
| Owner is a paladin, warlord, or avenger | +1 |
| Owner has the Mounted Combat feat | +1 |
| Owner finishes a quest that fulfills the Adamantine Horse's goals | +1 |
| Owner defeats an evil dragon (maximum 1/day) | +1 |
| Owner acts in a way contrary to the Adamantine Horse's goals | -2 |
| Owner disregards the Adamantine Horse's desires | -1 |

Pleased (16–20)

"On the battlefield, we move and fight as one."

The Adamantine Horse of Xarn is proud to serve its owner as a steed and ally in battle, and it shares its magical power with its owner's allies as well. The Adamantine Horse's statistics reflect its pride and confidence.

Property: While you are mounted on the Adamantine Horse, any mounted ally within 20 squares of you gains a +2 power bonus to his or her mount's speed and a +5 bonus to damage rolls with charge attacks.

Property: While you are mounted on the Adamantine Horse, you gain a +4 bonus to all defenses against opportunity attacks.

Property: The Adamantine Horse becomes a 10th-level creature with the following statistics:

| Pleased Adamantine Horse of Xarn | Level 10 Brute |
|---|---|
| Large animate beast (construct, mount) | XP 500 |
| Initiative +6 | Senses Perception +12; low-light vision |
| HP 136; Bloodied 68 | |
| AC 22; Fortitude 24, Reflex 21, Will 22 | |
| Speed 10 | |
| ⊕ Kick (standard; at-will) | |
| +13 vs. AC; 1d10 + 8 damage. | |
| ⸸ Trample (standard; at-will) | |
| The Adamantine Horse of Xarn can move up to its speed and enter enemies' spaces. This movement provokes opportunity attacks, and the Adamantine Horse must end its move in an unoccupied space. When it enters an enemy's space, the Adamantine Horse makes a trample attack: +11 vs. Reflex; 1d10 + 8 damage, and the target is knocked prone. | |
| Adamantine Charge (while mounted by a friendly rider of 7th level or higher; at-will) ✦ Mount | |
| The Adamantine Horse grants its rider 10 extra damage on charge attacks. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Understands Common, Draconic, and Supernal |
| Str 24 (+12) | Dex 12 (+6) Wis 14 (+7) |
| Con 26 (+13) | Int 4 (+2) Cha 10 (+5) |

Satisfied (12–15)

"Together, we shall find glory through our actions!"

Satisfied with its owner's deeds and devotion to the ways of good, the Adamantine Horse of Xarn grants its owner and all mounted allies additional powers.

Property: While you are mounted on the Adamantine Horse, any mounted ally within 20 squares of you gains a +5 bonus to damage rolls with charge attacks.

Property: The Adamantine Horse becomes an 8th-level creature with the following statistics:

| Satisfied Adamantine Horse of Xarn | Level 8 Brute |
|---|---|
| Large animate beast (construct, mount) | XP 350 |
| Initiative +5 | Senses Perception +11; low-light vision |
| HP 115; Bloodied 57 | |
| AC 20; Fortitude 22, Reflex 19, Will 20 | |
| Speed 9 | |
| ⊕ Kick (standard; at-will) | |
| +11 vs. AC; 1d8 + 7 damage. | |
| ⸸ Trample (standard; at-will) | |
| The Adamantine Horse of Xarn can move up to its speed and enter enemies' spaces. This movement provokes opportunity attacks, and the warhorse must end its move in an unoccupied space. When it enters an enemy's space, the warhorse makes a trample attack: +9 vs. Reflex; 1d8 + 7 damage, and the target is knocked prone. | |
| Adamantine Charge (while mounted by a friendly rider of 7th level or higher; at-will) ✦ Mount | |
| The Adamantine Horse grants its rider 10 extra damage on charge attacks. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Understands Common, Draconic, and Supernal |
| Str 23 (+10) | Dex 12 (+5) Wis 14 (+6) |
| Con 25 (+11) | Int 3 (+0) Cha 10 (+4) |

Normal (5–11)

"This union has potential for greatness, but valor must be proven."

The Adamantine Horse of Xarn is content to allow its owner to use it as a mount.

Property: The Adamantine Horse becomes a 7th-level creature with the following statistics:

| Adamantine Horse of Xarn | Level 7 Brute |
|---|---|
| Large animate beast (construct, mount) | XP 300 |
| Initiative +4 | Senses Perception +10; low-light vision |
| HP 105; Bloodied 52 | |
| AC 19; Fortitude 21, Reflex 18, Will 19 | |
| Speed 8 | |
| ⊕ Kick (standard; at-will) | |
| +10 vs. AC; 1d8 + 7 damage. | |
| ⸸ Trample (standard; at-will) | |
| The Adamantine Horse of Xarn can move up to its speed and enter enemies' spaces. This movement provokes opportunity attacks, and the warhorse must end its move in an unoccupied space. When it enters an enemy's space, the warhorse makes a trample attack: +8 vs. Reflex; 1d8 + 7 damage, and the target is knocked prone. | |
| Adamantine Charge (while mounted by a friendly rider of 7th level or higher; at-will) ✦ Mount | |
| The Adamantine Horse grants its rider 10 extra damage on charge attacks. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Understands Common, Draconic, and Supernal |
| Str 23 (+9) | Dex 12 (+4) Wis 14 (+5) |
| Con 25 (+10) | Int 3 (-1) Cha 10 (+3) |

Unsatisfied (1–4)

"The horse has a mind of its own about our purpose."

The Adamantine Horse of Xarn still accepts its owner as a rider, but it ignores its owner's commands unless they directly serve the artifact's goals. The Adamantine Horse holds back from granting its owner its full power.

Property: The Adamantine Horse becomes a 7th-level creature with the statistics shown above, but it doesn't grant its adamantine charge ability to its owner.

Angered (0 or lower)

"I am unworthy to ride this steed."

Property: The Adamantine Horse of Xarn tries not to let its owner mount it. If its owner does somehow mount it, the Horse doesn't move.

Moving On

"The steed has other fights to join."

The Adamantine Horse of Xarn gallops off to other adventures. If it has normal concordance with its owner, it walks off into the sunset the next time the character gains a level, never to be seen again. If it's satisfied or pleased with its owner, it leaves behind a celestial charger (Monster Manual, page 159) that serves the Adamantine Horse's former owner faithfully. If the artifact is angered or unsatisfied, it leaves its owner at an inconvenient time to emphasize its disappointment and displeasure with the character's actions.

Amulet of Passage

The Amulet of Passage is appropriate for heroic-level characters.

Amulet of Passage Heroic Level

This fine silver chain is unassuming, bearing a single arrowhead-shaped jewel. While you wear this amulet, it stirs thoughts of legendary battles and heroic deeds.

The Amulet of Passage is a +2 magic amulet with the following properties and powers.

Item Slot: Neck

Enhancement: Fortitude, Reflex, and Will

Property: You gain a +2 item bonus to Acrobatics and Athletics checks to escape, and to Thievery checks to open locks.

Power (At-Will): Standard Action. You attune an ally to the Amulet. While attuned and within 10 squares of you, an ally can use the Amulet's powers (but not its enhancement bonus or properties) as if he or she were wearing it.

Power (Daily ✦ Teleportation): Move Action. You and each attuned ally can each use this power once per day. You teleport a number of squares equal to your speed.

VINCENT DUTRAIT

Amulet of Passage Lore

Religion DC 16: An ancient tale describes how Asmodeus, seeking to thwart the power of fate, placed obstacles in the paths of those mortal beings with the greatest destinies. To counter this affront, the Raven Queen crafted the Amulet of Passage to guide the greatest mortal heroes back to the path that fate had laid out for them.

Religion DC 21: Another legend claims that Avandra made the Amulet to help heroes pursue their own dreams and goals. The Amulet grants extraordinary powers of movement—not just to its owner, but to its owner's allies as well.

Goals of the Amulet of Passage

- ✦ Find those that could become legendary heroes and guide them toward their destined paths.
- ✦ Continue to move through the world in search of new heroes.

Roleplaying the Amulet of Passage

When the Amulet of Passage first comes into a character's possession, it resents the task set before it and must be convinced that its new owner truly is destined for greatness. As its owner continues to succeed, the artifact begins to believe that the character is worthy of his or her destiny.

The Amulet of Passage doesn't communicate verbally or telepathically, but it does instill emotional states in its owner, depending on its concordance. It will use feelings of courage and confidence to encourage its owner to push forward without an extended rest (see "Drawing Characters Onward" on page 54).

Artifacts for Multiple Players

This book introduces artifacts that identify themselves with more than one character in the party. Such artifacts might grant powers or properties to two or more characters, as the Amulet of Passage does. Other artifacts have concordance based on the actions of each party member, rather than just the artifact's owner, as the Standard of Eternal Battle does. Some can be used by multiple characters simultaneously, such as the paired sets of boots Rash and Reckless or the Cup and Talisman of Al'Akbar. The Emblem of Ossandrya, on the other hand, allows only one owner at a time to use it, but it can be passed from character to character without loss of concordance.

These artifacts can help you reward your players for working well together as a team, or encourage them to think more as a team if they're selfishly inclined. The artifacts can also have the opposite effect if you're not careful, leading to conflict among your players over the "right" way to use the artifact. If conflict does arise, remember that artifacts make their own wishes known to their owners.

CONCORDANCE

| Starting Score | 5 |
|---|---|
| Owner gains a level | +1d10 |
| Owner reaches three milestones in one day | +2 |
| Owner completes a major quest (maximum 1/day) | +1 |
| Owner's ally dies | -1 |
| Owner stays in the same region for 2 weeks without reaching a milestone | -1 |

Pleased (16–20)

"Soon we will accomplish the stuff of legend. Everything we've done so far is just a prelude to what lies ahead."

The Amulet of Passage is pleased and impressed with its owner, and it instills a sense of courage, confidence, and destiny in that character. It urges its owner to ever greater achievements.

Property: The Amulet's item bonus to Acrobatics and Athletics checks to escape, and to Thievery checks to open locks, increases to +5.

Power (Daily ✦ Reliable, Teleportation): Standard Action. You or an attuned ally can use this power. Make an attack: Close burst 10; targets one creature; Intelligence +3, Wisdom +3, or Charisma + 3 vs. Will; on a hit, the target disappears from its location (save ends). While the target is gone from its location, it can't take actions and can't be targeted. On a save, it reappears in the space it last occupied (or in the nearest unoccupied space of its choosing if that space is occupied).

Satisfied (12–15)

"Our destinies are intertwined as we walk together on the road of adventure."

The Amulet of Passage appreciates its owner's drive and encourages that character to achieve more. It instills a sense of restlessness, dissatisfaction, and urgency in its owner, trying to drive the character toward still greater actions.

Power (Encounter ✦ Teleportation): Move Action. You and each attuned ally can each use this power once per encounter. You teleport 10 squares into a space adjacent to an ally who is wearing or attuned to the Amulet.

Normal (5–11)

"I say we go that way."

The Amulet of Passage is noncommittal when it first comes into its owner's possession, waiting to see whether the character will live up to the artifact's expectations. It does encourage the owner to be more decisive, to keep on the move, and to seek adventure and heroic deeds whenever an opportunity presents itself.

Unsatisfied (1–4)

"If you don't step over the mountain ridge, the scenery never changes."

The Amulet of Passage is disappointed in its owner, who clearly lacks the drive or ability to accomplish great things. The character might experience the Amulet's displeasure as a nagging feeling of longing, or as thoughts of wanting something more out of life and the need for a change of scenery.

The Amulet's enhancement bonus decreases to +1.

Angered (0 or lower)

"We are all lost, and so is this cause."

The Amulet of Passage despairs of ever goading its owner to great deeds, and that despair rubs off on the character. The owner feels as if he or she will never achieve great things or accomplish anything of lasting import.

The Amulet's enhancement bonus decreases to +1. The owner can no longer use any of the Amulet's powers, and all allies lose their attunement to the Amulet.

Property: The Amulet's item bonus to Acrobatics and Athletics checks to escape, and to Thievery checks to open locks, is negated.

Moving On

"I have shown you the path, but you must take the first steps on your own."

After the Amulet of Passage has guided its owner and his or her allies onto the path of their destinies, it moves on to find its next owner. Before it leaves, it provides the characters one last passage, typically a teleportation of some great distance (perhaps even across worlds), to where their next great adventure will begin.

Cup and Talisman of Al'Akbar

The Cup and Talisman of Al'Akbar are appropriate for paragon-level characters.

Talisman of Al'Akbar Paragon Level

This eight-pointed star of hammered platinum hangs on a chain of gold and pearls. Each point of the star is tipped with a diamond, and elaborate patterns of gold inlay cover its surface.

The Talisman of Al'Akbar is a +3 magic holy symbol with the following properties and powers.

Implement (Holy Symbol)

Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls

Critical: +3d6 damage per plus

Property: Whenever you make a Heal check, you can roll twice and use either result.

Property: Whenever you use a healing power on an ally, that ally regains 1d10 additional hit points.

Power (Daily ✦ Healing): Free Action. Trigger: You reduce an enemy to 0 hit points with an attack power using this holy symbol. Effect: You or one ally within 5 squares of you gains regeneration 5 until the end of the encounter.

Cup of Al'Akbar Paragon Level

Twelve great gems form a ring around the rim of this large gold chalice, which requires two hands to carry. The chalice glows with a faint golden light.

Wondrous Item

Power (Daily): Standard Action. You drink from the Cup of Al'Akbar and make an Endurance check against a disease affecting you, using the disease's improve DC. If you succeed, you're cured. If you fail, the disease doesn't get any worse while it affects you.

Power (Daily ✦ Healing): Using this power takes 10 minutes. You create one potion of Al'Akbar (see below). If you use the Cup together with the Talisman of Al'Akbar, you can instead create up to three potions of Al'Akbar. A potion created in this way reverts to plain water if it isn't consumed within 24 hours.

When filled with water, the Cup of Al'Akbar can create a potion of Al'Akbar. A creature that drinks one of these potions gains a healing benefit. The potion can't be disenchanted.

Potion of Al'Akbar Paragon Level

Potion

Power (Consumable ✦ Healing): Minor Action. Drink this potion and spend a healing surge. Instead of the hit points you would normally regain, you regain 30 hit points and make a saving throw.

If you have no healing surges when you drink this potion, you instead gain 15 temporary hit points.

Cup and Talisman Lore

Religion DC 22: The Cup and Talisman of Al'Akbar are divine relics with great healing powers. Legend says that they were gifts from Pelor, given to mortals to help the world recover from a time of terrible devastation.

Religion DC 27: After the artifacts were first used to care for the injured and sick, conflicts arose over the ownership of the Cup and Talisman. Some sought to use the items for good, while others wanted to support armies of conquest, and skirmishes raged over their possession until the artifacts disappeared.

Goals of the Cup and Talisman

- ✦ Prevent death and eliminate disease.
- ✦ Avoid creating conflict because of the artifacts' allure.
- ✦ Atone for the past pain and bloodshed the artifacts have caused.

Roleplaying the Cup and Talisman

Though each item is a powerful artifact in its own right, the Cup and Talisman of Al'Akbar appear in histories and lore only as a pair. Likewise, both items think and speak as one entity when in close proximity, echoing one another's words. When separated and in the hands of a good soul, each item comments frequently that it must be reunited with its other half.

The items are altruistic and expect their owner to be as well. They seek only owners who have good intentions and avoid anyone who pursues glory or profit above good deeds. Any owner who uses the Cup and Talisman directly for profit earns their distrust. A character using the artifacts can reap the normal treasure—and even pay—from adventuring. Forcing the sick or wounded to buy the Cup's healing is unacceptable, as is raising someone from the dead because that person is wealthy or powerful rather than worthy or innocent.

Though they're great artifacts of healing, the Cup and Talisman have also caused much bloodshed among ambitious individuals who sought the items' power. The artifacts still fear their own power and try to escape notice.

Al'Akbar's Curse

The Cup and Talisman of Al'Akbar were created in a time of great need—some say it was a great plague created by evil deities or demon lords, while others believe it was a war in which great heroes were grievously wounded and killed. Once that time had passed and the artifacts were no longer crucial to survival and victory, their very presence led to hostilities. All sought to own the artifacts, including their owners' enemies, neutral parties who sought their power, and even the owners' allies. At that point, the Cup and Talisman disappeared. Since that time, they have surfaced when they were needed, but only long enough to accomplish their goals before disappearing again to avoid creating more conflict. The Cup and Talisman worry that they do more harm than good.

The Cup and Talisman are supernaturally alluring and can cause even old allies to turn against one another. The dangers of the artifacts' allure to the characters the longer they hold them should be foreshadowed. At first it could be petty rulers who seek to own the artifacts, but later the situation could escalate to conflicts and dissension among the characters themselves.

Concordance

The Cup and Talisman of Al'Akbar share one concordance score, but each attitude grants different powers to each item.

CONCORDANCE

| Starting Score | 5 |
|---|---|
| Owner gains a level | +1d10 |
| Owner is devoted to Pelor | +1 |
| Owner reunites the Cup and Talisman | +2 |
| Owner completes a quest for worshipers of Pelor | +1 |
| Owner uses the Cup or Talisman for profit (this includes selling a potion of Al'Akbar) | -2 |
| Owner is attacked as a result of owning the item | -2 |
| An ally or innocent dies in the owner's presence (maximum 1/day) | -2 |

Pleased (16–20)

"We have atoned for the blood spilled over us in the past, but we fear our renown grows too great."

The Cup and Talisman of Al'Akbar sense that the time to depart is coming soon and feel they have now contributed more good to the world than suffering. It won't be long before the items move on.

The Talisman's enhancement bonus increases to +4.
Talisman Critical: +4d6 damage per plus
Talisman Power (At-Will ✦ Healing): Minor Action, 1/round. One ally you can see can spend a healing surge.
Cup Power (Daily ✦ Healing): Standard Action. You choose a creature (or portion of a creature) within 5 squares of you that died less than 5 minutes ago. That creature returns to life and regains hit points as if it had spent a healing surge.

Satisfied (12–15)

"Our work has saved many lives, but so many still live in need."

You have furthered the artifacts' goals and behaved in a manner approved by their creator. The items trust you and will stay with you for a time.

Talisman Property: Whenever you use a healing power on an ally, that ally regains 2d10 additional hit points.
Cup Power (Daily): Free Action. Trigger: You start to perform the Raise Dead ritual. Effect: You use the Cup and perform the ritual with no component cost. The raised creature doesn't take a -1 death penalty.

Normal (5–11)

"So many call out in pain. We must heal their tortured bodies and ease their suffering."

Special: If you have only one of the artifacts, that artifact encourages you to find the other artifact and drops cryptic hints to lead you to it (or more explicit instructions once it trusts you).
Special: If you have both artifacts, they request that you find and heal those in need. They also emphasize discretion, not wishing for their whereabouts to be discovered.

Unsatisfied (1–4)

"Are my motives pure? Do I truly serve the will of the gods?"

The Cup and Talisman of Al'Akbar consider you untrustworthy. They don't believe that you truly work for good and are worried that your self-interest is interfering with their altruistic motives. They force you to heal indiscriminately.

Special: You gain no benefit from drinking a potion of Al'Akbar.
Property: Whenever you heal an ally and that ally regains additional hit points through the Talisman, each enemy within 3 squares of the ally also regains hit points equal to the additional hit points.

Angered (0 or lower)

"The legacy of the Cup and Talisman remains shameful, and I've done nothing to repair it."

You have been actively working against the artifacts' interests, and they wish to find a more worthy owner.

Property: Whenever you spend a healing surge or use a healing power, you reduce the hit points regained by 1d10 (to a minimum of 1 hit point regained). This effect applies even if you're only carrying the Talisman.

Moving On

"It's too dangerous to remain here. We must disappear from the face of the world once again."

The Cup and Talisman of Al'Akbar, eager to avoid too much attention, want to become "lost" once again. This might happen because their owners have revealed the artifacts' presence to too many people and caused conflict (likely if concordance is low), or because the items are fearful that their owners' prominence and success will cause strife in the future (likely if concordance is high).

The artifacts might both move on at once, or one might leave before the other. This second situation usually happens if the two artifacts wish to be far apart and difficult to find to prevent them from falling into the wrong hands.

Emblem of Ossandrya

The Emblem of Ossandrya is appropriate for paragon-level characters.

Emblem of Ossandrya Paragon Level

This medallion, shaped like a shield and glowing with soft golden light, bears Corellon's star symbol in its center.

Wondrous Item
Property: You gain resist 10 poison.
Property: You gain a +1 item bonus to saving throws.
Property: You gain a +2 item bonus to Acrobatics, Athletics, and Diplomacy checks.
Power (Encounter): Minor Action. You transfer the Emblem of Ossandrya to an ally within 5 squares of you. That ally gains the powers and properties of the artifact, using your concordance to determine them.
Power (Daily): Free Action. Trigger: You make an attack roll or skill check and dislike the result. Effect: You reroll the attack or check and must use the second result.

Emblem of Ossandrya Lore

History DC 22: The legendary eladrin Ossandrya wore this emblem during the Last Battle of the Spiral Tower, when forces loyal to Corellon drove the wicked drow from the Feywild. Since then, it has appeared in times of great crisis, when good must stand strong against the powers of treachery and evil.

History DC 27: The Emblem of Ossandrya is far more devoted to the cause of justice and good than even Corellon. It drives its owner to pursue the highest ideals of heroic valor.

JULIE DILLON

Goals of the Emblem of Ossandrya

- Nurture a group of heroes so that they can begin their epic destiny.
- Spread the story of those heroes and help their legend grow among the people of the world.
- Encourage daring acts, bold action, and clever stratagems.

Roleplaying the Emblem of Ossandrya

When a character first touches the Emblem of Ossandrya, it telepathically asks if the character and his or her allies seek glory for their heroic deeds. With an affirmative answer, the Emblem attaches itself to that character's armor or clothing, above and to the left of the character's heart. The Emblem is friendly and encouraging, but quickly grows impatient with those who are slow to seek adventure.

The Emblem can communicate telepathically and through speech. It speaks Common, Draconic, Dwarven, Elven, Giant, Goblin, and Supernal. The Emblem loves to relate the lore of other heroes to which it has been attached. It eagerly listens to any tales told by the heroes, and encourages them to tell such tales to others.

CONCORDANCE

| Starting Score | 5 |
|---|---|
| Owner gains a level | +1d10 |
| Owner completes a major quest | +2 |
| Owner is trained in Diplomacy | +1 |
| Owner is an eladrin | +1 |
| Owner fails to complete a major quest | -2 |
| Owner or an ally attacks a good or lawful good creature (maximum 1/encounter) | -2 |

Pleased (16–20)

"Friends, tales of our deeds shall find a fitting place among the legends of our world."

The characters have proven their worth, and the Emblem of Ossandrya accepts them as truly great heroes of grand stature.

Property: You gain resist 20 poison.
Property: You gain a +4 item bonus to Acrobatics, Athletics, and Diplomacy checks.
Power (Encounter ✦ Healing): Immediate Interrupt. Trigger: An ally within 5 squares of you is reduced to 0 hit points or fewer. Effect: You transfer the Emblem to the triggering ally. That ally can spend a healing surge.

Satisfied (12–15)

"Did you see the baron's face when we told him of our battle at the chasm bridge? Truly, that will be a difficult tale for us to top . . . but we will!"

The Emblem of Ossandrya appreciates the valor and daring of its owner and his or her allies, encouraging them to ever greater adventures.

Property: You gain resist 15 poison.
Property: You gain a +3 item bonus to Acrobatics, Athletics, and Diplomacy checks.
Power (Encounter): Immediate Interrupt. Trigger: An ally within 5 squares of you fails a saving throw. Effect: You transfer the Emblem to the triggering ally. That ally can reroll the failed saving throw.

Normal (5–11)

"My friends, we are destined for greatness."

The Emblem of Ossandrya has high hopes for its owner and his or her allies, and it gladly seeks their success and glory.

Unsatisfied (1–4)

"I cannot shake the feeling that we are meant for bigger things than recounting our exploits to tavernkeepers and besotted patrons."

The Emblem of Ossandrya distrusts its owner's abilities, often wondering telepathically if the character and his or her allies are really trying hard enough.

Property: You take a -1 penalty to attack rolls. When you hit an enemy, the penalty is negated until you take a short rest or an extended rest.

Angered (0 or lower)

"Perhaps we should explore a lucrative career purveying woolen goods."

The Emblem of Ossandrya is disgusted with the cowardice or incompetence (or both) of its owner and his or her allies. It stops encouraging bold stratagems and won't remain with its owner much longer.

Property: You take a -1 penalty to attack rolls. When you hit an enemy, the penalty is negated until you take a short rest or an extended rest.
Property: You take a -2 penalty to saving throws instead of the +1 bonus the Emblem normally grants.

Moving On

"We have secured our legend; now others must secure theirs."

The Emblem of Ossandrya senses that it can no longer help to improve the party's legend, and that other legends-to-be hang in the balance. The next time its owner gains a level, the Emblem disappears from the character's armor or clothing, destined to reappear in another place where it's needed more. If the Emblem is at least satisfied, it leaves behind a replica of itself for its owner and each of his or her allies. While this item is worn, it grants a +1 item bonus to saving throws but doesn't occupy an item slot.

It's possible that the Emblem might request the heroes' help in finding suitable replacements.

Rash and Reckless

Rash and Reckless are artifacts appropriate for a pair of paragon-level characters.

Rash and Reckless — Paragon Level

These broad-cuffed black boots suggest an attitude of daring and panache. The two pairs are identical in every detail.

Item Slot: Feet
Property: You can use your Dexterity modifier in place of your Strength modifier to make melee basic attacks with a weapon.
Property: You gain a +2 item bonus to Acrobatics checks and Athletics checks.
Power (Daily): Minor Action. Until the end of the encounter, each enemy adjacent to the ally wearing the other pair of these boots grants combat advantage to you.
Power (Daily): Standard Action. You shift your speed and then make a melee basic attack.

Rash and Reckless Lore

History DC 22: Rash and Reckless are the individual names of two artifacts, each a pair of boots, meant to be worn by two allies. They originally belonged to a pair of scoundrels who spent their lives in revelry and adventure in the capital city of Nerath years ago. The artifacts allow their owners to work in concert to perform masterful feats of acrobatics and athleticism.

History DC 27: The original owners of Rash and Reckless were an inseparable pair of adventurers who began their professional life as acrobats in a traveling carnival. They extended the acrobatic training, teamwork, and entertainer's panache that they learned from the sideshows to their adventuring career. Everything else about this duo's life is a matter of conjecture, legend, and tall tale. To this day, no one is sure of their gender or race, where they were born, or the details of their adventuring career. Even their names are lost to history, replaced by the names of the artifacts they left behind as their legacy.

Goals of Rash and Reckless

- To perform deeds of daring action and adventure worthy of the stories told of the artifacts' original owners.
- To help their owners pursue legendary adventures with flair and boldness.
- To lead their owners to riches and renown.

Roleplaying Rash and Reckless

Rash and Reckless don't speak, instead communicating through flashes of empathic resonance. A character wearing one of the artifacts is prone to surges of energy, often so great as to make the character leap to his or her feet, overwhelmed with the desire to move around. The artifacts inspire mischievous thoughts and spur the concoction of elaborate plots.

They might suggest a certain course of action—always one that is brash and unconventional. Even limited as they are, the artifacts' communications advance their goal of bringing more daring action and excitement into the world.

Rash and Reckless share a friendly sense of competition. Each pair of boots seeks to goad its owner into the greatest, most flamboyant and foolhardy deeds. This competitiveness rubs off on the owners of the items, leading to characters who constantly seek to outdo each other in performing outrageous stunts. The artifacts reward this type of behavior with increased concordance.

Concordance

Each pair of boots has its own concordance with its owner. Much of the artifacts' concordance depends on the wearer accomplishing outrageous stunts. Maneuvers that are daring but not quite brilliant can increase the artifact's concordance with its owner by 1, while a truly legendary act (as determined by the DM) might increase it by 3.

CONCORDANCE

| Starting Score | 5 |
|---|---|
| Owner gains a level | +1d10 |
| Owner is a rogue or a bard | +2 |
| Owner is trained in Acrobatics and Athletics | +1 |
| Owner pulls off a maneuver with great panache | +2 |
| Owner rushes into danger (maximum 1/encounter) | +1 |
| Owner falls due to a failed Athletics check | -1 |
| Owner expresses caution | -1 |
| Owner flees from a combat encounter | -2 |

Pleased (16–20)

"I know! Let's sneak into the baron's keep to find out what he's up to!"

"And we can steal his scepter while we're there!"

The artifact is delighted with its owner, who displays the kind of behavior that the boots approve of. It encourages thoughts of daring adventures and reckless behavior, which it knows its owner will pursue.

Power (Daily): Move Action. You shift your speed.
Power (Encounter): Free Action. Trigger: You score a critical hit. Effect: The target is dazed until the end of your next turn.

Satisfied (12–15)

"Caution be damned!"

"Twice damned, I say!"

The artifact sees encouraging signs that its owner is capable of truly legendary acts and gently urges the character to pursue a course of foolhardy action.

Property: You gain a +2 bonus to Bluff checks while using a disguise.

HOWARD LYON

Property: Whenever you shift, you can move into spaces occupied by creatures, but you can't end your movement in an occupied square.

Normal (5–11)

"I feel like doing something . . . crazy."

"Something wild!"

The artifact initially stirs vague longings in its new owner, trying to goad the character into more daring and extravagant behavior.

Unsatisfied (1–4)

"I don't want to let my life be ruled by fear."

The artifact is displeased with an owner who is either too cautious or too incompetent to accomplish deeds worthy of its original owner. The character feels the artifact's dissatisfaction and longs to find an untapped reserve of bravery. Until the artifact's concordance improves, it grants no powers, but its properties still apply.

Angered (0 or lower)

"These boots are slowing me down!"

The artifact despises its owner, believing the character to be incapable of greatness and unworthy of its aid and attention. The artifact grants no powers, and its normal properties no longer apply.

Property: At the start of each encounter, you're slowed (save ends).

Moving On

"The show must go on."

Rash and Reckless have a sense of the dramatic and a hunger for helping new performers play to new crowds. They rarely stay with heroes for more than a few adventures (a couple of levels). When it's time for them to move on, they look for a way to make a dramatic exit, preferring to vanish in a flash of light and a puff of smoke after their owners (ideally, working in concert) have accomplished a truly great stunt worthy of engendering a new legend.

If the artifacts are unsatisfied or angered with their owners, they leave at an inopportune time, perhaps disappearing from their owners' feet during an audience with a baron (or a hearing before a judge) to cause embarrassment to their failed owners.

Some stories tell that Rash and Reckless will sometimes return to their favorite heroes for a reunion performance and one final adventure.

Rod of Seven Parts

The renowned Rod of Seven Parts is appropriate for characters of any level. Unlike most artifacts, it's designed to come into play early in a character's career and play an important part in adventures through the epic tier.

The Rod consists of seven individual segments, each one between 4 and 15 inches long. Reassembled into a whole, they form a slender rod 5 feet in length.

Rod of Seven Parts Heroic to Epic Level

This short segment of lusterless black metal looks like a single part of a larger whole.

A single segment of the Rod of Seven Parts is a +1 magic rod. Each additional segment joined to the first increases the Rod's enhancement bonus by 1 to a maximum of +7. The Rod's properties and powers depend on how many segments are assembled together.

Implement (Rod)

Enhancement: Attack rolls and damage rolls

Critical: +1d6 damage per segment, or +1d10 damage per segment against elemental creatures

Property: Whenever you use a healing power, one target of the power can make a saving throw.

Property: You gain a +1 item bonus to Diplomacy, Intimidate, and Religion checks per segment.

If all seven segments of the Rod of Seven Parts are assembled together, they gain the following additional property:

Property: You can use the Rod as a simple melee weapon. You add its enhancement bonus to attack rolls and damage rolls of melee weapon attack powers, and it deals +7d6 critical damage, or +7d10 against elemental creatures. Used as a melee weapon, the Rod's proficiency bonus is +2 and its damage die is 1d10.

Rod of Seven Parts Lore

Religion DC 28: The Rod of Seven Parts was forged during the Dawn War that raged at the beginning of time between the gods and the primordials. It was crafted by the Wind Dukes of Aaqa, a group of seven angels that served Bahamut, with the assistance of one of Moradin's exarchs. Forged for use against Miska the Wolf-Spider, a demonic primordial of terrible power, it was ultimately driven through Miska's body, shattering into seven parts as it came into contact with the Wolf-Spider's chaotic energy.

Religion DC 33: As the Rod shattered, Miska was cast through a planar breach (see page 185) and lost on an unknown plane, and the seven fragments of the Rod were scattered throughout the cosmos. The Rod hasn't been reassembled since, despite the best efforts of forces aligned with both sides of the cosmic war.

Goals of the Rod of Seven Parts

- Be reunited into a whole item once again.
- Establish the divine rule of law in the world and the cosmos, taming the Elemental Chaos and destroying the remaining primordials.
- Seek out and destroy Miska the Wolf-Spider once and for all.

Roleplaying the Rod of Seven Parts

It's best for the PCs to find the smallest part of the Rod of Seven Parts first. Each individual segment of the Rod is capable of guiding its owner toward the next larger segment. If a character holds any portion of the Rod and thinks of it as part of a larger item, the character feels a vague sense of where the next largest piece lies, getting a clear sense of direction, but no indication of distance or circumstance.

As soon as two or more pieces of the Rod are joined together, the Rod's owner feels its urgent desire to be reassembled. Without being consciously aware of the Rod's influence, its owner also becomes aware of its goals. The character becomes inclined toward order and regulation, feeling a sense of revulsion when confronted by disorder, lawlessness, or anarchy.

Concordance

The primary way to increase the concordance of the Rod of Seven Parts, and through that its power, is to seek out additional segments and join them to the first segment found. Regardless of other conditions, the number of segments joined together determines the Rod's maximum concordance, as shown on the second table below.

|---|---|
| Starting Score | 5 |
| Owner gains a level | +1d10 |
| Each segment of the rod joined to the first | +2 |
| Owner defeats an elemental (maximum 1/day) | +1 |
| Owner defeats a primordial | +4 |
| Owner or an ally attacks an immortal (maximum 1/encounter) | -1 |
| Owner flouts laws or codes of conduct | -2 |

| Number of Segments | Maximum Concordance |
|---|---|
| One | 5 |
| Two | 7 |
| Three | 9 |
| Four | 11 |
| Five | 14 |
| Six | 17 |
| Seven | 20 |

Pleased (16–20)

"Through us, order will be restored to creation!"

The Rod of Seven Parts is mostly or entirely complete, and it hums with life and excitement that rub off on its owner. The Rod is actively seeking Miska the Wolf-Spider or another primordial to destroy, and its owner knows the Rod's full purpose.

Property: Whenever you use a healing power, each target of the power can make a saving throw.

Power (Daily ✦ Fear, Psychic): Standard Action. You cloak yourself in a fearsome aura of awe-inspiring divine presence, which enables you to make the following attack: Close burst 3; targets enemies in the burst; Intelligence or Wisdom or Charisma vs. Will; on a hit, the attack deals 2d10 + 5 psychic damage, pushes the target 3 squares, and immobilizes the target (save ends).

Satisfied (12–15)

"Fear me, spawn of Chaos—and fear the Rod I wield!"

With at least five segments assembled, the Rod of Seven Parts manifests potent powers in pursuit of its goals. Its owner knows that the Rod seeks to destroy primordials and punishes lawless behavior.

Power (Encounter): Move Action. You fly your speed.

Power (Daily): Standard Action. You create a gust of wind: Close blast 5; targets all creatures; Intelligence or Wisdom vs. Fortitude; on a hit, the attack deals 2d10 + 5 damage and pushes the target 3 squares.

Normal (5–11)

"There is more to this Rod . . . I can feel it!"

When a segment of the Rod of Seven Parts first comes into a character's possession, the artifact communicates a vague sense of a greater purpose or destiny, but little else. The character is aware of the Rod's properties and knows that finding additional segments of the Rod will increase its power.

Unsatisfied (1–4)

"I don't think this thing likes me."

The Rod's owner is either flaunting laws or waging war on angels or devils, and the Rod is displeased. It makes its displeasure known, with subtle influence and a vague sense of unease.

Property: The Rod's item bonus to Diplomacy, Intimidate, and Religion checks is negated.

Property: You take a -2 penalty to Bluff checks.

Property: You take a -1 penalty to attack rolls against immortal creatures.

Angered (0 or lower)

"Why am I so tired all the time?"

The Rod of Seven Parts is severely displeased and punishes its owner until the character's behavior improves or the artifact decides to move on.

The Rod's enhancement bonus is reduced by 1, and its extra damage on a critical hit is reduced by 1 die.
Property: The Rod's item bonus to Diplomacy, Intimidate, and Religion checks is negated.
Property: You take a –5 penalty to Bluff checks.
Property: You take a –2 penalty to attack rolls against immortal creatures.
Property: After each extended rest, you lose one healing surge.

Moving On

"What happened to the Rod?"

The Rod of Seven Parts shatters into its component parts, and each segment teleports to a random location across the planes. It might break apart and scatter after its owner uses a daily power from the Rod, or after slaying a powerful opponent. If it's displeased with its owner, it might shatter in the instant before the character tries to use it as a weapon or implement. If the Rod is pleased with its owner, it might grant a legendary boon (see page 142) in its place.

Adventures with the Rod of Seven Parts

The Rod of Seven Parts was the focus of a super adventure written in 1996 (for the 2nd Edition of the D&D game) by Skip Williams. This truly epic campaign leads the characters on several shorter adventures in pursuit of individual segments of the Rod, while encounters with various minions of Miska and the Queen of Chaos, as well as agents of the Wind Dukes of Aaqa, occur at intervals over the course of many levels of play.

A series of adventures involving the Rod of Seven Parts could have the characters stumble upon one piece of the Rod initially, and then seek out the other six of their own volition. Complicating matters a bit, the characters might discover that forces of chaos also seek the Rod, hoping to use it to find and restore Miska the Wolf-Spider to power. The Rod of Seven Parts adventure took things one step further, introducing a Wind Duke who sought to restart the ancient war against Chaos by releasing Miska again.

If you introduce the Rod to your campaign at low levels, you can include a short quest to find and attach a new segment of the Rod once every five levels or so. That way, its enhancement bonus keeps pace with its owner's level. Make sure the artifact stays important to the party in between those adventures by featuring enemies and allies who have an interest in the Rod. As the characters assemble more segments, they might get involved with the Wind Dukes, various demonic forces, and ultimately Miska itself.

You can also compress this campaign arc by introducing the Rod when the characters are already epic level. Its powers and properties might not be significant to them until they get four or five segments assembled, but the promise of having a +7 rod in hand by the campaign's climax makes the effort worthwhile.

Standard of Eternal Battle

The Standard of Eternal Battle is appropriate for paragon-level characters.

The Standard has no single owner, but it considers itself to belong to an entire party of heroes—as if they were a squad of soldiers. Any member of the characters' party can use the powers and properties of the Standard, and the actions of the group as a whole determine the artifact's concordance.

Standard of Eternal Battle Paragon Level

This tattered standard bears the evidence of a dozen great wars and a thousand battles. Dedicated to the spirit of warfare, the banner patiently waits for worthy owners to carry it into combat.

Wondrous Item

Power (At-Will): Minor Action. Any owner of the Standard of Eternal Battle can cause it to display any coloration, crest, icon, emblem, or other mark. The chosen symbol remains until an owner uses a minor action to change it.

Power (Encounter ✦ Zone): Standard Action. When you plant the Standard in your space or an adjacent square, it creates a zone in a close burst 5. While within the zone, you and your allies gain a +1 power bonus to attack rolls and saving throws.

In addition, while the Standard is planted, any of its owners within 5 squares of it can use its powers.

These effects last until the end of the encounter or until the Standard is removed from the ground.

The Standard can be set into any solid surface, even rocky ground or a stone floor. It doesn't occupy the square. Once planted, it can be removed from the ground as a standard action only by one of its owners or by a creature that has reduced one of its owners to 0 hit points or fewer.

Standard of Eternal Battle Lore

History DC 22: A gift from the god Bane to an ancient hobgoblin conqueror, the Standard of Eternal Battle has flown over countless battlefields in every era of mortal history. It shares its creator's love for war, regardless of the cause or purpose of the conflict.

History DC 27: According to legend, the Standard can change hands only through violence—it must be won and claimed as a prize in battle.

Goals of the Standard of Eternal Battle

- ✦ Aid those whose goal is conquest through war, subduing a rebellious people, or unseating a usurper.
- ✦ Be carried by worthy owners. Lesser owners must improve or quickly be replaced or destroyed.

Roleplaying the Standard of Eternal Battle

The Standard of Eternal Battle is a manifestation of the spirit of warfare and conquest. To that end, it's crafty and suspicious, being a master and survivor of a hundred betrayals.

Arrogant and completely unconcerned for the fates of all who aren't accomplished warriors, the Standard issues commands rather than conversing with its owners. It communicates by speaking through nearby characters, its gravelly voice emerging unexpectedly whenever it wishes to make its point. It doesn't care whether it speaks through one of its owners, a nearby NPC, or even an enemy locked in battle with the owners.

CONCORDANCE

| Starting Score | 5 |
|---|---|
| Owning group finds the Standard, rather than taking it from previous owners | -2 |
| Each member of owning group gains a level | +1d10 |
| Owning group contributes to the success of a war or major conquest | +4 |
| Member of owning group reduced to 0 hit points or fewer by an enemy | -1 |
| Member of owning group surrenders to an enemy | -2 |
| Owning group participates in losing effort of a war or major conquest | -4 |

Pleased (16–20)

"Even death cannot stay our hands! Fight on!"

The Standard of Eternal Battle delights in heroes who take part in glorious battle and refuse to bow down to their foes. It grants its owners the power to cheat death so they can fight longer.

Power (Daily ✦ Healing): Immediate Interrupt. Trigger: An enemy reduces you to 0 hit points or fewer while you're within the zone. Effect: You regain all your hit points and make a saving throw against each effect on you that a save can end.

Satisfied (12–15)

"We cannot be held back from victory!"

The Standard of Eternal Battle enjoys the tastes of glory it receives and hungers for more. Its owners are filled with confidence as it orders them to seek out greater battles.

Power (Encounter): Minor Action. You and each ally within the zone make a saving throw with a +5 bonus, and you each gain combat advantage against the target of the next attack roll you make before the end of your next turn.

Normal (5–11)

"Let us prove ourselves worthy of the banner we fight under."

The Standard of Eternal Battle is arrogant but vocally supportive of its owners, even while it silently judges the characters' worth in battle.

Unsatisfied (1–4)

"We have failed. We must put ourselves back on the path to glory."

The Standard of Eternal Battle's owners have faltered in battle, and the artifact begins to throw greater challenges in their way to test their mettle.

Property: At the start of each encounter, if the level of the highest-level owner is equal to or lower than the level of any enemy in the encounter, the owners of the Standard take a -5 penalty to initiative checks for that encounter.

Angered (0 or lower)

"We have displeased the Standard. We must prove our worth before we perish!"

The owners are failing to live up to the lofty expectations of the Standard of Eternal Battle, and it actively seeks their downfall at the hands of more accomplished warriors.

Property: At the start of each encounter, if the level of the highest-level owner is equal to or lower than the level of any enemy in the encounter, the owners of the Standard take a -10 penalty to initiative checks for that encounter.

GEORGI SIMEONOV "CALADER" (2)

Property: If planted, the Standard can be removed from the ground as a standard action by any creature in or adjacent to its square.

Moving On

"Our doom approaches."

The Standard of Eternal Battle balances its desire for worthy owners with its need to exercise control over those individuals. Whether the owners prove unworthy or the artifact loses its absolute control, it eventually seeks to divest itself of its current owners.

The Standard doesn't move on of its own volition. It instead draws powerful adversaries to it and its owners on a regular basis. These teams of enemies are often stronger than the current owners (2–5 levels higher) and are dedicated to wresting the artifact from its inferior owners. They begin showing up weekly or even daily, always at the most inopportune moments, until the owners are defeated or surrender the artifact.

Some owners see this doom approaching and rid themselves of the Standard before it's too late. According to legend, the Standard is often found in a forlorn location, a lowly resting place for such a lofty artifact.

Destroying Artifacts

As mentioned in the Dungeon Master's Guide, destroying an artifact isn't as simple as using the rules for damaging objects. Each artifact has a specific means by which it can be destroyed. The original Dungeon Master's Guide (published in 1979) offered the following list of possible means to destroy an artifact:

1. Melt it down in the fiery furnace, pit, mountain, forge, crucible, or kiln in which it was created.

2. Drop it into or bury it beneath (1) the Well of Time, (2) the Abyss, (3) the Earth Wound, (4) Adonais' Deep, (5) the Spring of Eternity, (6) Marion's Trench, (7) the Living Stone, (8) the Mountain of Thunder, (9) 100 adult red dragon skulls, (10) the Tree of the Universe.

3. Cause it to be broken against or crushed by (1) Talos, a triple iron golem, (2) the Gates of Hell, (3) the Cornerstone of the World, (4) Artur's Dolmen, (5) the Juggernaut of the Endless Labyrinth, (6) the heel of a god, (7) the Clashing Rocks, (8) the foot of a humble ant.

4. Expose it to the penetrating light and flame of (1) the Ray of Eternal Shrinking, (2) the Sun, (3) Truth: that which is pure will become Light, that which is impure will surely wither.

5. Cause it to be seared by the odious flames of Geryon's destroyed soul or disintegrated in the putrid ichor of Juiblex's deliquescing flesh.

6. Sprinkle it with/baptize it in the (1) Well of Life, (2) River Styx, (3) River of Flame, (4) River Lethe.

Organizations

Organized groups give your adventurers the chance to interact and form relationships with set collections of enemies and allies throughout ongoing storylines. Villainous organizations connect the dots between encounters. Virtuous groups provide the PCs with support, a sense of belonging, and a reason to venture forth and find trouble. Organizations between the poles of good and evil flesh out the politics of your setting.

Recurring Villainy

Enemy organizations offer a sense of continuity in your story that solitary villains don't provide, because you remove solitary villains from the game world when they're defeated. Antagonists in roleplaying games are more fragile than villains in movies and comic books. An author can dictate that his villain inconclusively engages with the heroes several times before the final confrontation. In the game, though, any encounter between a set of player characters and a primary villain could end in the death of a carefully nurtured antagonist.

When the characters struggle against a malevolent organization, however, the storyline can continue despite a surprise victory. The defeated creature you intended as the main villain is revealed as a pawn of a larger group, allowing you to create another primary villain for later encounters. During the search for the mastermind, the PCs engage in further fights against other cells of the villainous group.

Connecting the Dots

In a political or city-based scenario, organizational ties between sets of opponents can serve as the connecting tissue that links encounters. After the characters overcome a combat encounter or a skill challenge, plant information that leads them to another encounter or challenge to face a new branch of the organization, or give them a clue to the identity of the lead villain.

Just as dungeon room doors can lead to different encounters, you can plant clues that lead in multiple directions, offering players an interesting choice of next steps. Allow players to choose which opponents to tackle next, so they don't feel forced from one scene into another.

The path from one encounter to the next isn't always straightforward. To keep the adventure on track, don't hide information that leads characters to the next encounter. If they fail on a Perception check or a Streetwise check to glean necessary information, don't leave players with no direction. Give them the information they need, and then let them make checks to uncover extra information that helps them in other ways. For example, if characters succeed on a check with a high roll, they might find one or more of the following kinds of information.

- Tactical hints that grant an advantage in the upcoming encounter. You could forewarn the party about traps, necessary equipment or ritual components, or a way to surprise their enemies.
- Facts they can use to achieve personal goals. A player character who swears to expose his evil uncle might find proof of his uncle's membership in the outlaw band the group has been fighting. Or, a character who has an established love interest could discover an enemy group's plans to kidnap and ransom him.
- Clues leading to additional encounters. Give characters an incentive to follow obvious links and make dead-end paths less enticing.
- Details about the inner workings of the villainous organization. This kind of information engages explorers and storytellers. The details don't have to relate directly to the goals of the characters or the adventure in order to be meaningful.

Political Complications

Another set of plot options appears when characters cannot fight their way from one enemy cell to another because the enemy organization is too strong. This strength might translate literally in terms of level and enemy capability. Build the opposing group's leadership from epic tier monsters when the characters have just embarked on their paragon paths, making a combat confrontation with the organization a deadly proposition.

If you want to create a politically untouchable enemy organization, focus on intrigue and interaction. For example, the enemy group advises the local duke, enjoys the protection of an impulsive deity, or secures the loyalty of the people by generously donating gold to favored causes. Although the characters might occasionally spar with the enemy's minions and lackeys, the PCs can't launch physical attacks on the leaders. Instead, the characters embark on a series of fights, skill challenges, and interactions designed to reduce the enemy group's political influence. Characters might pursue the following tasks:

- Search for proof that the group secretly conspires against its political protectors.
- Displace the villains in their patron's favor, either through political intrigue or a series of battles.
- Use treasure liberated from dungeon delving to purchase the goodwill of the populace. (Increase the available treasure from each encounter. The players need the usual amount to enhance their characters, plus a budget for their political operations. Turn off the gold spigot if the players start raiding their political slush fund to buy magic items for themselves.)

Rivalry

Organizations can stand in the party's way without being villainous. Rival groups hinder the characters and their goals by competing with them. The rivals' methods might be at least as ethical as the player characters' methods. If the characters behave like a selfish pack of irresponsible freebooters, members of a rival organization might annoy and frustrate the characters by acting with high-handed, self-righteous virtue. A rival group that pursues disastrous ends with the best of intentions offers its own tricky challenge. Give the players reasons to sympathize with these troublemakers, even as the characters struggle to compensate for their rivals' actions.

Examine the characters' goals to determine a rival organization's plans. Invent a reason why a different group of characters wants to work against the PCs without descending into villainy. Consider the following challenges that a rival organization might pose to your characters.

GEORGI SIMEONOV "CALADER"

- The characters enjoy the patronage of a wealthy and powerful duke, and another group wishes to secure the duke's favor. Or, the rival adventurers could seek to replace the duke with someone they believe is the duke's older brother, and thus is the rightful claimant to the duke's title.
- A particular temple advocates a rigidly moralistic ideology that might, if it took hold among the populace, put characters who use arcane power out of favor.
- Another adventuring party explores the same dungeon and searches for the same artifact or treasure that the characters are seeking. In addition to creating an interesting rivalry, this situation also encourages the characters to push through encounters without stopping for an extended rest (see "Drawing Characters Onward" on page 54).

Because the rules allow characters to fight rivals without killing them (see "Knocking Creatures Unconscious" on page 295 of the Player's Handbook), you can stage combat encounters with members of rival organizations who impede the characters' progress.

Players might not expect their characters to face the logical results of antisocial behavior. Warn the players that if they use lethal force against legitimate organizations, they can expect punishment, which could include any or all the following consequences:

- Trouble with the authorities.
- Revenge attacks by other members of the rival group.
- Withdrawal of support by friends, family, patrons, and community leaders.
- Exile from good or unaligned communities.

Belonging to an Organization

You can build a campaign around the idea that the player characters belong to an organization rather than, or in addition to, having them fight against a villainous or rival organization. The players might want their characters to join an established group in your campaign.

You can portray the characters' lives between missions through an adventurer organization, if your group enjoys this aspect of play. It allows you to surround the party with a cast of NPCs who can drive plots and subplots by providing information, requiring rescue, or introducing romantic entanglements.

If your group enjoys a DM-directed style of play, the characters' superior or a contact within the organization assigns the characters the next quest to undertake on the organization's behalf. Don't make membership in an organization feel like a job; let the characters act as powerful free agents. Avoid the temptation to use their superiors in an organization to create dominance over the characters. Few players want to belong to groups that abuse, punish, or threaten their members. Although authoritarian organizations exist, reserve this type of behavior for enemies and rivals.

Players who prefer an open-ended approach to the game might avoid organizations that assign missions or issue orders. An organization that has a loose structure but clear goals can provide enough motivation to set the players on the road to self-defined missions. For example, the characters might be the only local representatives of a far-flung organization dedicated to fighting cults of Those Who Hear (see page 120) and other people and creatures connected to the Far Realm. The characters have a clear reason to investigate when signs of cult activity surface in the area. The characters might also sense that their local problems are part of a larger story without needing to have missions handed to them by an authority figure.

Shifting Relationships

The characters' relationships with an organization can shift, perhaps several times over the course of a long campaign. An organization might initially act as a patron for the characters, hiring or rewarding them on an informal basis for performing particular tasks. As the characters complete missions for the patron group, they might identify with the organization and join as official members, or at least informal operatives. Alternatively, they might grow disenchanted with the group, gradually learning that they do not share or support its true agenda.

Shifting relationships can define a story arc for your campaign. These changes could occur gradually, in response to player interaction, or suddenly, when you unveil a plot twist. Consider the following possible developments:

- The player characters disappoint the organization, and it finds a new group of adventurers to do its bidding. Or, maybe the characters decide they don't want to work for the organization anymore. Either way, the characters must now compete against the organization's new representatives.
- A virtuous organization undergoes a factional struggle that results in the ousting of its benevolent members. The new leadership begins advancing an evil plot, and the characters must decide whether to try to restore the group's original leadership from within the organization or leave the organization and fight it from outside.
- After a political change, a villainous organization that the characters previously couldn't touch is now fair game. Or, the opposite could be true: A well-intentioned group that an evil or misguided ruler once outlawed comes into favor when the rulership changes.

- A rival or villainous group encourages a partnership with the characters to combat a greater threat to both groups.
- The characters' patron (group or individual) betrays them at a pivotal moment. This scenario is a cliché in fiction and gaming, and as such players might feel duped if you throw this sort of plot twist at them. Use the cliché with caution, and try to make the players feel clever and triumphant when they turn the tables on their treacherous ex-allies.

Power Struggles

Struggles between organizations provide an endless supply of plot hooks. If characters belong to an organization or have one as a client, they might find themselves contending against its enemies. The PCs' superiors might send them on missions to attack or subvert the opposing organization. Alternatively, agents of enemy organizations might try to neutralize the characters or to thwart their assigned objectives. In an environment of clear morality, in which one organization is good and the other evil, the characters might gravitate to the side of virtue. If both groups operate in shades of gray, the characters might have to wrestle with moral issues when deciding which group to back.

When neither contending organization deserves sympathy, the adventurers could enjoy playing the groups against each other. Perhaps the characters are amoral and self-serving, or they might slowly grind both groups down, pretending to maintain the balance of power between the two while they take power for themselves.

Factions and Schisms

You can design a setting for players who thrive on politics and intrigue by adding conflicts within organizations, as well as conflicts between or among them. Multiple factions compose the average organization. Conflict might occur at the highest levels of the organization as different factions compete to direct the organization's agenda or philosophy. Alternatively, the opposing factions might fully agree on the issues that drive the group but divide along lines of loyalty to rival personalities or the specifics of administrative detail. Faction leaders might also pay lip service to the philosophy and goals of the group while pursuing prestige, authority, and control of the group's purse strings.

When the player characters belong to a factionalized organization, they have frequent opportunities for political maneuvering and intrigue. When factional infighting weakens a rival or villainous organization, the characters could exploit that schism and find unlikely allies willing to strike against mutual rivals within the organization.

The characters need not play a central role in struggles between groups. The warring organizations can serve as a background element that explains why certain places are lawless or rich in adventuresome violence. In the city of Sigil, for example (see the next chapter), player characters could either jump into its ongoing, multisided power struggles or keep their heads down and try to stay neutral.

Defining the Conflict

When you build power struggles between organizations into your setting, define the nature of the conflict as covert, peripheral, open, multisided, or polarized (or some combination of these types).

Covert struggles occur beneath a society's seemingly placid surface. Secretive organizations vie for control under the noses of an unsuspecting populace. A clandestine struggle for political power ends when one side wins. Fights over obscure or arcane goals could remain concealed, even when the ripple effects transform the community.

Peripheral conflicts interest the participating groups but exert little influence on anyone else. For example, two schools of wizards might vie for possession of an artifact. Although the competition consumes the two groups, no one in the wider community notices it. Victory for one side changes the two groups forever but exerts no measurable impact on a society.

Open struggles pit two or more groups against one another in violent conflict. Two criminal gangs might fight for control of a specific territory, or two merchant houses might compete for dominance over a specific market or trade route. A barony could erupt in civil war when the baron dies and rival groups support different heirs to the throne. Whatever the conflict's nature, it affects everyday life, creating ongoing jeopardy for all. For the characters, any decision they make could instigate a battle.

Multisided conflicts create a web of mutual dependence and hostility as numerous groups pursue their own agendas. The groups switch between rivalry and alliance as circumstances change; sometimes they cooperate on certain issues while opposing each other on others.

Polarized conflicts drive all comers into one of two opposing camps. Opposed beliefs and interests congeal into mutual hatred. Each side regards associating with the other as treachery. Even if conflict occurs on a political level, flaring tempers could lead to periodic explosions of violence.

Organization Elements

Like any detail about your world, your description of an organization might consist of an idea in your head, a few lines of scrawled notes, or large chunks of elegantly written text. The following format can help you shape your ideas about the groups your PCs interact with. Not all of these elements are appropriate to all kinds of organizations.

Name of Organization

Goal: What the group hopes to accomplish in the short or long term.

Stated Goal: Groups with secret goals maintain cover stories. The goal tells players what the organization claims to strive for, rather than its true intent.

Size: Rather than giving a specific number of members, this entry describes the group's relative size and scope.

Alignment: The prevailing (though not necessarily exclusive) alignment of the faction that drives the group. In an organization that has a secret agenda, this alignment could be at odds with the alignment of the majority of the unsuspecting members.

Philosophy: Why the organization acts as it does. In case of a secret agenda, include notes on the group's outward philosophy.

History: Additional information on the formation and development of the organization.

Leadership: The group's key leader or leaders, including any local leadership.

Headquarters: The location where the group conducts its business and protects its leaders.

Membership Requirements: How player characters can join the organization, if possible.

Structure: The group's organizational structure.

CHIPPY

Activities: The group's current actions to advance its agenda.

Enemies: Other groups that the organization openly or violently conflicts with.

Rivals: Political opponents with whom the group engages in peaceful intrigue.

Factions: Any notable factions within the group.

Other Features: Any additional information on the group.

Examples

The following six example organizations can serve as models for the groups you want to develop for your campaign, or you can use them as presented here. A few of these examples have specific ties to the city of Sigil, which is described in Chapter 6.

Banesons

Goal: A secret conspiracy of humans promotes the worship of Bane, the deity of war and conquest. Based on the vision of its founder, the group schemes toward a global apocalypse to transform the world into a mirror of the plane of Chernoggar, Bane's Iron Fortress (see Manual of the Planes, page 92), and the Banesons into mighty goblin warriors.

Size: Small and local. The Banesons relies heavily on the charisma and devotion of their leader, and the group holds little appeal beyond its leader's reach.

Alignment: Evil.

Philosophy: "Life offers only misery and falsehood. We are strong, but this world of deception keeps us weak. It is better to be the masters of our own fates and bring on a catastrophe we choose, than to toil and suffer in a world that places no value on our inexhaustible bloodlust."

History: The Banesons formed a generation ago after its founder, Eliath Red-Dust, went to the mountains to fast and received an ecstatic vision of blood.

Leadership: The blacksmith Derthad Red-Dust acts meek and subservient, but secretly he burns with the murderous certainty of his father's mission.

Structure: The group consists of a dozen small cells; each acts autonomously, occasionally taking direct orders from Derthad. The leaders of the cells knew Derthad's late father, and they meet regularly with Derthad to plot global destruction.

Activities: The group raises funds through raids, kidnappings, and highway robbery. It terrorizes the area with murders and attacks on local authorities. Members try to make these attacks resemble the work of goblins.

Factions: Discontented advisors, led by Derthad's uncle Shael, plan to take over the group if the group doesn't make faster progress toward Bane's earthly victory.

Blackhelm Janissaries

Goal: Defend Blackhelm, Sigil's outpost on Chernoggar (see Manual of the Planes, page 92), from invasion and conquest.

Size: Tiny. The majority of the group resides in Blackhelm, and a small circle of auxiliaries and financial supporters aid the Janissaries' cause from Sigil and elsewhere across the planes.

Alignment: Unaligned.

Philosophy: "Without us, Blackhelm is nothing but a district of Zoronor, overrun by bladelings or worse. And you can bet Sigil would fall next."

History: Unnamed Cagers founded the Janissaries between one and two hundred years ago.

Leadership: Watch Captain Barald the Bald, a humorless warlord, leads the Janissaries and brooks no insubordination. Barald's lieutenants issue orders to sergeants, who oversee the rank-and-file. Members who challenge a superior's orders are banished to certain death outside Blackhelm's walls.

Headquarters: The Blackhelm Janissaries use the outpost's central strongpoint, called the Dome, as a headquarters.

Membership Requirements: The Janissaries greet travelers who enter Blackhelm from Sigil by pressing them into service, ejecting them back to the City of Doors, or throwing them over the wall into the dangerous streets of Zoronor (see Manual of the Planes, page 93).

Activities: Barald and his lieutenants assign patrols to watch the borders of the outpost and rally the entire force to respond to any incursion.

Enemies: The various denizens of Chernoggar, including agents of Bane and Gruumsh, seek to conquer Blackhelm and use it to secure power in Sigil.

Factions: The rogue Amundini instigates dissatisfaction with Barald the Bald, arguing for a looser leadership that recognizes the heroism of every member of the group and gives each member a voice in the governance of Blackhelm.

The Golden Rope

Goal: Increase prosperity for mercenaries, adventurers, and explorers.

Size: Moderate size, concentrated in a local region of a few nearby towns and cities.

Alignment: Unaligned.

Philosophy: "Only through exploration of wild places can we regain the knowledge to rebuild civilization. We kill monsters and redistribute their treasure as a public service, and we should be rewarded as such."

History: The dwarf dungeon delver Kelken Karu founded the Golden Rope ten years ago, shortly before he was hanged for the murder of an earl.

Leadership: Guildmaster Randaha Mohir, a fast-talking dragonborn, currently leads the guild. A six-member council advises the guildmaster and makes policy by majority vote. Council members are elected on a yearly basis, and the council appoints the guildmaster. Guild members can attend the regular meetings of the council and make suggestions for the guild leadership to consider.

Headquarters: The guild council meets every two weeks at the Juggling Bear tavern.

Membership Requirements: Characters can join the Golden Rope by demonstrating to the guild leader's satisfaction that they have explored at least one dungeon complex. The guild collects a "nomination fee" of 15 gp and annual dues of 10 gp per member.

Activities: The Golden Rope lobbies local government on behalf of its members, encouraging the authorities to pay its members for services rendered to help protect and defend communities from

START SMALL!

I'm always tempted to design a campaign setting as a world, or at least a continent, and fill in every square mile with swamps and forests and nations divided by borders. I can look at such a map and say monsters live in the swamp, elves dwell in the forest, and this nation clashes with that nation. TSR produced hefty campaign worlds—Wizards of the Coast still does—and I want to develop my worlds in the same rich detail.

However, when you work with such a large scale, all those details end up far away from the PCs.

If I dropped the PCs on a border between two nations simmering at the edge of all-out war, the characters might find adventure. That campaign could be interesting. Maybe a city lies on the border. Maybe its people don't consider themselves members of either nation, and they resent being fought over. And immigrants from both nations live within its walls. That scenario could be a lot of fun.

That setting works because I switched from the big map to a small spot on it. Once I start running that campaign, the forest with the elves and the swamp with the monsters don't matter, at least not until the campaign grows and expands to include them. In the short term, fleshing out the city on the border and its adventure possibilities serves my purposes better than planning what lies half a continent away.

When you start with the small view, you create space for adventure on that micro level. The campaign contains more than the monsters that live in the swamp a hundred miles distant; it involves the PCs in the dangers that threaten their lives and homes. In 4th Edition, the PCs find more danger than safe zones. Adventure is never far away.

—James Wyatt, from

monsters and other threats. When its members find themselves in legal trouble, the guild advocates for them and attempts to secure a lenient sentence or dismissal of charges. Finally, the guild looks to expand its operations into new towns and cities.

Enemies: The bandit gang Thordar's Hammers preys on adventurers who travel between towns and the surrounding dungeons and ruins. The family of the earl slain by Kelken Karu still holds a grudge against the guild, and it has enough influence to make the guild's life difficult.

The League of Due Hierarchy

Goal: Promote the legalization of slavery in places that currently forbid it and protect the rights of slaveholders in places that allow slavery.

Size: Small but widespread, the majority of its members can be found in towns and cities ruled by tyrants or dominated by evil races. Only nobles can join, and in areas that permit slavery, one must own slaves to be a member.

Alignment: Evil.

Philosophy: "The great civilizations of the past recognized that some people are born greater than others and allowed society's betters to sell the lowly into bondage. As the world rebuilds, mighty empires will emerge among nations that recognize the righteousness and necessity of the fundamental social order."

History: The League (called the Shacklers by its detractors) sprang up when the world began its slow recovery from the disasters of the past.

Leadership: The Shacklers' ideological leader is the scholar-queen Fusane, monarch of a small, prosperous city-state located on a major trade route.

Headquarters: Ostentatious League halls appear in numerous national capitals, situated near the local palace or congress hall.

Activities: Members of the League appear at governing institutions to lobby in favor of slavery proclamations and decrees. Members also undermine attempts to establish egalitarian rule. The League secretly funds harassment, sabotage, and assassinations of prominent enemies.

Enemies: The Fellowship of Free Souls, a political movement opposed to slavery and authoritarian rule, swears to topple the League.

Factions: An increasingly vocal group of slave traders and wealthy merchants argues for full membership regardless of birth status. These individuals want the League to set aside its other political aims and focus solely on promoting slavery.

Raven's Wings

Goal: Pay homage to the Raven Queen by laying the undead to their final rest.

Size: Large and widespread.

Alignment: Unaligned.

Philosophy: "We show our devotion to the Raven Queen by taking up arms in her name."

History: A ruler of the tiefling empire of Bael Turath founded the order, where it operated as a subversive and secret organization. The small cells of its membership have passed on traditions for hundreds of years.

Leadership: Each cell governs itself, and the cell leaders try to maintain close communication with their nearest neighbors in the order.

Headquarters: The order maintains hundreds of austere barracks spread throughout hostile, dangerous lands.

Membership Requirements: Characters who worship the Raven Queen can apply for admittance as acolytes and accompany more experienced members on missions against the undead. An acolyte earns full membership status after demonstrating courage and capability in combat against the undead.

Activities: The order launches missions to exterminate the undead and punishes anyone who desecrates cemeteries and monuments.

Enemies: The order opposes and seeks to eliminate cults of Orcus.

Rivals: A mercenary organization called the Graveyard Guild suppresses the undead for fees and treasure.

The following campaign arcs take PCs through three full tiers of play. To illustrate general ideas that are dealt with in the next chapter, the paragon tier receives more attention than the other two tiers.

Breach Smashers

This arc highlights planar adventure, a signature element of paragon-level play.

Heroic Tier: Out of the Breach

The players create characters around a common theme: All PCs begin their careers as ordinary residents of Restharrow. A peculiar kind of safety has blessed this tiny village, tucked away in a distant corner of the world, for centuries. Bandits, monsters, wars, and kings have all passed it by.

The players envision their characters as humble villagers and then create the 1st-level characters they become in the course of the first adventure.

In the middle of the night, Restharrow's preternatural seclusion comes to an explosive end. A gigantic planar breach (see page 185) appears in a nearby hillside, showering Restharrow with flaming debris. Altered by arcane winds blown from the breach, the characters spontaneously develop their 1st-level powers. They rescue their surviving neighbors from the wreckage and assist with rebuilding efforts. As time passes, creatures emerge from the breach and disrupt these efforts. Invading monsters spread across the countryside, occupying caverns, ruins, and ancient underground complexes.

For the rest of the heroic tier, the characters protect Restharrow by hunting and destroying these planar invaders. You can use the guidelines from "Increasing or Decreasing Level" on page 174 of the Dungeon Master's Guide to create lower-level versions of planar enemies, or use the themes in this book.

To maintain the planar flavor, use the monster creation rules to build toned-down versions of otherworldly planar entities the PCs can fight at low levels. Rework standard stat blocks for low-level creatures into planar enemies.

Between encounters, the characters seal off creature hideouts to prevent monsters from reoccupying them and fortify Restharrow against direct attack. Late in the tier, the PCs learn they must close the breach from the inside. As they prepare for the paragon tier, they recruit and train replacements to guard the village, so they can leave to take the necessary next step.

Paragon Tier: Into the Breach

Now that the characters have increased in power, they can venture into the breach. During the fight marking their shift to paragon tier, they discover a doorway into Sigil (see Chapter 6). The PCs use the City of Doors as their new home base. They wander the planes, piecing together the information they need to seal the Restharrow Breach.

The first few paragon levels are devoted to the characters becoming familiar with Sigil and navigating its various conflicts. Past heroics come back to haunt the PCs when comrades of dispatched enemies pursue the characters, seeking vengeance.

Early in their sojourn in Sigil, the PCs clash with the Red Marauders. The Red Marauders arrive in Sigil hoping to restore a dwindling planar breach. Their village economically relies on its access to Sigil, which imports construction materials from them. In fighting for their community, the Red Marauders pursue an admirable goal, but they stoop to unscrupulous methods to attain victory.

Each nemesis character serves as a foil to a particular PC. The counterparts exaggerate the worst traits of the corresponding PCs. The Red Marauder equivalent of a humble, stalwart paladin might be a domineering champion of a sinister deity. A mischievous rogue's opposite might engage in deadly practical jokes. Keep conflict with the Marauders indirect, taking the form of skill challenges and character interaction. When the two teams fight, give the PCs reasons not to slaughter their enemies.

Seeking information on the origin of planar breaches, the characters learn of a sage named Chi Machiku, who was investigating that topic when she mysteriously disappeared. Following her trail leads the PCs into adventures throughout the planes.

Upheaval in Sigil provides material for occasional change-of-pace episodes. The group's trainees from Restharrow could also show up in Sigil sporadically, leading to various side missions.

After laboriously reconstructing Machiku's movements from plane to plane, the PCs find her in a githyanki prison in the city of Tu'narath (see Manual of the Planes, page 111). When they spirit her back to safety after a series of tough encounters, the characters find her to be a gibbering, incoherent shadow of her former self. Machiku protected her mind from githyanki probing by sending portions of her consciousness throughout the planes. To restore Machiku's sanity and coherence, the PCs must embark on a series of quests to gather objects containing pieces of Machiku's consciousness.

During this phase, the PCs periodically notice the Red Marauders in pursuit. Later, the PCs learn that an oracle warned the Marauders about the characters. The Red Marauders believe that if the PCs succeed in their mission, they will destroy the precious planar breach.

The Red Marauders retrieve the final piece of Machiku's consciousness before the PCs do, bringing on a final showdown that ends the Red Marauders' role in the storyline. This encounter launches the PCs into their epic destinies.

Her mind intact again, Machiku lays out the mission that defines the rest of the PCs' careers: The Restharrow Breach is a symptom of a bigger problem.

Epic Tier: Astral Catastrophe

The entire Astral Sea is undergoing a series of turbulent changes. If it is not stabilized, the whole plane will implode, destroying the universe. Over the eons, excess magical energy has built up in the Astral Sea. Every time a deity or an immortal works a mass-scale ritual, the charge increases. Certain plane-spanning artifacts and vehicles also leak magical energy. The Astral Sea must discharge part of this energy before anyone can work great magic safely.

At the same time, conflict continues to escalate on the planes: the Blood War (see Manual of the Planes, page 89) has flared up again. When demons and devils are not battling each other, they raid other planes, searching for artifacts that will give them an advantage. The relics the fiends deploy and the plane-spanning modes of travel they use to retrieve the components leak a large amount of dangerous energy into the Astral Sea. Neither evidence nor persuasion convinces either side to disarm, because both evil forces suspect they might come out on top if they are left to their own devices.

To end the threat, the PCs must intervene in the Blood War and deal enough damage on both sides to force the adversaries to back down. The characters must inflict harm on both groups equally. Otherwise, one side could win the Blood War, an outcome nearly as dire as mutual destruction.

Pillars of the State

This campaign puts the PCs, fated from birth to be kings and queens, in the center of a political saga.

Heroic Tier: The Young Heirs

Each PC begins as a likely heir to the throne in one of the Six Kingdoms. (You can adjust the number of kingdoms to the size of your player group.) The Six Kingdoms have historical and cultural similarities but act as politically independent nations that share a common coastline. Once great, each kingdom now exists as a point of light separated from its fellow nations by swaths of lawless, monster-infested territory.

Design a home kingdom for each character appropriate to his or her background. Each PC's race or class should correspond to that of the royal family of his or her kingdom. For example:

People know the nation of Nizh for its trading fleet and ambitious merchant culture. The mining nation of Murisov boasts a long line of warrior-kings. Priests or paladins rule the land of Tarod, the home of numerous universities, cathedrals, and architects. The eerie kingdom of Karakho entrusts its throne only to a master of the arcane. Rulers of Zvetisk swear to protect its ancient forests. The rolling hills of wheat and barley in Mahin Fields make up the breadbasket of the Six Kingdoms.

The heroic tier trains the characters for the rigors of kingship. The regions' future rulers unite to rid their lands of monsters and brigands. In the Six Kingdoms, monarchs don't sit at home, issuing decrees and eating sweetmeats. Instead, rulers use their mighty powers on behalf of the people. So the adventurers might frequently come across their relatives, the current monarchs, while adventuring.

When they are not honing their abilities in the field, the future monarchs reside in their homeland capitals, where they participate in court intrigue. At upper levels of the tier, the player characters detect a conspiracy of subversive courtiers and functionaries. After several adventures that nearly flush these shadowy figures into the open, catastrophe strikes. Simultaneous coup attempts lead to the seizure of all six royal palaces and the deaths of the current rulers.

Paragon Tier: Long Live the Kings

The PCs kick off the paragon tier by destroying the internal conspiracy. How the conspirators slew the elders remains something of a mystery because the conspirators summoned creatures of unknown type and origin to do the dirty work.

The PCs have little time for mourning; they must ascend to their respective thrones. No longer do they perform missions suggested by others. Now, the PCs root out sources of trouble on their own. Skill challenges and character interactions alert the PCs of the various threats against their nations. These discoveries lead to encounters against monsters, internal rebels, and external enemies. The PCs might have to choose between two problems of apparently equal magnitude because they have the ability to address only one at a time. Encourage the PCs to develop long-term agendas for their kingdoms—agendas that suffer when the PCs leave to deal with a short-term crisis.

Require negotiation between the players as the interests of their separate kingdoms conflict. Start with outwardly simple choices. Do they put down goblin cattle raiders in the hinterlands of Mahin or take to the seas against the pirates threatening the Nizhian fleet?

After the PCs master the basic affairs of state, murkier questions arise. Murisovian miners seek permission to establish a guild. Nizhian traders advise against this development, claiming it will increase the price of iron. Do subversive tendencies drive the miners, or will granting their wishes avoid trouble and assure uninterrupted supplies for the kingdoms' forges?

If the sages of Karakho predict an invasion from sinister Feywild creatures unless the characters destroy a sacred grove in Zvetisk, which nation has its way?

Sometimes, the PCs can solve intractable problems by finding secret villains behind the scenes and thrashing them. Further into the tier, the PCs find agitators from the Iron States stirring up more trouble. This collection of city-states, huddled together on the other side of the sea, has never before posed a threat.

During this phase of the campaign, the time scale between levels expands. The rulers unite when major crises strike, though years can separate the monarchs' onstage time. During transitions that feature heavy roleplaying, the rulers perform the personal duties every monarch faces. They marry, have children, and train their heirs as heroic tier adventurers to continue the cycle.

At mid-tier, an invasion fleet from the Iron States arrives to conquer the Six Kingdoms. United by a cruel and militaristic philosophy, the invaders have transformed themselves into the Iron Empire. Under the pitiless Emperor Krek, the empire has already conquered and absorbed other nations on its side of the sea. Now it intends to add the PCs' kingdoms to its collection of vassal states.

Conflicts between kingdoms, once merely a challenge, now become a greater threat because dissension thwarts all attempts to muster against the Iron Empire. The rangers of Zvetisk resist efforts to use wood from their forests to build a fleet. Rivalry between the priestly caste of Tarod and Karakho's wizard schools holds up the construction of magical defenses. The PCs eventually realize they must unify their people into a single force in order to prevail against the Iron Empire. The characters must also decide among themselves whom to appoint as emperor, leaving all the others as regional governors. Finally, the characters must ensure that the virtues of the kingdoms remain untainted during the consolidation of power.

Epic Tier: Empire Makers

Repelling the invasion is a prelude to a greater undertaking. The PCs learn that Krek is one incarnation of a multidimensional entity planning similar invasions on parallel worlds, throughout the planes. If his multiple selves succeed in conquering seven worlds at once, he gains eternal dominion over all reality. Every world and plane will mirror his tyrannical Iron Empire.

He already has six worlds or planes in his grip and is close to conquering several others. The PCs must now export their combat expertise to these other dimensions and push back Krek's hold one world at a time.

Blood and Treasure

In this military-themed campaign, the PCs rise from humble beginnings to become generals in a war that begins in the world and extends to extraplanar battlefields.

Heroic Tier: Gathering Horde

The PCs begin as impoverished, rootless wanderers in the vast nation of Veratur. Marauding tribes of orcs and goblins have plunged Veratur, once a great civilization, into a dark age of barbarism. The central government is a shell of its former self. The leader, Autarch Ilius IV, cowers in his besieged palace, waiting for the invading tribes to breach the walls. Cut off from the dying central government, the consuls of Veratur's distant citadels must function as independent commanders.

War drives the PCs from peaceful occupations into lives of adventure. If the characters desire a life of servitude, they could sign up as soldiers at a citadel. Or, they could form a free militia, a small band of heroes that skirmishes against enemy forces, defeating them and looting their equipment. Occasionally, grateful townsfolk reward the militia with treasure and food.

(Like the middle tier of "Pillars of the State," this phase unfolds on an extended time scale, with interludes of months between levels.)

As the characters progress through the tier, their fame spreads. Now battle-hardened veterans, the PCs attract a steady stream of volunteers anxious to fight in the militia. Intersperse encounters against orcs, goblins, and allied creatures with skill challenges in which the PCs direct their private armies against massed forces. Other sequences require the PCs to instill discipline, supply their growing legion, and prevent their own troops from exploiting the terrified citizenry.

To propel the characters into the paragon tier, create a final skill challenge and encounter composed of a large engagement in which the characters must drive besieging forces away from the Veraturi capital.

Paragon Tier: On Muddy Battlefield

Certain that invaders would soon overrun his citadel, old Autarch hung himself. Atinar, Autarch's inexperienced, good-hearted son, appoints the PCs as the generals of this shattered realm. He charges them with the mission of driving the barbarian hordes from Veraturi soil.

As the PCs continue to fight barbarian leaders, servitors, and summoned creatures, they must also build their private army into a new Veraturi force. Skill challenges revolve around recruitment and training. As the characters move from citadel to citadel, victories allow them to absorb existing forces into their reconstructed national army.

With the local economy devastated, the characters must figure out how to fund and equip their army.

Nudging

According to long-standing tradition, DMs lose their pacing control when the characters huddle together to make plans. I used to follow this unwritten rule, keeping largely silent when the characters were planning. Yes, the game would often bog down at these points, as players took opposite sides of a moral or tactical issue and then dug in. Interactions between player characters can be enormously fun—provided that the scenes build and go somewhere. The more they resemble the way we argue in real life, the less engaging they become. Actual arguments are extremely repetitive, consisting mainly of points stated and restated.

Eventually I learned to set tradition aside and gently intervene in player deliberations. If—and only if—the discussion starts to circle in on itself, I take on the role of mediator. I restate the various positions and hint toward solutions. Often a good answer is proposed early on, then quickly abandoned for no good reason. If so, I bring that up again.

The point is never to impose a solution. By nudging, I'm acting as a real-time scene editor, cutting through the repetition to steer the group toward a fruitful—and mutual—solution.

Sometimes the conversation stalls because the huddle was called prematurely, before gathering enough information. Players might be leaping to false conclusions, or trying to plan their way around too many possibilities. With more investigation, they could reduce the number of variables they need to take into account. I used to fret when they didn't have any NPCs to prompt them when they needed information. Now, in DM voice, I suggest right out that they need to go out and learn more.

—Robin Laws

This task provides motivation for change-of-pace encounters, in which the group tackles various other creature threats to earn necessary treasure and equipment.

When the monetary reward from an encounter dovetails with narrative events, create two sets of treasure. One set allows the PCs to find the magic equipment they need for their characters, and the larger set measures their success in the wider storyline.

Throughout the tier, build up a mortal orc/goblin hybrid named Tuszu for the villain role.

In the upper half of the tier, the final earthly battle for Veratur plays out. By now, each PC commands his or her own army.

As the war grows closer to a conclusion, the PCs notice that supernaturally powerful orc and goblin champions lead more of the enemy forces. On the eve of the final battle for Veratur, the PCs learn that the deities of the plane of Chernoggar, Bane and Gruumsh, have put aside their animosity in an attempt to invade and overrun the world. If Veratur falls, the PCs can expect a full-scale attack from Chernoggar.

Epic Tier: War Against War

If the PCs defeat their enemies in the war for Veratur, the characters earn epic status, and they have a chance to kill Tuszu. However, their victory will be short-lived unless they take the battle to Chernoggar and defeat its leaders once and for all.

Although the characters' NPC comrades eagerly anticipate the battle, the ordinary soldiers of Veratur want only to rebuild their mangled nation. The PCs must then travel the planes to recruit heroes willing to invade Chernoggar. Gruumsh and Bane learn of the PCs' efforts and send enemies to deter the characters, which offers encounters to fill out the storyline between skill challenges and narrative scenes.

Finally, the PCs begin a close-fought struggle to take and hold the entire plane. The campaign ends with climactic battles against Bane and then Gruumsh. Upon the deities' defeat, Chernoggar transforms into a peaceful land. A golden era of harmony sweeps the mortal worlds—until your next campaign, when bloody conflict again rears its head.

The Möbius Trippers

This campaign frame takes the PCs on a journey through the time stream.

Heroic Tier: Machine Dreams

Ever since the PCs can remember, they have had similar dreams. The characters meet up with each other and learn of their shared nighttime visions. These dreams revolve around the search for components of a disassembled machine. The PCs believe they must reassemble the machine and use it for its intended, albeit unknown, purpose. If the characters fail to complete this task, they cannot achieve their essential destinies, and a disaster will unfold.

The group's heroic tier adventures revolve around the quest for these parts. Creatures guard or control a majority of the pieces, and the PCs could earn a few components as rewards for tasks. A few individual parts have minor magical powers. Perhaps one or two of the items are currently warding off a devastating flood or preserving a farmland's fertility. In these situations, the group might want to compensate for the items' effects to claim them in good conscience. When the device is assembled, it looks like a vehicle.

During this tier, make associations between each PC and a major deity of your setting's pantheon. Clerics and paladins have these parallels built in. For other characters, subtle thematic associations suffice. These chosen deities are referred to hereafter (in the epic tier section) as the spotlight deities.

Paragon Tier: The Tapestry Torn

The encounter that enables the group to enter the paragon tier provides the final piece they need to construct the vehicle.

In this tier, the PCs embark on a time-hopping journey. They can travel forward and backward in time. Provide them with a history of your world and let them choose their own missions as they travel through it. As the PCs explore the time stream, you can introduce the following story elements that illustrate the laws of time during this campaign.

- Actions the characters take in the past can alter the course of history (subject to the following provisions).
- However, a law of conservation appears to be in effect: For instance, if you try to eliminate a tyrant from the time stream by killing his father before the tyrant is born, you find a similar cruel leader, of different parentage, on the throne when you return to the present. The ruler looks different from the dictator the group erased, but the overall historical situation remains essentially unaltered.
- A barrier separates normal historical time from the mythic realm of the deities. The time vehicle can't penetrate this barrier.
- Time travelers can't go to any time period when they have already existed. Attempts to travel to their own pasts, or to other times they have already adventured in, fail.
- If the characters attempt to travel into the future, they can do so. The players might deduce that their characters cease to exist in normal time soon after what they consider the present day.

VINCENT DUTRAIT

Once the players figure out these precepts, and perhaps tire of self-directed exploration, the adventurers stumble across a rival group of time-trippers. The God-Killers, a conspiracy of wild-eyed arcanists, seek to free the mortal races from the supposed tyranny of deities. The God-Killers have been wreaking havoc throughout the time stream in their quest to penetrate the mythic realm of the deities.

The climactic battle that destroys the God-Killer leadership elevates the PCs to epic tier.

Epic Tier: Ascension

Shortly after achieving this victory, the PCs realize the God-Killers partially succeeded at their plan. They erased the spotlight deities—and Asmodeus—from history.

Wherever the PCs go in their time vehicle, they find a crisis set off by the absence of a spotlight deity. The adventure allows them to solve the localized problem, but another disaster awaits them at each future destination. Eventually, the PCs discover that the God-Killers' partial success rendered the time stream unstable. If it is not eventually rectified, the absence of the spotlight deities will unravel all existence. To prevent this catastrophe, the characters must visit the mythic past by replicating the alterations to the God-Killers' time vehicle that allowed them to cross the barrier that separates ordinary and mythic time. The changes wrought by the absence of the spotlight deities complicate the mission, which extends through a series of adventures until they reach the upper reaches of the epic tier.

The climactic sequence of the campaign occurs when the PCs reach the beginning of time and find the spotlight deities still missing. The surviving deities cannot begin the myth of creation without the spotlight deities. The PCs piece together the final revelation: They must become the deities and take part in the creation stories. And one PC must doom himself to eternal evil and torment by taking on the role of Asmodeus.

As an epilogue, the players realize what they must do to ensure the integrity of the universe. They must disassemble the machine and scatter its pieces throughout time, so their past selves can discover it, go back to the dawn of time, and become the founding deities. All the PCs' actions were predestined to bring about the creation of the universe.

Dungeoncraft: The Campaign Arc

–James Wyatt, from
Dungeoncraft Episode 3, Dungeon 153

When planning your campaign, you don't have to come up with thirty levels worth of adventures before the PCs set foot in their first dungeon. You just need to sketch out the general arc of the campaign. Where does it start, what happens in the middle, and where and how does it end? If you make that outline early on, you might find it easier to plan adventures as the campaign progresses and plant seeds for future adventures as you go.

The decision to start my campaign in the village and dungeons of Greenbrier helped me figure out how to start my campaign, as well. I also figured out the theme and flavor elements I wanted to highlight in the course of the campaign—specifically, aberrations and the influence of the Far Realm. The origin of Greenbrier Chasm inspired me to consider that the epic-level player characters in my game might someday fight a fiery entity that escaped from the chasm. One day, they must either destroy it or return it to its prison. I also considered having the characters explore the chasm in the heroic tier and then return when they reach an appropriate level to fight other aberrations.

The following broad outline sketches out my campaign arc.

Level 1: The characters make their first expedition into Greenbrier Chasm and fight warped goblins and fell taints. Then the warped goblins raid the farms, and the characters return to stop the raids.

Level 10 (approximately): Back into Greenbrier Chasm to fight foulspawn. (The foulspawn in the Monster Manual range from levels 8–12.) A level 14 mind flayer would be a good major villain at that point.

Paragon Tier: As the centerpiece of my campaign, I want to run the 1999 adventure The Gates of Firestorm Peak. The original adventure targets character levels 5–8, a range too low for the scope of my adventure. Since I want to design all the encounters anyway, I place this adventure in the mid-paragon tier.

Epic Climax: Characters must fight the fiery aberrant creature that escaped from the chasm and burned the forest.

That event starts a campaign arc heavily flavored with aberrations. I see two gaps in this layout. First, I want to involve in the campaign at least one aberration-hunting organization from the 3rd Edition supplement Lords of Madness. I can design paragon paths associated with these organizations and present them to my players as options, so I should probably introduce the players to the organizations before they reach 11th level. I decide to place that encounter around the time they return to Greenbrier Chasm. The organizations could send them back to the Chasm, or the PCs could learn about the organizations as they explore the Chasm. Either way works.

Second, I want the characters to delve into Greenbrier Chasm a third time, probably at the high paragon or low epic levels. Aboleths occupy the high paragon levels, so they make an appropriate threat for the deepest reaches of the Chasm.

With these gaps tightened up, I have outlined a grand story: Young characters from the backward village of Greenbrier face aberrations, seal the Vast Gate, shut off the Far Realm influence creeping through the gate, and defeat the aberration that escaped from Greenbrier Chasm.

Getting Organized

I sketch out a story that makes fighting aberrations a major part of the campaign. The organizations in Lords of Madness impressed me, so I want to use them in my game. The book features three main organizations devoted to fighting aberrations, plus a fourth tradition (the Keepers of the Cerulean Sign) that fills a similar role. I adapt each one to my campaign. The presence of aberrations profoundly influences this region of the world, and these organizations formed to protect civilization from the depredations of aberrations. Because the player characters must ultimately protect civilization from the threats I have in mind, I want these organizations to serve as resources for character development. I can create paragon paths or feats for the characters in my campaign associated with these organizations. These paths and feats allow my players to build characters with traits that help them fight aberrations and immerse their characters in the ages-long struggle that defines the history of this region.

The Circle of the True defends the world from the aberrant forces that corrupt and destroy nature. Its members sometimes have ties to the primal power source or the fey. I then merge the Gatekeepers from Eberron into the Circle of the True. The modern organization practices numerous Gatekeeper traditions, and orcs in the wilds still preserve the pure Gatekeeper way. Gatekeeper orcs have the same negative disposition toward the PCs as other orcs. But this history makes it possible for a player character belonging to the Circle to strike an uneasy alliance with an orc Gatekeeper to seal a Far Realm portal, such as the one in Firestorm Peak.

I convert the Society of the Sanctified Mind into a scholarly society removed from the front lines of the battle against aberrations. However, this organization has an extensive collection of lore about aberrations. The group worships Ioun, who is also the deity of prophecy. The Society's records could detail who bound the aberration, as well as why and where. And the group might protect prophecies regarding the aberration's escape and eventual destruction.

A holy knightly order, the Topaz Order protects the civilized races from aberrant monster races. This religious order venerates Bahamut, Moradin, and Pelor. Based on what I already know about Greenbrier, the Topaz Order influences the village and the surrounding area, and the players likely encounter this organization first.

The Keepers of the Cerulean Sign are lone individuals who oppose the twisted cults that revere aberrations in the shadows of civilized society. I don't want to make these individuals the focus of the campaign. So maybe a cult of aberration worshipers lives in Lake Town, and the characters enlist a Keeper to combat that threat in the city, or the Keeper could recruit them. I used a cabal of mad alienist sorcerers in my 3rd Edition adventure The Speaker in Dreams—maybe I can steal elements from that adventure when the time comes.

Filling the Holes

Now I want to add variety to the campaign outline. My players don't want to fight aberrations their entire adventuring careers, and I don't want to limit my adventure and encounter design. I have clear ideas for aberration-themed adventures along the way, and I want to combine those events with adventures unconnected to the main theme.

So next, I look at my campaign map and review my notes. When I sketch out the first circle around the village of Greenbrier, I generate a couple adventure ideas to fill out the first ten levels of my characters' careers.

Tower Watch: After their first forays into Greenbrier Chasm, I let the characters explore the ancient ruins in the south. I start with a straightforward dungeon crawl in the ruins (inhabited by orcs), and then I encourage the PCs to venture into the mysterious tower these ruins are named for.

What if the top of the tower is an observatory? It could plant the seeds for information about the comet that heralds the opening of the Gates of Firestorm Peak. Or the orcs in the ruins could include a wise old Gatekeeper who passes on important information to the characters that could lead them to future, more peaceful, interactions with Gatekeeper orcs. I want this adventure to vary from the main theme of my campaign arc, and I want to connect the two. The characters leave Greenbrier (the village and the chasm) and fight orcs and whatever else I throw at them in the tower. Then, at or near the end of the adventure, the PCs receive a foreshadowing of future events that ties back to the aberrations of the chasm. This glimpse offers the characters their first chance to see a real campaign forming. They have a purpose beyond fighting in random encounters against aberrant monsters in their first adventure.

Harrows Pass: I haven't placed this location on my map yet—I just like the name. I have vague notions of undead haunting this place. I could make this adventure an "on the way from here to there" encounter, something fun and different that happens to the characters on their journey to their next adventure. In the Greenbrier area, the PCs learn about the weird occurrences near Firestorm Peak and decide to investigate. To reach Firestorm Peak, they must venture through Harrows Pass. That plan could work, but the players might feel this adventure stands in the way of what they want to do—investigate Firestorm Peak. I want to give them another reason to go into the pass, so I can use the adventure in Harrows Pass to plant additional hooks for the Firestorm Peak adventure. Or the Harrows Pass adventure could foreshadow the weirdness arising in the mountains, meaning this adventure could serve as a prelude to the Gates adventure at the beginning of the paragon tier.

Epic Levels: Looking at my sketch outline so far, I see a big gap in what the characters do between the end of the Firestorm Peak adventure and the campaign-ending battle with the epic aberration. I could encourage the characters to make their third foray into Greenbrier Chasm, to explore its deepest reaches and fight aboleths. I can extend this adventure into a long Underdark foray. Maybe the characters must travel underground from Firestorm Peak all the way back to Greenbrier Chasm. They emerge from the chasm to retrace the steps of the ancient aberration, find its new lair, and confront it. Looking at the epic-level monsters in the Monster Manual, I decide that aberrant monsters, such as swordwings and gibbering orbs, could join the aboleths as enemies on this trek.

At this point, I want to leave those levels sketchy. A lot can happen between now and then, and I want to stay open to possible new directions, subthemes, and my players' desires. So I have the following outline of my campaign arc, filled out from where I started.

Levels 1-3: Greenbrier Chasm (first forays).

Levels 4-5: Tower Watch.

Levels 6-8: Lake Town—Speaker in Dreams?

Levels 9-11: Greenbrier Chasm (second foray, fighting foulspawn and mind flayer boss)—introduce Lords of Madness organizations.

Levels 12-13: Harrows Pass (single adventure).

Levels 14-20: The Gates of Firestorm Peak.

Levels 21-28: Greenbrier Chasm (third foray: aboleths, swordwings, gibbering orb).

Levels 29-30: Fight the fiery creature that escaped from the chasm and burned the forest.

CHAPTER 6

Paragon Campaigns

A PLAYER character's early career likely entails hack-and-slash adventure, descending into near-surface dungeons, and skirmishing with kobolds, orcs, and gnolls. At paragon status, bold horizons unfold before the PCs. They battle in new places and attract adulation and danger in equal measure.

This chapter includes the following sections:

- Paragon Status: Whether players reach this status level by level or the DM starts characters at the paragon tier, when a campaign reaches 11th level, the stakes change. Paragon tier campaigns might take PCs into the murky depths of the Underdark or across the scarred landscapes of cursed lands. The characters could explore the planar realities of the Astral Sea or the Elemental Chaos. At the paragon tier, PCs are becoming powerful enough to ascend thrones, command armies, and build new empires from the ruins of the old.
- Sigil, the City of Doors: Introduce plane-hopping, paragon adventurers to the PCs' potential new home base, Sigil. Sigil offers an infinite number of dimensional gateways to other locations. If the PCs fall into disharmony with the city and its residents, they might learn why people also call the city "The Cage."
- A Conspiracy of Doors: This adventure for 11th-level player characters introduces Sigil to your campaign. If it exists, the saying goes, you can find it in Sigil. But what happens when the supply lines are cut and expected imports don't arrive on schedule? That's when Estavan, the face of the Planar Trade Consortium, seeks out a group of adventurers to trace the supplies back to their source and discover what's causing the holdup. What starts as a minor inconvenience could lead to panic, starvation, riots, or worse (such as the attention of the Lady of Pain) if the supply lines aren't restored.

RANDY GALLEGOS

When player characters make the leap to paragon status, their characters have stepped onto a new plateau. The challenges they face and the fruits that victory brings increase in magnitude. At the paragon tier, the characters' powers increase, and the world takes notice of the PCs' achievements and potential.

When your PCs reach the paragon tier, encourage them to search for new horizons. As players gain levels, their access to more potent powers, rituals, and magic gives them greater influence over the world. Push your players to seek new challenges, whether in the courts of power, within the Astral Sea, or among the eddies of time.

Reaching Paragon Tier

As the DM, you can choose the way in which the PCs attain the paragon tier. For new players, the leveling approach works best. PCs start at first level and gradually reach the paragon tier as they learn how to play their characters and get a feel for the game. Not only does this approach offer beginning players ample opportunity to become comfortable with their characters, players might also savor the accomplishment of reaching the paragon tier more if they have earned their way up.

Certain campaign concepts work best if you start characters at the paragon tier. Only heroes of paragon level or higher will have the tools to participate in a campaign built around certain subjects, such as:

- high-level politics.
- grand-scale military engagements.
- sustained adventures in the Underdark or similarly hostile locations.
- world-hopping adventure.

Wreathed in Glory

The characters already demonstrated remarkable skills as heroic adventurers. As they progressed, they noticed signs of a greater destiny awaiting them. As the PCs enter the paragon tier, they exhibit their potential for greatness.

By this point in their careers, the player characters have achieved fame. The common folk know the characters' names and have heard exaggerated legends of their deeds. Wandering troubadours sing ballads about the PCs, spreading their fame across the land.

Your players might react to signs of their characters' growing fame with wariness, as a burden or an annoyance that attracts unwanted attention and saddles adventurers with unpleasant duties. Paragon tier characters command respect. Fame shouldn't limit them; it should increase their options.

- alternate realities.
- time travel.

This is not to say that you can't run these types of campaigns with PCs who have not yet attained the paragon tier. You can lay the groundwork for paragon tier campaign themes long before your players have reached paragon status. For instance, to set up a political game during the heroic tier, introduce rulers and other members of the elite class as impossibly distant figures of power. As the adventurers gain levels, they move closer to the heart of power through new contacts. When the PCs reach the paragon tier, the inner circle welcomes them.

You could build a growing threat of war during the heroic tier of a campaign. When the adventurers reach the paragon tier, major hostilities commence.

To foreshadow planar campaigns, add denizens of these environments into encounters that heroic-level PCs have in the natural world.

Crowns and Thrones

Players who enjoy negotiation, intrigue, and intricate storylines excel in politically based campaigns. These adventurers can use their paragon status to leverage themselves into positions of influence, either behind thrones or on them.

Gaining Influence

When the characters attain paragon status, they attract the attention of top local leaders. Successful rulers cultivate strong relations with local paragons and treat them as champions and advisors, sometimes assigning them weighty responsibilities. Rulers rely on paragon characters to vanquish enemies, gather information, provide advice, and fill the national coffers with treasure. Rulers might also ask favored paragon characters to wage war for them.

The Body Politic

Paragon characters with access to higher levels of government will discover much more about the local political situation than they were aware of at heroic tier. A baron or lord most likely controls and protects each village, town, or collection of settlements. Elders, mayors, or councils oversee the cities and towns. The PCs now wield greater influence over the local rulers at all levels, and they are more likely to find themselves in a position where they are required to mediate conflicting interests. Some nobles might treat paragon adventurers as rivals, rebels, or enemies. A town council might appeal to the heroes for help against a corrupt lord. Various factions of merchants might attempt to win the PCs to their cause against the others. In such circumstances, the characters' skills at negotiation can be at least as important as their skills in battle.

Joining the Elite

To add an interesting complication to your campaign, create a nation in which the ruler must balance the interests of competing elites. The landholders might represent a traditional power base, and the growing merchant houses might be threatening to eclipse them. Either of these elite classes could offer the heroes membership in exchange for their support in its intrigues against the other.

Paragon adventurers could buy their way into the banking class with an investment of their treasure. A character might marry into an influential noble family after rescuing an heir. The PCs could gain shares in a merchant house by eliminating a band of outlaws threatening an important trade route. Fulfilling religious obligations through quests could earn a cleric or a paladin elite status in his or her religious hierarchy.

Factions divide every elite circle. The collective group fights to protect its interests while families, companies, sects, guilds, or other units compete to increase their own status and wealth. The adventurers might ally with one such faction and use their status and talents to help that faction undercut its rivals and rise to prominence.

Alternatively, each player character could represent a different elite faction in a society that has competing centers of power. The adventurers would then work toward a common goal of creating a coalition of these rival groups. NPC rivals oppose the PCs, perhaps while posing as allies. If the heroes choose to involve themselves in political intrigue at this level, they could learn the hard way how difficult it can be to distinguish friend from foe.

Adventurers might also act on behalf of a ruler they admire, or work against an unpopular or illegitimate ruler. Maybe the PCs undertake to install a favored NPC on the throne; players who have a taste for intrigue might even attempt to seize it for themselves.

JULIE DILLON

Wielding Power

Player characters can exercise power directly. This choice involves the player characters in governing and offers them both authority and the opportunity to play a part in more intricate storylines.

Typically, one character ascends to power and the others join the ruler's retinue. However, this approach introduces a command structure into the game that could create conflicts among the players. Make sure they operate by consensus. Watch for attendance problems: If a player who has a key role frequently misses game sessions, other players might grow frustrated.

To avoid an unequal power distribution, give each player character an equal power base. Make them

Power in a D&D World

In a typical D&D world concept, the last great empire or kingdom collapsed about a century ago and a terrible dark age now grips the world. Monsters roam the wilderness, and points of light dot the countryside. People congregate in these havens of civilization, where adventurers can rest and resupply between forays into the untamed wilds.

Democracies as we know them rarely exist in fantasy worlds. Instead, barons respond to the needs of their citizens—or fail to. As popular figures who walk among the people, paragon characters are in a position to interact with the common people and to see what effects the actions of rulers have on the country as a whole.

Within a society, elite classes hold great influence because they control the primary sources of wealth. These elites include landholders, merchants, and financiers, among others. In a fantasy world, membership in the political elite can also derive from divine favor, control of magic artifacts, or alliances with legendary creatures.

Above the nobles and the other elite classes is the king or queen. Paragon characters are more likely to interact with a land's elites and monarchs. At this level, the characters' support for a nation's political system becomes more important. Paragon PCs are in a position to judge whether a leader is fit to rule, and to enforce their judgment.

allied lords who struggle together against an encroaching, overwhelming menace. Run a ruler-level political campaign only if you can comfortably include concurrent cutaway sequences in which the player characters split up to perform equally important tasks.

If you start the game in the paragon tier, you can appoint the adventurers as fixtures of government. Design the available positions as part of your world-creation process, and let the players divvy them up when they build their characters.

Building up to a paragon tier political campaign requires advance preparation in the heroic tier. Establish a path to power for the characters, possibly by designating one player character as heir to a throne. It follows that he or she would appoint companions as trusted advisors.

In a D&D world, ascending to a throne does not end an adventuring career. Slaying monsters and smiting enemies take on higher stakes when the fate of a barony or duchy hangs in the balance. Rulers also have a magical connection to the places they rule. So when plague or pestilence strikes the land, a queen's subjects expect her to ride with her trusted heroes to destroy the source of the curse. If barbarian hordes howl at the gates, the king must challenge their chieftain to personal combat. If the drow invade from below, the ruler plunges into the Underdark, leaving trusted functionaries in charge while he or she conducts a multiyear crusade to save the land and its people.

Masters of War

Your paragon tier campaign might feature mighty armies clashing to resolve ultimate battles of good against evil. You can use this approach to extend a campaign in which PCs rule a nation. Your player character rulers and their retinues might lead armies charging headlong into enemy ranks.

If your players want their military engagements unsullied by politics, appoint them as commanders. In this model, they lead the action on the battlefield without entangling themselves in intrigue or the responsibilities of rule. The rank they hold depends on the setting you chose. In a Roman-style empire, the PCs act as generals of a professional army. A medieval setting casts them as knights and nobles commanding a mix of mercenaries and peasant militias. A campaign set in the Dark Ages would have the PCs rove the land as war chieftains supported by loyal barbarians. In any case, the characters must regularly leave their command duties to engage in standard encounters against high-ranking enemies. They engage in these fights in order to:

- prove themselves to potential recruits or allies.
- open supply lines.
- disrupt shipments to the enemy.
- raid for supplies or money.
- rescue prisoners.
- take enemy hostages.
- defeat enemy leaders before they take the field.

Resolving Battles

You can resolve large-scale battles in several ways. Some possible methods are described here, but you are free to establish specific criteria for winning a particular battle. You can use the same method consistently or switch between methods as adventure pacing and dramatic tension demand.

Dramatic Decree

Decide the battle's victor ahead of time. This approach works best in a campaign that mirrors historical events. Use this technique cautiously: If the player characters are not on the winning side, you need to ensure that they are still presented with an achievable goal.

Whether the characters are queens, generals, or legates, they will need a reason to fight in a particular battle, and a clear objective to fight for. For example, as a part of a larger overall battle the PCs might be tasked with capturing and holding a strategic location, with preventing enemy reinforcements from making a flanking maneuver, or with destroying key resources such as stockpiles of food or weapons. Whether the heroes accomplish their objective or fail should have a clear influence on the ongoing war. This way, the PCs can win an encounter even if their side loses the larger battle.

Battles as Skill Challenges

When the player characters participate in a battle, whether as generals or frontline warriors, they can determine its outcome with a skill challenge. To reflect situations in which the PCs' army has an advantage over the enemy, use low or moderate DCs for related skill checks. In situations in which the tide turns against the heroes, use high DCs and complex skill challenges.

To give skills more influence in battle, start narrating before forces hit the field. The first time you determine a battle's outcome with skill challenges, suggest ways in which the characters can influence the battle with their skills. Treat the following list as a starting point and add to it as players come up with more possibilities.

Prior to battle:

- Bluff: Sow demoralizing false rumors among the enemy's ranks.
- Diplomacy: Recruit additional allies; convince mercenaries or poorly motivated enemy allies to desert or defect to your side.
- Dungeoneering: Run mining and sapping operations to overcome enemy defenses.

- Insight: Counter rumors spread by the enemy among your troops.
- Nature: Find natural terrain to attack or defend from.
- Thievery: Steal a crucial artifact of martial magic.

While in the fray:

- Acrobatics: Dart in, around, and through enemy ranks, spreading confusion.
- Arcana: Counteract enemy powers and rituals.
- Athletics: Bash forcefully through enemy lines.
- Heal: Administer aid to the wounded, improve morale, or allow injured troops to rejoin the fight.
- Intimidate: Spur beleaguered enemy units to rout.
- Perception: Spot weak points in enemy formations.
- Religion: Bless your forces or curse the enemy.
- Stealth: Maneuver into position undetected.

If the adventurers succeed on the skill challenge, their side emerges from the battle victorious. If they fail, the enemy drives the PCs' forces from the battlefield or captures them, depending on your story.

Combat of Leaders

Have the adventurers fight the enemy's leaders in an honor combat to determine the outcome of the war. To use this approach, you will need to create an encounter that represents a key turning point of the battle. Prior to the start of full-scale battle, allow the PCs to issue an honor combat challenge offering to stake the battle's outcome on the result of a single encounter between the heroes and opposing leaders.

Allow players to control the nature of this encounter to some degree, by letting the adventurers negotiate the terms of the honor combat: location, time of day, weapons, and other such details. If you like, these negotiations can be resolved through a series of skill challenges.

When designing the honor combat encounter, consider the overall state of the war. If the adventurers' army is fighting a superior force, make the encounter one or two levels higher than the PCs' level. If they are fighting an equal or inferior force, set the level of the encounter equal to that of the group.

Noncombat Resolution

For variety, you could allow a battle to be determined by the characters' actions outside of combat. Present the players with the possibility of achieving victory through the accomplishment of a specific goal. This could involve acquiring a mighty artifact, assassinating an enemy leader, or discovering crucial military or political intelligence. If the adventurers succeed, the battle resolves in their favor.

Numerous Battles Make a War

Include multiple battles in an adventure or campaign in which the adventurers wage war, and have the scenario culminate in a final, decisive engagement. Set the encounter up in such a way that the player characters have an opportunity to engage the leaders of the opposing army. The PCs might receive intelligence identifying the enemy's command location, or during battle they might recognize the battle standard of their adversary across the front lines.

In whichever way you set the stage for the ultimate battle, take into account the history of this war. Prior victories should stack the odds in favor of the adventurers: The terrain should work in their favor, the level of the encounter should equal the level of the PCs, and related skill challenges should use low or moderate DCs. Prior losses should influence the final battle in ways less advantageous to the heroes.

When you are designing this encounter, make sure to consider the consequences of both failure and success for the characters. If one of the characters is the ruler of an embattled nation, what are the results if that army is defeated? Will the enemy nation annex important territory? Will barbarian hordes sweep through the nation, pillaging food and valuables and leaving destruction and famine in their wake? Will the PC ruler be deposed?

And what will be the consequences if the adventurers win? The heroes' rewards should be commensurate with the risks they undertook to achieve this final victory.

Down to the Depths

Groups dominated by explorers, power gamers, slayers, and thinkers might test their paragon status during grueling sojourns into the Underdark. They put aside the relative comforts of near-surface dungeoneering for a prolonged crusade in a hostile environment. The prevailing mood might darken as adventurers struggle to survive. They cannot jaunt back to town and sleep in warm beds, shop for supplies, or spend an evening in a tavern. Food and water become precious resources crucial to survival.

Treated as Monsters

Civilized races, including drow, mind flayers, aboleths, and duergar, inhabit the Underdark, and few of them welcome surface folk. The towns and cities of the drow and the illithids pose serious danger to surface dwellers. These races treat intruders as invading monsters. Capable champions of the Underdark scramble to protect their constituents. Others cry out for the watch, militia fighters, and volunteers to join the fray.

What might begin as an encounter against the nearest group of defenders can segue into a daunting skill challenge as the adventurers flee to safety. If the PCs fail, defending races shackle the adventurers, strip them of gear, and imprison them. Once captured, the characters await torture, interrogation, and slaughter. Although the PCs might escape through cunning, luck, or success at a skill challenge, they might find that losing crucial food and equipment is an equally serious threat to their survival.

Unaligned Underdark races, such as dwarves and deep gnomes, also dislike crusading characters and bar them from entering settlements. Adventurers might find these races secretive, ungenerous, and suspicious. Harboring adventurers who attacked neighboring drow, mind flayer, or aboleth settlements would invite reprisals from these formidable enemies. Also, past raiding parties from the surface world have abused dwarf and deep gnome hospitality by stealing food, water, artifacts, and secrets.

Characters should not necessarily trust dwarves and deep gnomes who welcome adventurers into their strongholds. Thieves and slavers run some of these communities, and they bind sleeping guests, strip them of valuable magic, and sell them to drow or fomorian neighbors.

Deprived of Contact

The Underdark limits opportunities for player characters to interact with NPCs. Adventurers can't wander into a settlement and casually engage strangers in conversation. Adventurers might go for weeks without seeing a chatty vendor, a rumor-dispensing bartender, or an informative street urchin. Other explorers and the occasional hermit or madman account for the few communicative, neutral creatures that the group might come across. These circumstances might make exploring the Underdark an unpleasant experience for actors and storytellers.

Without interaction scenes, interludes between encounters shorten in the Underdark, so increase the number of encounters you prepare per session.

Locating Shelter

Characters needing rest in the Underdark face a difficult challenge. The adventurers must make their own safe place here. First, the characters must find a location, within raiding distance of their target, that enemy patrols do not monitor. Few chambers meeting this specification exist. Searching for a suitable base can take days of combat-filled exploration, because no race relinquishes a good base. Creatures of all types covet a cavern capable of providing decent shelter. Explorers should consider taking lairs only from unintelligent or antisocial creatures, since outposts held by civilized races receive regular visitors capable of taking them back.

The original occupants of the adventurers' new base might not return, but other creatures could take up residence in the adventuring group's absence.

Keeping Supplied

Characters will most likely end up scavenging for food and water in the Underdark. Few vendors provide meals here, and the underground environment offers little edible foraging, except for mushrooms and other fungi. Caverns can be dry as deserts or dripping with water contaminated by disease or poison.

You can leave the details of the group's food and water supply abstract. Occasionally tell them that they must replenish their food and water supplies. On the other hand, players sometimes enjoy tracking their in-game resources. If you have this type of player in your group, allow him or her to keep careful records of supply levels at all times.

Adventurers who run low on food or water can find small quantities of the necessary supply by succeeding on Dungeoneering checks with hard DCs. PCs might stumble upon traps or enter difficult encounters while foraging. To acquire significant quantities of supplies, the PCs must win skill challenges or defeat other creatures and take their supplies.

Darkness in the Light

D&D players might regard the Underdark as the classic test of any paragon character's mettle, but players can find regions of equivalent hostility on the surface of the world.

Cursed Lands

During the apocalyptic wars that destroyed the empires of eons past, long-forgotten magic scourged great swaths of the surface world. This magic left behind cursed lands, places where ordinary plants and animals cannot flourish. Strange, venomous animals, warped and twisted by fell magic, prowl across blasted landscapes and through toxic forests. Ghosts and wraiths haunt the buried imperial capitals that lie at the epicenters of these cursed lands. Undead remnants of slaughtered populations wander numbly through the ruins of their obliterated homes. Golems and other automatons constructed by the ancients patrol long-abandoned strongholds, ready to tear intruders to pieces.

Hordelands

Populated by warring tribes of nomadic barbarians, the hordelands contain vast, infertile steppes where natives skirmish constantly. Although adventurers in the heroic tier could overcome individual denizens of the hordelands, only paragon or epic characters dare to explore these realms and face large groups of their inhabitants.

Two or three competing barbarian races dominate the typical hordeland. The term "horde" conjures visions of orcs, goblins, gnolls, ogres, and lizardfolk. Some of these fearsome tribes are made up of humans; others are composed of dwarves, elves, tieflings, or dragonborn. Natives fight from the backs of swift horses and weirder mounts, and tribal folk employ magic vehicles left over from past ages.

Any nation near a hordeland fears the ascension of a great war leader who can rouse the feuding clans to united action. When this happens, the hordes coalesce into seething, bloodthirsty armies and swarm across the land like locusts, leveling every settlement they encounter. When a new chief arises in the hordelands, courageous adventurers must plunge deep into nomad territory to slay this charismatic leader before he or she unites an army.

Kingdoms of Evil

Certain civilized nations, gripped by evil or ruled by monsters, display the same hostility to good or unaligned adventurers as the drow or the mind flayers of the Underdark.

Intelligent, powerful undead sometimes install themselves as leaders of nations and city-states. Vampires, in particular, seek thrones to perch upon, so they can bleed populaces of both blood and money.

Lich kings also seek to rule, so they can sap citizens of their life force and use it to fuel magical experiments. A few of these dusty-veined monarchs dimly remember ruling as mortals in ancient empires. They seek to rediscover the forgotten rituals or sorcerous siege engines that destroyed their original kingdoms.

Ancient dragons might openly declare themselves rulers, but most dragons prefer to manipulate crowned puppets to reign over terrified citizens. Either way, dragons take a direct role in disposing of dissidents by devouring them. Evil dragon rulers tax their populations, demanding a percentage of the population as an offering for consumption.

Devils might take over nations openly, although more seize control through subversion of the existing ruling elite. Asmodeus in particular covets urban settlements. The devilish mania for legalism and bureaucracy infests every aspect of a controlled nation. Networks of spies, functionaries, and guards efficiently maintain order, quickly spotting incursions by foreign paragon characters. Devilish states demand absolute obedience while encouraging people to pursue dark, soul-corroding pleasures.

Undead Armies

A death knight might seize control of a region in order to sate its appetite for battle. One of these skeletal warriors can slaughter the entire population of a town so that it can create a legion of undead with which to pursue its battle against the living. Adventurers might walk into such a town without realizing that its inhabitants are not what they seem.

Streets of Anarchy

The forces of chaotic evil seek conquest without the responsibility of rule. Cities and nation-states overrun by demons and other evil beings devolve into madness and destruction. After the common people flee or die, champions of evil run rampant. Some corrupted subjects remain, furiously defending their shattered turf for reasons they no longer recall. To gain reinforcements, these depraved subjects raid caravans and capture unsuspecting adventurers. Captives must escape or face transformation into demonically controlled minions of the Abyss.

World Hopping

If you or your group enjoys playing in multiple D&D worlds, a world-hopping campaign means you no longer have to choose between them. You can dip into the epic sweep of a Forgotten Realms campaign for one story arc and then switch to an Eberron campaign's pulp-noir fantasy for the next. You can build a world-hopping campaign in an episodic structure or connect the adventures in the various worlds with an overarching continuity in the storyline.

In an episodic campaign, the adventurers move between worlds like rootless wanderers. They might travel a circuit between established worlds or visit a new world with a new story every session, never turning back. The second approach challenges you to create increasingly extreme or distinctive worlds. Don't worry about the depth of detail; focus on a single memorable world concept. Choose a theme for the adventure, and then create a world that expresses that theme in an exaggerated way. World creation and adventure design involve the same process.

You might, for example, create an adventure about the horrors of war. What would a world of incessant warfare look like, and how would its cultures behave? Next, consider what NPCs embody these attitudes. Now, build your encounters from a set of visual images associated with your world concept: a stronghold, a battlefield, and a landscape ravaged by past engagements.

The model of a new world for every adventure also works well for improvised games, where you must constantly create new encounters to suit your players. Improvisation frees you from tracking recurring characters and plot lines, and it allows you a fresh start every few sessions.

Conversely, the adventurers can follow a single storyline as they hop from world to world. They might try to prevent a catastrophe or an invasion that threatens the known spheres of existence. This approach allows your world-destroying villain to take out a few realities and still face defeat in the end. Another take on the concept sends the adventurers to gather pieces of a device that enemies or ancients scattered across multiple realities.

Masters of Reality

At the paragon tier, situations that embroil the adventurers take on a more fantastic nature. Some of these situations present the possibility of extreme and exotic journeys involving other planes or alternate realities.

Planar Breaches

Denizens of the planes have colonized regions of the natural world in areas known as planar breaches. These places have the physical properties of the inhabitants' home planes. Characters might find adventuring in a breach the same as exploring the related plane, with similar natural properties and similar creatures.

When a breach manifests in the world, it pushes aside the space around it. A breach appearing in the main square of a ruined settlement might cut it in two. The west side of the old city remains intact on one side of the breach. The breach itself forms a newly created buffer between that portion of the city and the rest of the city, which remains intact to the east. Some breaches create peculiar distortions on the borders of the territories surrounding them.

Sometimes a plane overlays the natural world instead of pushing it aside, and the plane and the world mix in strange and unpredictable ways.

Breaches occur in isolated regions. Sages theorize that the psychic energy given off by large masses of intelligent minds acts as a barrier against the materialization of breaches in heavily populated areas.

Breaches can also be created by high-level magic. If a breach is created through magic, a focus object somewhere in the breach maintains a temporary bond between the two planes. Creatures loyal to a breach's creator tenaciously guard these focus objects. Destroying an object initiates the process of the breach's dissipation, giving adventurers just enough time to leap for the borderland before the breach closes.

Most planar breaches are fully contained by the world, but a few create connections between realities, existing in the natural world and in the breach's home plane at the same time. Moving out of the area of the breach could send PCs either back into the world or into the plane.

Alternate Worlds

You might have your campaign shift between alternate versions of a single reality in order to give your players a change of pace. This approach works best if you spent the heroic tier of your campaign establishing a solid sense of place and a large cast of supporting NPCs.

When the adventurers reach paragon status, they gain the ability to move between alternate worlds. Each new adventure takes them to a recognizable but altered version of the baseline world you established during play in the heroic tier. There, PCs encounter refracted versions of the familiar cast of characters.

These slight changes generate your adventure premises. In one reality, perhaps the heroes' nemesis changes into an ally. In the next, a human they know as a benevolent baroness transforms into a cruel tyrant or leads a resistance movement against the establishment, or maybe she suffers from a mind-sapping curse. Each adventure requires that PCs resolve a narrative involving these altered characters.

Another version of an alternate-worlds campaign includes counterparts for the players' characters whom the characters replace for the duration of the adventure. The alternate-world heroes are significantly different from the PCs in each new world. As part of the information-gathering phase of each adventure, the PCs must work out their context in this new dimension. Do they behave like heroes, cowards, villains, or something in between? Having learned about their alternate selves, the PCs must impersonate them in order to achieve the adventure's final objective.

Once your players assimilate this formula, you can throw them a curve by sending them to an alternate world in which they must face their alternate selves, possibly evil twins.

Masters of Time

A typical fantasy world's history reaches back tens of thousands of years. Allow the player characters to interact directly with the great events of your setting's past by enabling time travel. Your adventurers can meet legendary figures, fight in classic battles, and witness the birth of the deities. They can journey to the future, encounter their own descendants, marvel at technological wonders, and flee from the death of the world. The PCs might travel using a vehicle, an artifact, or a consistently available ritual. Alternatively, you might make an adventure into the time stream a special, one-time event.

Start by deciding how time travel works in your game. Can characters alter the events of history? If not, allow characters to take only actions that leave known history intact. You could choose a mechanism that protects the fixed nature of time, or you could employ powerful coincidences that prevent characters from affecting history.

You might instead decide to allow actions in the past to change the present as the adventurers know it. If, for example, the characters prevent the pivotal assassination that led to the fall of the great empires, they might return to an altered present day in which those empires cover the entire world.

You can complicate adventures involving time travel by creating consequences for paradoxes. If a change in history prevents the birth of a time traveler, does he or she disappear, or does he or she exist outside the time stream? Can time travelers meet themselves, or do such encounters create a strain on reality of apocalyptic proportions?

As adventurers approach the paragon tier of play, new locations begin to appear on the horizon. These locations are larger than the villages and towns of the heroic tier, grander and more exotic—and often more dangerous. One such location exists at the crossroads of all reality. It is a place of relative peace and rough safety where all kinds of business can take place. This is Sigil, the City of Doors.

Numerous portals connect Sigil to the rest of the multiverse. The planar metropolis exists outside the ordered structure of existence, rising from the interior surface of an immense hollow ring that has no outer side. The residents consider Sigil to be the true center of the multiverse, and visitors have few reasons to contradict this belief.

Origin Stories

Every collection of lore that touches upon the existence of Sigil has its own unique view of the origin and purpose of the city. Some claim that Sigil is the linchpin that keeps all of existence from flying apart. Many myths and writings from this school of thought associate the city with the legendary proto-entities of old—the predecessors of the gods and primordials. Other scholars believe that the city is a map of all creation, that all that one needs to do to understand the secrets of the universe is to understand the twists and turns of Sigil. Some see the City of Doors as the easiest, most direct way to get from here to there and back again. And a select few see Sigil as the key to the ongoing battle for the hearts and souls of creation, the place where the literal war of philosophies plays out for good or ill.

Whatever the truth of it, you can find almost anything in Sigil, and almost everyone eventually passes through its portals—either with Sigil as the destination or on the way to someplace else.

The Impossible Place

The City of Doors, named for the many portals that provide the only methods of travel into and out of the city, features impossible topography in an impossible location. The city exists on the inside of a gigantic, hollow ring that has no outer side. It stands apart from the rest of existence. It connects to the Astral Sea and the Elemental Chaos, to the Feywild and the Shadowfell and the natural world, and to a multitude of places beyond imagining, but it isn't a part of any of these. Sigil is. For most, that simple fact explains everything.

All the streets and buildings fill the curved interior of the hollow ring. If you look up, and if your view isn't obscured by the persistent rain or fog or smoke from countless chimneys, you can see the

SIGIL FACTS

Sigil is the bustling crossroads of the multiverse, full of portals leading to every known corner of existence.

Population: Approximately 50,000 permanent residents. Representatives of nearly every race and monstrous kind can be found somewhere in the city. A host of transients pass through the city daily, with the result that as many as 250,000 individuals can be present in Sigil at any given time.

Government and Defense: The only being in Sigil who wields any real authority is the mysterious Lady of Pain, the enigmatic guardian and protector of the city. The touch of her gaze causes wounds that spout blood, and her smallest gesture can banish someone or something into an endless maze spawned in a pocket dimension. Her presence is said to prevent gods, demon princes, primordials, and beings of similar power from entering the City of Doors, and the fear of her is sufficient to keep a modicum of order in the streets. Crime is common, but rebellion is unthinkable.

The closest thing Sigil has to a police force is a citizen group called the Sons of Mercy. However, without any official power to make arrests or carry out sentences (though they try all the same), the Sons of Mercy aren't terribly effective in limiting crime. Similarly, the so-called Sigil Advisory Council might have the city's best interests at heart, but the group lacks real political power.

Inns and Taverns: Sigil's inns and taverns cater to a diverse clientele. Efreets from the City of Brass can find flaming halls of sumptuous luxury. Devils can enjoy a night spent in unthinkable debauchery. A traveler might lodge in an inn whose interior is like a twilit fey grove or a sunless cavern, or eat in a place that's virtually indistinguishable from Fallcrest's Blue Moon Alehouse.

Supplies: The Grand Bazaar, located in the city's Market Ward, is a huge square overflowing into side streets, alleyways, and nearby taverns. It is filled with caravan tents and market stalls. Other marketplaces spring up in many places throughout the city. Most appear during the day, but some surface only at night, such as the Hive's Night Market.

Trade: Because Sigil sits astride all the planes of existence, it enjoys a flow of trade that most other cities would envy if they knew the true measure of its volume. Even with the threat of the Lady of Pain, various nefarious trade routes run through Sigil at any given time.

Temples: Temples to all the gods—including evil gods whose shrines are rarely seen in civilized lands—can be found in the streets of Sigil. Most of them are small, and few claim any significant power in the city's affairs.

buildings across the open hollow overhead. This is a place where the horizon curves up instead of away, where the sky above is always filled with the gray arc of the other side of Sigil's ring. In fact, the horizon in front of you and behind you curves up, so that you are always at the bottom of the ring. Line of sight rarely exceeds more than a few hundred feet due to the concentration of buildings, so the effect isn't prevalent or as disturbing as it could be.

Up and Down

No matter where you stand within the hollow interior ring that Sigil occupies, down is always toward the ground beneath you, and up is in the opposite direction. Flying through the open space between the ring is perfectly possible, but as with most other locations, the danger of falling remains constant. You always fall toward the side of the ring you're closest to. And falling hurts.

Day and Night

Sigil has no sun or moon, but it still has a day-night cycle. Each twenty-four-hour period slides from deep darkness to bright light and back again on a regular cycle. The sky gradually fills with a magical luminescence until the light reaches its brightest intensity (the equivalent of noon in the natural world), and then it begins to fade.

At daybreak, the darkness gradually brightens to dawn, with the light increasing in intensity until midday. The light then steadily wanes into a twilight gloom before plunging into blackest night. Unless the night is particularly overcast or foggy, some ambient light shines down from above. This is not the light of distant stars or a moon, since Sigil has none of these. Instead, the fires burning in the streets and buildings above light the night sky with flickering pinpoints of brightness.

The overall cycle provides six hours of bright daylight and six hours of deepest night, each separated by a six-hour period of gloomy twilight.

Weather

If it isn't raining when you arrive in Sigil, wait a couple of minutes. A light rain tends to be the usual weather in the City of Doors. The rain falls through the ever-present smoke from the multitude of fires, ranging from a nearly imperceptible mist to a constant drip of cold, greasy water. When it isn't raining (a rarity), the streets fill with fog that can be as wispy as gossamer or so thick as to reduce visibility to a few feet. Even on the brightest days, when the rain stops falling and a breeze blows calmly through the streets, Sigil is cool. At night, when darkness falls, the streets can get uncomfortably cold. And then the rain starts again.

Flora and Fauna

No plants or animals are native to Sigil, but that hasn't stopped life from finding places to thrive in the City of Doors. The most notable vegetation is razorvine. This fast-growing plant aggressively stretches its greasy stalks and knife-edged fronds throughout the city. It grows over everything, climbing walls, entwining statues, and covering pathways with wild abandon. The only thing that keeps it in check is constant pruning and tending. Without such dedicated care, it would choke the place entirely in a matter of months.

Vermin of all kinds have found niches to occupy throughout Sigil. From lowly insects to common rats, nonmonstrous creatures thrive in garbage heaps, dank sewers, and dark corners throughout the city. In addition to more common forms of vermin, giant rats, dire rats, and fearfully intelligent cranium rats can be encountered in the worst parts of the city.

The sewers beneath the city also provide homes for monsters of all descriptions that have found their way through doors to the streets of Sigil.

RAZORVINE

This creeper plant has serrated leaves that unfold from black stems. Razorvine counts as difficult terrain, and a creature entering or starting its turn in a square of razorvine takes 10 damage per tier.

Architecture

No natural resources fill the hollow ring, so Sigil has been built with materials brought into the city from somewhere else. Certain locations seem to have sprung into existence out of the nothingness of the hollow ring, but in general the place has been built with imported materials. Every brick, every window, every stick of furniture, was imported from elsewhere—either in finished form or its raw state.

Structures throughout Sigil consist of a wild collection of competing styles from every place—and every time—the city touches. Each era has seen a flurry of construction that mimicked the architectural styles of the period. Because of the nature of Sigil, styles from ages past can still be found, in whole or in part, eons after the originating cultures have disappeared. Sages stalk the back alleys of the city in search of traces of ancient cultures that remain in gables, cornices, domes, and columns.

Today, individuals who want to build a new structure in Sigil or renovate a standing building must either import materials or salvage them from existing structures. An entire shadow profession has grown up around the theft of construction materials. Often the outer structure of a building is more valuable, and more in need of defense from scavengers, than its contents. Sigil's so-called "stone pirates" scuttle out in the night to chip at masonry, saw off boards, and filch metal fittings either for open sale or to fill the order of a wealthy patron.

Architectural styles also provide a telltale hint to the relative status of a street, a neighborhood, or a ward. The well-kept structures of The Lady's Ward bristle with ornamentation, for example, while the shacks and shanties constructed of salvaged, deteriorating materials immediately identify the crowded alleys of the Lower Ward.

Portals

The only way to get into or out of Sigil is through a portal. No other form of teleportation or planar travel can penetrate the barriers around the City of Doors. Once you're in Sigil, you can move around the city with teleportation powers, but you can't enter or exit the place except through the portals that dot the cityscape.

A portal, also called a gate, can be any aperture or bounded space. Windows, doors, archways, sewer grates, large crates or chests, pits, trestles, hearths—all these openings and more might be portals in the City of Doors.

Some portals remain constantly active, meaning that all you have to do to use them is to step through one. Many portals, however, require a gate key to operate. Without the proper gate key, a portal is just a space, and a mundane space at that. With the proper gate key, a portal becomes a gateway to someplace else. A gate key usually takes the form of an object, from an actual key to anything else that can easily be carried on your person. Sometimes, however, a gate key might be a spoken word or phrase, a gesture, or a particular state of mind.

Deeper than You Think

Although it's impossible to dig any distance down into the chalky material that makes up the hollow ring of Sigil, the city does have its share of deep basements, catacombs, dungeons, and subterranean passageways. Any travel significantly beneath the surface of Sigil in fact takes you through a door to another reality. Most of the time, travel of this sort leads to tiny pocket realities created expressly for specific purposes by arcane masters of the past. Shop basements, burial chambers for wealthy families, forgotten dungeons, and even Sigil's network of sewers were all created in this fashion in the distant past. Today, rituals permitting these dimensional excavations are not undertaken lightly. Those who can perform such rituals are rare, the rituals themselves are expensive, and such a working is liable to provoke the deadly wrath of the Lady of Pain.

Portals can be permanent, temporary, or shifting. There's something about Sigil that seems to attract randomly occurring portals that wink into and out of existence without any apparent rhyme or reason. These randomly occurring portals can appear anywhere and last momentarily or remain open for days or weeks at a time. An expensive ritual can shield areas from the incursion of random portals, but only the most well-to-do neighborhoods in Sigil can afford to keep such protections in place at all times.

Portals tend to be two-way. If you step through a portal, you can usually step back the way you came. You might need a gate key, but otherwise a door is a door. There are some rare portals that go only one way. Usually, the truth is that a different gate key is required to make the return trip, so it really isn't a one-way door at all. Or the portal winks out or moves before you can step back. But sometimes, you might run into an actual one-way portal—and going through such a portal might leave you in a very bad place indeed.

Permanent Portals

A permanent portal has an opening in Sigil and an opening someplace else (on another plane, in the natural world, or in some pocket dimension) that are always available for use. Every time you step through a permanent portal, you know where you're going to end up. There are no surprises. (Unless, of course, you have no idea where a particular portal connects to.) Permanent portals tend to connect relatively safe and stable locations, such as gate-towns, to Sigil. Many permanent portals are known by someone in Sigil, and the information pertaining to them tends to be valuable currency within the City of Doors.

Temporary Portals

Temporary portals can appear anywhere in Sigil, opening a path between two locations for a short time and then disappearing as though they had never existed. Temporary portals can be as frustrating as they are dangerous—frustrating because if a gate key is needed, you can waste valuable time determining what it is, and dangerous because there might not be any clue about where the portal connects to. In addition, there's often an unpredictable timetable associated with a temporary portal. It might close before your work on the other side is finished, leaving you without a fast and convenient exit back to Sigil.

Shifting Portals

Shifting portals follow a set pattern, although the pattern is rarely obvious or easy to discern. Sometimes the portal in Sigil shifts, sliding from window to doorway to sewer grate throughout the city. Other times, the portal on the other end is the one that moves, bouncing around a particular area of the natural world, or a plane, or even sliding from plane to plane. These shifts are not random, and the cycle repeats itself so that eventually the portal winds up back in the place it originally began. Enterprising individuals in Sigil make a lot of gold by keeping logs of how the shifting portals work and selling pieces of that information to the right people at the right time. However, there are just as many swindlers as true portal information dealers out there, so a careless adventurer can easily be separated from his or her gold without receiving accurate or useful information.

Gate Keys

Not every portal requires a gate key to operate, but many do. To use such a portal, a traveler needs to have the gate key when he or she steps through. Many gate keys allow their portal to remain open for a short time, which lets multiple travelers pass through with the use of a single gate key.

Gate keys tend to be objects or phrases that are neither too common nor too rare. They aren't so common as to cause accidental use of a given portal, nor are they so rare that a portal can never be used. (Although both such portals can exist somewhere in Sigil, and these often lead to the wildest adventures.) Gate keys, once established, never change.

A gate key usually has a connection to its portal's destination, providing a clue to where a portal opens up to when the path isn't widely known. Numerous proprietors throughout Sigil claim to keep logs marking portals, their destinations, and the gate keys required to operate them (if any), and for a price they are usually willing to provide such information to those who ask. Check out Tivvum's Antiquities in the Market Ward when you're in need of a gate key.

Portals in Action

When any individual crosses the threshold of a portal while carrying the proper gate key (if a gate key is required to make the portal function), the archway that frames the portal flashes with arcane energy, and a ghostly image of a distant location can briefly be glimpsed through the open portal. The portal remains open for only a few seconds (long enough for a group of PCs to step through). Anyone who steps through vanishes from Sigil and instantly appears at the destination. Anything that's partially through a portal when it closes is teleported to the portal's destination.

Anyone in Sigil can use a portal to leave the city, but the converse is not necessarily true. The City of Doors seems to have the ability to keep out gods, demon princes, primordials, and similarly powerful beings. When such an entity attempts to use a portal to Sigil, nothing happens. If such an entity tries to rush through an active portal that a lesser being opened, the entity is forcibly expelled from the portal and pushed back to wherever it tried to enter from.

The Lady of Pain

What keeps the City of Doors safe and functioning? What maintains order and refuses to allow Sigil to tumble into chaos and anarchy? The answer is simple, yet surprisingly complex: the Lady of Pain.

The Lady of Pain isn't a woman and isn't human. Although theories abound, the truth of the matter is that no one knows who or what the Lady of Pain actually is. She exists. She has an enduring connection to Sigil. And she stands as the law and the power in the City of Doors.

Some believe she is a god, but no pantheon claims her as a member. Some think she must be a demon prince or a devil lord, but others find that idea unacceptable. One or two ancient texts identify her as the embodiment of Sigil, or even as a proto-entity from the time before time. Most visitors to and inhabitants of Sigil don't really care one way or another. The simple truth is that the Lady of Pain exists, and that's all that matters.

The Lady remains distant from most of the day-to-day activities that take place in Sigil. You won't find a castle, a palace, or a temple with her name on it. Indeed, if anyone worships her they usually end up missing (presumed to be banished to the Mazes, see below) or turn up with their skin flayed from their bones. It is widely known that she accepts no prayers or sacrifices, and she reportedly punishes or destroys those that make such offerings.

The Lady of Pain never speaks. She never participates in council meetings or guild discussions or judicial inquiries. When she appears, she is seen drifting down the cobbled streets, her gown barely brushing the dusty surface as she passes by. Those familiar with the ways of Sigil know enough to move on during the Lady's sporadic forays through the streets. Anyone who has the bad sense to try to interfere with her passage receives painful gashes from her penetrating gaze.

Such appearances, rare and memorable though they might be, eventually end when the Lady passes through a wall or simply fades into nothingness, vanishing from sight without word or warning.

What is the Lady of Pain? She is the impassive protector of Sigil, inspiring awe and fear with her very presence. No one deals with the Lady. She doesn't give missions or serve as a patron. She makes no proclamations and issues no edicts. She is just the wonder and mystery and danger of Sigil made manifest. But she does have laws—or, at least, certain truths about Sigil are credited to her will.

The presence of the Lady keeps all inhabitants and visitors in line, making Sigil more or less safe for conducting business of all sorts. She keeps gods and other powerful entities out of the city. She prevents teleportation rituals and other magic from penetrating the borders of the City of Doors. She oversees the dabus that maintain the city. And she creates the Mazes that serve as the most prominent deterrent to conquest and chaos in Sigil—and which give the city its other name, the Cage.

The Mazes

When a significant threat to Sigil appears, it doesn't last long. Powermongers, rabble-rousers, and malcontents who flaunt their ambitions and disdains quickly find themselves banished to the Mazes. These pocket dimensions swirl into existence to torment a single threat, whether that threat is an individual or a small group of conspirators.

Each maze appears as a small part of Sigil, such as an alleyway, courtyard, or cul-de-sac. This copy becomes a twisting labyrinth that has no beginning, no end, and no obvious exit points. A targeted individual might step through an archway, turn down an alley, or pass through a door in his or her own house and suddenly be spun into a newly created maze.

In a maze, a trapped individual doesn't starve or die of thirst: Food and drink appear at regular intervals. Each maze contains one hidden portal that can be used for escape. The prisoner just needs to find the door, and then determine what key is required to open it. For most, this possibility of escape is just a cruel hope that taunts them but never materializes. Every once in a great while, however, a prisoner finds a way to get out.

Of course, many disappearances that are blamed on the Mazes have no connection to these pocket dimensions at all, but such is the nature of life in the Cage. Those taken by one of the Mazes might eventually stumble out of their prison, chastened and changed, but most are never seen again.

The Dabus

A unique race of intelligent beings, the dabus, lives in Sigil. They are never encountered anywhere else, neither in the natural world nor out among the planes. Dabus appear as pale-skinned humanoids with long and narrow bodies and features. They emanate a serene air, with their calm expressions, elegant horns, and shocks of white hair. Like the Lady of Pain, dabus float above the ground as they move about the city. Unlike the Lady, dabus are always around, visible and active as they perform their daily tasks and functions.

Dabus swarm like ants atop a crumb of food, appearing when something in Sigil needs to be repaired. They maintain the infrastructure of the city, making sure that the sewers never clog, the razorvine never spreads completely out of control, and the cobblestones that line the streets are never cracked or broken. Most people in Sigil consider them to be nothing more than inscrutable workers, but the evidence suggests that they are something more.

As with the Lady of Pain, dozen of theories about the origin and purpose of the dabus exist. Are they living manifestations of the city? Servants of the Lady of Pain? The first inhabitants of the hollow ring that became Sigil? Does the City of Doors belong to the dabus, or do the dabus belong to the city? Each of these questions has multiple answers that are held as true and absolute. Here's what is actually known about the dabus.

For as long as there has been a Sigil, the dabus have been present.

Dabus never speak, and they rarely acknowledge or interact with other beings. Although their behavior reflects that displayed by the Lady of Pain, the dabus are not quite as distant and aloof as she tends to be.

When a dabus needs to communicate with someone, it does so with gestures and sign language, and occasionally in the form of a rebus.

Dabus are not combative by nature. Usually, they quietly float about the city, performing the tasks that fall to them without hesitation or complaint. They will fight if they must, however, and when they engage in combat, they show a remarkable courage and grace that rattles their opponents.

Though the dabus float above the ground when they move, they don't actually fly. They glide along, never touching the ground but also never soaring far above it either.

It is believed that the dabus live beneath Sigil, or that the city creates them when they are needed, or that the Lady sets them to their tasks with her own silent gaze.

Whatever the truth, dabus scour the city, making repairs, cleaning, landscaping, and otherwise keeping Sigil's ancient infrastructure from falling apart. Their work is never so perfect that the city is in danger of looking brand new, but they do keep the place presentable. Sometimes they even undertake extensive rebuilding projects, tearing down small sections of the city and reconstructing them—usually to the complaints of the displaced inhabitants.

Silent, serene, and dedicated, these mysterious servants also have a dark side. Dabus can appear in great numbers to quell riots, disperse crowds, or deal with the greatest threats to the stability of the city and the well-being of the Lady of Pain. They never react to normal crimes or minor disturbances, however, leaving such peacekeeping duties to anyone who wants to take them up.

SILENT WORKERS

Dabus work crews usually consist of three to five of the strange, silent beings. They silently float about the city to handle tasks, whether whitewashing a wall, painting a building, sweeping a street, pruning razorvine, or attacking a threat.

The examples below are typical dabus that usually float above the streets of Sigil. Other, more powerful versions can appear when the need is great or the danger seems potentially devastating to the city or the Lady of Pain.

RULES AND GOVERNANCE

In Sigil, anything can happen. That's part of the city's charm, and a state of affairs that lends an element of danger to everyday events. Walking down a Sigil street can involve avoiding the stare of the Lady of Pain, being hustled by a planar trader, running into a demon that's passing through, and meeting a being from a corner of a plane you'd never heard of before.

Conducting yourself in Sigil requires that you remember a few simple rules. When it comes to day-to-day affairs, always maintain your guard. It isn't like Sigil has a vigilant city watch around to deter every would-be assailant who might come hunting for you. When it comes to the big picture, the things that concern the usually peaceful fierceness of the Lady of Pain, keep your head down and your eyes averted. She tolerates (some might say ignores) petty squabbles and minor crimes, including fights, muggings, robberies, and even the occasional murder. But if you try to alter or interfere with the portals, or if you slaughter the dabus, or if you attempt to destroy the city, start a rebellion, or challenge the Lady herself, then you must deal with the consequences of attracting both the attention and the wrath of the Lady of Pain.

The Brink of Anarchy

From a certain point of view, the Lady of Pain rules Sigil. Her presence keeps the place running smoothly and makes the streets more or less safe so that the business of the city can occur. On the other hand, she doesn't behave like a ruler at all. She issues no proclamations. She collects no taxes. She really doesn't seem all that interested in the welfare of her subjects beyond the fact that keeping the people of Sigil relatively content means that her city remains full and vibrant.

Law and order tend to be a personal affair. For the most part, you keep yourself safe by carrying a weapon or a spell and appearing to know what to do with it. Certain parts of Sigil can feel a lot like a wild frontier town where people are responsible for protecting themselves and taking the law into their own hands. Organized groups do operate throughout the city. They just have to operate at a level that doesn't make it appear as though they're threatening the sanctity or power of the Lady of Pain.

In the past, Sigil served as a headquarters for numerous factions. These philosophical fraternities helped keep Sigil vital by each running a different part of the city. In the aftermath of a terrible war between the factions, the Lady of Pain made a rare and stunning appearance before the surviving leaders. With a dabus in tow to communicate for her, the Lady proclaimed: The city tolerates your faction no longer. Abandon it or die. They complied, and Sigil no longer hosts any organized factions.

Sigil's Citizens

The residents of Sigil are as diverse a lot as you could ever expect to find. Any kind of sentient creature in the world—and from any place outside the world—can be found roaming the streets or residing here. The city is a place where racial animosity takes a back seat to more pragmatic concerns. No one who lives or visits here is likely to be attacked based simply on his or her basic nature, since almost everyone is here for the same reason: to benefit from what the city has to offer as the hub of the multiverse. The atmosphere in Sigil is similar to that of an armed truce; although isolated violence does break out from time to time, the residents of Sigil appreciate the need not to cause widespread havoc in the city, and they police themselves to keep things on an even keel.

Sigil Advisory Council

Prominent and well-to-do citizens have banded together since the disappearance of the factions to fill the void left behind. The members meet regularly and wrap themselves in the pomp and prestige of the office they have created, sincerely working to maintain the peace in the City of Doors. Well spoken and charismatic, the group established a process of nomination and election to fill their ranks with worthy representatives. There are nine seats on the council.

The Advisors have little real authority. It is commonly said that if the Lady ever did appear before the council members to ask for advice, they would all flee in terror and never return.

Still, the Advisors step forward to speak on the city's behalf. So far, the Lady of Pain hasn't banished any of them to the Mazes or sliced any of them to bloody ribbons, so perhaps they have a bit more authority than certain citizens believe. Who can tell for sure? What is known about the Advisors is that they sometimes use their wealth to hire adventurers to deal with problems, and they even engage in humanitarian and charitable activities in the more upscale sections of the city. They sometimes cooperate with the Mutual Trade Association to push forth edicts and get things done.

Rhys, former leader of the Transcendent Order faction, serves on the council and is perhaps its most well-known member. She is a tiefling with style and attitude, and is considered a true asset to Sigil by those who know her.

Sons of Mercy

The Sons of Mercy oversee Sigil's Prison, caring for the inmates until each has paid his or her debt and can be set free. The group also coordinates watch patrols throughout the city, but it has no real legal authority—the Sons of Mercy are little more than a group of concerned citizens voluntarily working to make Sigil's streets safe. Sworn to protect the innocent, uphold justice, and prove that crime doesn't pay, the Sons of Mercy are led by Arwyl Swan's Son, who trained among the Mercykillers faction when that organization still held sway in Sigil.

Without real authority or power beyond the walls of the Prison, the Sons of Mercy have limited success as a police force. Certainly, no one who runs into a Sons of Mercy patrol while operating on the wrong side of the law readily recognizes that patrol's right to administer justice. In most cases, the only way for the patrol to exercise any authority is through force of arms. If a patrol can get the upper hand, or demonstrate more power and ability than the opposition, then it usually succeeds. If not, the members of the patrol flee or take a beating for their trouble.

Mutual Trade Association

Another self-started and self-regulated group to step to the forefront of Sigil politics is the Mutual Trade Association. A loose collection of guild masters and prominent independent merchants, the Traders have come together to protect their business interests as they relate to the City of Doors.

For a time, it appeared that the vacuum created by the fall of the factions was going to set the rich and well-connected against each other as different merchant lords vied for power and influence. Realizing that such a fierce competition could unduly attract the attention of the Lady of Pain, three of the top captains of commerce put aside their mutual animosity to form the Traders.

Although all three associates claim to have an equal say in how the Traders conduct business, the truth of the matter is that Shemeshka, a raavasta who controls a vast commercial empire and information-gathering network, has emerged as the de facto leader of the group. The other associates are Zadara and Estavan. Zadara, a reclusive storm giant entrepreneur, supplies funds to creative and daring individuals in return for hefty returns on her investments as well as the promise of future favors. Estavan, meanwhile, is an extremely powerful oni mage who serves as the face of the vast Planar Trade Consortium. In addition, numerous less influential members have joined the Traders for the benefits the organization provides.

The Traders do not interfere with the day-to-day affairs of the individual businesses that make up the association. In most cases, they don't even share business-related information. They do, however, look for solutions to problems that plague all the members, including crime waves, disrupted supply lines, taxes and tariffs, embattled trade routes, worker unrest, and other threats to profit and industry. Often, the Traders will enact solutions to problems affecting Sigil long before either the Sons of Mercy or the Sigil Advisory Council can get their acts together. As long as doing so helps business, then it's in the interest of the Traders to get things done.

Other Power Players

Other groups trying to enforce some kind of order on the chaos of Sigil tend to be more low-key and usually less civic-minded than the organizations discussed above. Armed merchant auxiliaries, for example, protect trade routes and warehouses, target gangs of robbers, and recover stolen goods. Neighborhood gangs have formed to combat increasing crime and violence, though these groups can be as violent and unpredictable as the ills they have been created to rectify. Finally, wealthy patrons of all stripes have taken to hiring bodyguards or putting militia units and adventurers on retainer so that they can call upon them at a moment's notice to deal with trouble that gets out of hand.

Sigil's Businesses and Services

Almost anything can be found in Sigil. Thanks to the multitude of portals and the enterprising businesses that seek to open the vastness of the planes to trade, there's a chance that something you want or need is on display in the next stall or shop window. Of course, locating exactly what you're searching for could take a while—Sigil's a big place with a lot of people, and nothing is ever straightforward or easy in the Cage.

Locals who are willing to show newcomers around or lead a body to a specific location are known as touts. A good tout also knows people and can make introductions if the price is right. Touts range from wily street urchins to rough-and-tumble cutters who look as capable of robbing you as providing safe passage, and the prices they charge for their services vary wildly as well. In general, you can hire a tout for about 100 gp per day, though some offer their services for less and others put a higher premium on the use of their skills. Touts can routinely be hired in markets, in taverns, near known portals, and around other places where newcomers congregate.

Another common purveyor of service is the courier. A courier makes money by delivering items or messages in a timely fashion, so most of the people engaged in this service are trustworthy and reliable. Couriers can carry just about anything that a normal individual can lug around; a letter, a small satchel, a small box or crate, and so forth. Some employ magic items, such as bags of holding, but these well-equipped couriers charge more for their services. For secret messages or other sensitive material, a few couriers provide a special service—they perform a ritual upon a small trinket (usually an unadorned ring or a carved wooden or stone tile with the courier's icon or crest upon it) that repeats the message stored within it when the named recipient activates it. For the most important packages, a courier undergoes a special ritual that magically binds the courier to the deliverable item. If the courier loses the package or fails to deliver it by the appointed hour, he or she begins to wither and die. Such ensorcelled couriers work hard to hang onto the items placed in their care and work even harder to recover any items that are lost or stolen along the way. Prices range from 50 gp for a mundane delivery service to as much as 10,000 gp for magically binding a package to a courier. Additional costs can be applied to deliveries to destinations outside Sigil.

Taverns abound in the City of Doors. One common saying is that there are as many taverns as portals in Sigil, and sometimes it seems like this remark isn't that far off. There are taverns that cater to particular tastes and clientele, fancy taverns, dives, holes in the wall, and places where even adventurers should feel afraid. Alehouses, wine cellars, pubs, and even places that serve rarer, more exotic fare can be found in different parts of the city. In general, a tavern provides a good place to get a lay of the land, to hear the news of the street, and to uncover any rumors of jobs, excitement, or patrons in need.

Inns tend to offer more services than the typical tavern, but there are exceptions to every rule. At an inn, you can usually secure lodging while you're in Sigil, and inns tend to provide fewer options for imbibing and more options to get a meal than the average tavern. As with taverns, you can find inns that cater to all tastes and needs, including those related to a customer's particular species. Oversized rooms for giants? Conveniences for the smaller races? Special dietary requirements? Thanks to the wide range of visitors that regularly pass through Sigil, all these options and more are provided for somewhere in the city.

Markets spring up throughout the city. Some, such as the Great Bazaar, are permanent affairs, while others appear and disappear with regularity. You can buy and sell all sorts of items at a variety of locations, from transitory stalls and tents, to brick-and-mortar shops, to folding tables set up in dark alleys or in the backs of dimly lit taverns. Markets are classified as either "day" or "night" markets. At day markets, you're more likely to find food, supplies, and other necessities of daily life. Some of the items for sale are the usual fare; common meats, vegetables, and fruits, for instance. Those who have a taste for the exotic can also find unusual food and drink from across the planes. Housewares, crafts, jewelry, clothing, and other basic necessities—from the common and mundane to the rare and unusual—also fill the stalls and display tables of the day markets.

The night markets are a different story. When darkness fills Sigil's sky, those who sell entertainment and pleasure appear to replace the daytime wares that cater to more mundane needs. The night markets, at once deadly and fascinating, cater to those seeking distraction, excitement, and a hint of danger. At the night markets, one's misfortune can become another's entertainment, especially when the shadows deepen. Musicians and bards, prophets and bawds, spell-sellers and purveyors of previously owned materials emerge from the spreading darkness to replace goods appropriate to the light of day with goods and services dedicated more to wants than to needs. Some find the night markets to be wild and unpredictable, but for others that's just what draws them out to shop as the darker parts of the city come alive. You need to know which market will best serve your needs for a particular desire; then you need to find the merchant you feel most comfortable dealing with—no matter what time of day you decide to shop.

The Wards of Sigil

When you first arrive in Sigil, it's easy to become confused and disoriented. To the uninitiated, Sigil's streets appear to be a chaotic scramble laid out haphazardly, in every direction, with no apparent plan or purpose. On the surface, this is true. But Sigil's citizens know that there are different parts to the city, and they know that those parts make sense. The city is divided into wards, and each ward's name speaks to what you can expect to find in that section of the city.

Where one ward starts and another ends isn't handled by official maps and property lines. You can usually tell where you are by the crowding of the buildings (or lack thereof), by the general upkeep and ambience of a neighborhood, and by the types of businesses found there. The poorer the ward, the more tightly packed and run-down the living conditions become.

Generally, everyone agrees that Sigil has six distinct wards, and these are spread out in a clockwise direction around the hollow ring. The six wards are The Lady's Ward, the Market Ward, the Guildhall Ward, the Clerk's Ward, the Lower Ward, and the Hive.

The Lady's Ward

The most influential and powerful within Sigil society live and work in The Lady's Ward, the richest of Sigil's sections. Within the unmarked boundaries of The Lady's Ward, a visitor will find the City Barracks, the Court, the Prison, and the Armory, as well as more than half of the city's temples. This ward tends to be the cleanest, quietest, and most upscale of all the areas in the City of Doors.

The Chant

Sigil's a major hub for planar trade, but it's not the biggest one in existence; the City of Brass in the Elemental Chaos owns the title as the mercantile center of the universe. Sigil does feature a staggering amount of trade in physical items, but that pales in comparison to the city's preeminent role as the information capital at the center of all things. News, rumors, gossip, and facts—collectively called "the chant" by Cagers—find their way here to be bought and sold.

Sigil's chant-brokers provide information to those who seek it, whether the seeker is an adventurer from the world looking for a map of a dominion in the Astral Sea, a githyanki searching for clues to a forgotten location in the Shadowfell, or an eladrin lord from the Feywild hoping to find something lost in the Elemental Chaos. Sigil is the place to find and buy things that can't be held: secrets, gateways, passwords, the true names of dead gods, how to wake a sleeping primordial, the answers to lost riddles. Nearly everything known or imagined can be found here—for a price.

No matter how powerful or all-seeing a chant-broker seems, though, one fact remains true: No one has all the information, and anyone who claims otherwise is lying.

This ward overflows with monuments, fountains, and statuary of all descriptions. It is at once majestic and cold, full of life but ultimately lifeless thanks to the restrained (some would say absent) energy level imposed upon the visible streets by the residents of the neighborhood. Behind the gilded gates and white-washed facades of the well-kept buildings, all manner of revelries and plots unwind in secret. And that's the truth of The Lady's Ward: The orderly streets hide a secret turbulence that roils and seethes just out of sight.

The rich and powerful aren't all charitable and honorable, either. Behind the image of respectability might hide the secret face of a crime lord, or a tyrant, or a dark wizard. Not that all the residents of The Lady's Ward are evil, but they certainly aren't all good and holy, either.

Street crime in the ward is kept to a minimum, thanks to both the proximity of the Prison and the private militias employed by the great families and wealthiest individuals living in the neighborhood. Of course, these private armies sometimes battle each other in addition to keeping the ward safe, but that's just life in The Lady's Ward.

SONS OF MERCY PATROL

The typical Sons of Mercy patrol consists of three bashers and two wizards who make constant sweeps of the ward they are assigned to watch over and protect. More members can be called upon in situations that warrant additional firepower, but the Sons of Mercy don't have the unlimited resources necessary to really take control of the city's law-enforcement needs.

The examples on this page are typical Sons of Mercy members that usually patrol the streets of Sigil. The group does have access to higher-level members, though such individuals aren't normally sent out on routine patrols. They are leaders and special operatives within the group, saved for especially important missions.

Fey magic holds sway in the Gardens, a patch of greenery adjoining the noble district's most prestigious manors. An outer ring of lush and well-tended botanical wonders surrounds an inner circle of wild vegetation. Doors to the Feywild abound here. The inner circle alters its nature on a quarterly cycle, giving the Cage one of its few signs of seasonal change. In a succession of three-month intervals, it manifests as a deciduous forest (spring), a tropical jungle (summer), a thorn forest (autumn), and a coniferous forest (winter.) An ancient eladrin clan, the Bloodroot, protects the Gardens from interlopers. Members of its self-styled royal court change personalities as the vegetation of the inner circle shifts.

The sole sector of The Lady's Ward where the unwashed are permitted to gather is the Temple District. Here, great temples to the gods, funded by competing families, attract swarming crowds of worshipers. The gods cannot appear here, but that doesn't stop worshipers from competing in honor of their patron deities. Followers show their wealth and piety (in that order) by financing ever more impressive improvements.

Temples to dead and forgotten gods remain extravagantly staffed and attended. Certain families prefer to dedicate themselves to obscure deities, since an extinct god never steals your thunder or makes demands upon you.

Worship can be a thirsty business, and a band of expensive taverns rings the Temple District to cater to this need. Best known of them is the Silver Tankard, a celestial mead house constructed in imitation of a similar establishment in paradisiacal Hestavar.

Its fabled terrace is reserved for great heroes of law and virtue. The Silver Tankard is famed as the only known tavern run by a literal angel, the charismatic Aratha.

The Market Ward

Buyers and sellers flock to the Market Ward, famed throughout the planes for its Grand Bazaar. Among its countless stalls, customers can purchase any item imaginable—and some not. The Market Ward is one of the smallest of Sigil's neighborhoods (roughly matched in size by the Guildhall Ward). The most cosmopolitan of Sigil's wards, this is where you go to buy the common, useful, and everyday items you need for life inside the city—and for stocking up before departing for parts unknown.

The streets of the Market Ward buzz with activity at all times of the day and night. The sellers and the goods change as day becomes night, but the markets are always busy and full of customers, merchants, and curious browsers. The busiest and most amazing of these marketplaces is the Grand Bazaar.

By day, the Grand Bazaar fills an enormous square with stalls, tents, folding tables, and portable shop booths, and the smells of flowers, fruit, meat, and other exotic and familiar scents hang like a cloud over the area. The crowded aisles are surrounded by hawkers calling potential customers to taste, smell, touch, and otherwise examine and eventually buy the wares piled high in every stall.

Not everything that's for sale is either tangible or ready to pick up and cart off. Some things that can be purchased are stored outside Sigil, such as an astral skiff, a demonic war engine, or a safe house in the Elemental Chaos. Other items, such as special weapons or armor, are crafted to order and take time to produce. Make sure you can trust the seller, or that you have a way to guarantee that what you just purchased will be available for pickup at the appointed time or when you step through a portal to somewhere else in the planes.

Similar types of merchandise tend to be clustered in aisles, forming rough groupings of categories of items so that customers can compare while shopping. Foodstuffs, adventuring supplies, household goods, clothing, furnishings, magic items, alchemical goods, scrolls and books, armor, and weaponry can each be found in a separate section of the Grand Bazaar.

Be wary of pickpockets and cutpurses that freely roam the marketplaces, since not everyone who's looking to part you from your money is necessarily a merchant. Con artists, hustlers, thieves, and scoundrels of all descriptions also make a living in the Market Ward.

Gambling halls can be found within the confines of the Market Ward, and many inns and taverns feature at least a table or two devoted to games of chance. At these places, a visitor can be parted from his money, whether that visitor is shopping or not.

A laneway annex to the Grand Bazaar called the Seeker's Plaza swarms with guides and touts ready for hire. They range from splendidly garbed sages to street-bred ragamuffins. More established types are

Adventurers' Inns

The Market Ward is a favorite destination for adventurers, and many tend to stay here while they're in Sigil, patronizing the various inns catering to the trade. Inns popular with planar explorers cluster together on the edge of the Grand Bazaar, including such notable places as these.

- The Golden Spout is celebrated for the softness of its bunks and the purity of its ale. The halfling proprietor, Vala Pearlseeker, once served as a cleric of Melora. For reasons she refuses to discuss, she now renounces the worship of all gods and instead caters to the needs of travelers.
- The daringly named Hand of Vecna, known for the wildness of its clientele, can be found across from the stalls of weapons in the marketplace. Dragonborn innkeeper Zharam Yro permits entry to anyone, no matter how infamous, but he always requires payment in advance.
- The fortresslike Battlement charges premium prices for its well-secured rooms and access to its impregnable vault, a pocket dimension unto itself. Owner-operator Udar Kraa, a taciturn orc, personally heads its impressively equipped private guard.
- The Red Tabor (named after a handheld drum) suits gold-pinching guests willing to skimp on amenities, including cleanliness. The innkeeper, a touchy eladrin named Ambriel, throws out anyone who complains about the accommodations.

paid by inns and vendors to steer business in their direction. Smudge-faced youngsters desperate for a patron often prove more loyal in the long run than any of the crowd in the Plaza.

Copperman Way, a wide avenue made possible when its owners bought and demolished an entire impoverished neighborhood, provides a small oasis for the recently wealthy. Its residents include the merchant lords, the self-made rich who have prospered in a single generation. Most made their fortunes primarily in Sigil, though a few adventurers who acquired treasure troves in the planar vastness can be found among their number.

The spokesperson for this rising merchant class is the dragonborn Drizu Kuri, a sweet-talking vendor of magic items. Once an explorer herself, she keeps tabs on every new adventuring crew that comes to the city, quickly making acquaintance with the most promising of them. Drizu maintains a network of informants and scholars who research possible treasure hauls. She funds adventuring parties in return for a share of the proceeds, often providing potential quests as a way of encouraging business.

The Guildhall Ward

There aren't a lot of obvious differences between the Guildhall Ward and the Market Ward. If anything sets the Guildhall Ward apart, it's that it has more residential buildings than the Market Ward, and more crafters and artisans maintain workshops here and use the Market Ward as a place to sell their wares.

Since the decline of the factions, the guilds are once again rising to prominence in the City of Doors. The guilds monitor prices and wages throughout Sigil. Members meet to discuss business trends, exchange information, and promote employment. They offer training programs and apprenticeships, pool their resources to maintain work space and warehouses, and sometimes buy raw materials in bulk to share across the membership, depending on the businesses served by a particular guild.

Guild headquarters situated in this ward include the Order of Master Clerks and Scribes (which deals with copyists, record-keepers, and accountants), the Escort Guild (professional touts), the Council of Innkeepers, the Arcane Brotherhood (wizards and arcane scholars), and the Builders' Fellowship (carpenters and stonecutters). An Adventurers' Guild, established by Brin Konnet and his party of infamous cutters, is trying to find a foothold in Sigil, but so far few other adventurers and freebooters have agreed to join and pay the fees associated with membership in the organization.

The Clerk's Ward

By day, the scratching of pens on parchment fills the air throughout the Clerk's Ward. At night, when the sages and scribes retreat to their personal dens, studies, and libraries, the Civic Festhall comes alive with boisterous music and crowds looking for a good time.

Bureaucrats, scribes, sages, and scholars rule the Clerk's Ward by day, performing the behind-the-scenes work that keeps the city running. Here, keeping complete and accurate records is the passion and the purpose, and this activity allows the other wards to operate more or less smoothly. Laws, ownership deeds, proof of citizenry, payments and debts, arrests, and taxation—records of all these transactions and more are kept and maintained in the Clerk's Ward.

In general, the Clerk's Ward is the most tame and peaceful section of Sigil. Some might even refer to the place as dull. But it's the order and the dullness that makes the area so good for what it does. After all, nobody wants distractions that could lead to costly mistakes when it comes to the records of the City of Doors.

The Hall of Records dominates the ward, and it serves as the center of Sigil's financial world. Once controlled by the faction known as the Fated, the Hall of Records is now the domain of the Order of Master Clerks and Scribes. In the aftermath of the Faction War, taxes fell by the wayside. This situation worked out well for a while, but then the masses began to make noise about the fact that nothing was getting done throughout the city. Without any funds, many of the processes of government ground to a halt. So, the Order called for a series of new taxes, with postings that described exactly what the funds would be spent to accomplish, and taxation was returned to Sigil. Most think that the new taxes, reasonably inexpensive and with full disclosure on spending, are much better than the taxes in the days of the Fated. Still, there's always someone grumbling that taxes are too high.

The work of the Hall of Records includes registering merchants' bills of credit, setting official exchange rates for planar currency, registering property deeds and discovery claims, revising tax rolls, and recording defaults on debts. Records of the Court are also filed here, and proclamations by various higher-ups of the city are copied and posted for all to read.

Fine inns abound near the Hall of Records, since everyone knows that money attracts more money. You can also hire bodyguards, mercenaries, adventurers, wizards, and even thieves at any tavern.

The Civic Festhall, another prominent feature of the Clerk's Ward, serves as a place of pleasure, entertainment, and distractions from the usual problems of the day. Every night, the Festhall puts on some kind of show or performance, whether a concert, an opera, or a play. The Festhall also features a museum, an art gallery, a tavern, and a wine shop. Programs at the Festhall are designed to show its patrons a good and safe time, sometimes with a little culture thrown in.

The streets around the Festhall attract all kinds of artistic businesses, featuring curiosities from across the planes. These unusual artistic expressions sometimes turn into fads that spread like wildfire through the city. Most burn out as quickly as they sprang up, but every once in a while a new flavor takes hold and works its way into Sigil's cultural consciousness.

The Lower Ward

Artisans and other skilled laborers dwell in the sulfurous haze of the Lower Ward, where the fires of the Elemental Chaos rise through lava-filled pools and chasms to power smithies and forges. The Great Foundry sits at the center of the ward, with warehouses, mills, forges, and small workshops surrounding it in ever-widening circles. The ward is named for the disproportionate number of portals to the Plane Below that can be accessed here.

People living and working in the Lower Ward tend to be stubborn, hard-working, and a bit secretive. It's a rough-and-tumble place, and those who frequent the area know that they have to be able to take care of themselves, since there's little in the way of law or protection on these hot, steamy streets.

Scalding steam and stinking smoke rise from the Great Foundry to form a layer of haze that hangs eternally over Sigil's rooftops. The workshops of smiths, glassblowers, and other artisans are clustered here. Vents from the Elemental Chaos lend them magical heat and other forms of energy. Tools, hinges, pots, nails, and other goods made of iron pour forth from the workers in the Great Foundry on a regular basis. Since the fall of the factions, a group of bladelings (see Manual of the Planes, page 116) have taken up the responsibility of running the Great Foundry. Much of the city is just happy to have new goods to buy and sell, but some wonder about what deeper agenda the strange humanoids have put into play.

Elementals, demons, and other creatures of the Plane Below roam the streets of the Lower Ward. Some come to Sigil to conduct legitimate business (though most would balk at what the demons call legitimate), while others use the portals to handle darker, more dangerous deeds in the City of Doors. It isn't unusual to see archons working the forges and foundries, or to encounter barlguras or mariliths in the seedier taverns, or to discover a free-roaming elemental searching a dark alley or the ruins of an old workshop or warehouse.

The Shattered Temple, another prominent structure in the ward, stands as a reminder of things that have gone away. Once the site of an imposing iron temple, today all that remains is a zone of destruction. Not only is the god it was once dedicated to dead and forgotten, but the faction that held this place as its headquarters fled the city in the aftermath of the Faction War.

NICOLE ASHLEY CARDIFF

Parts of the Shattered Temple have been repaired so that it can be used, but only a small portion of the structure has been made whole. The rest remains a tumbled ruin. Many consider the place to be bad luck and the nexus of ill omens within the city. Most steer clear of the place and take the long way around to avoid it whenever they can.

With the demise of the factions, the ruin has become home to ghosts, specters, and other creatures from the Shadowfell. A number of doors to this plane are scattered about the ruins of the Shattered Temple, and every once in a while a brave (or foolish?) band of adventurers heads into the ruins in search of a portal. Among the things haunting the Temple is a clan of vampires known as the Stokril. The vampires are careful not to draw too much attention to themselves, but at least a few of the many who go missing in the Lower Ward can be chalked up to the nighttime activities of the Stokril clan.

The cavern complex called the Bones of Night extends beneath the streets of the Lower Ward. Located near the foul-smelling Ditch (the closest thing to a river running through the ward), the Bones of Night serves as a font of knowledge for those willing to appeal to dark powers and things that no longer walk among the living. Here, wizards, warlocks, scholars, sages, and those of darker trades come to learn from the dead.

The cavern complex is accessed through a gaping hole in a fire-gutted building. A ladder made of bone descends into the darkness below. As you step upon the ladder, the sound of what must be hundreds of chittering rats surrounds you, but it fades away as you descend into the Salon of Skulls. The grave dressings of hundreds of wealthy dead citizens decorate the entrance salon. Plush chairs, richly appointed tables, and thick tapestries fill the room, and burial shrouds hang as curtains to create private areas within. The walls of the salon are lined with shelves. Skulls of all shapes and sizes fill the shelves, including human, elf, eladrin, dwarf, tiefling, dragonborn, and more. A hole in the floor of the salon leads to the Catacombs, where even more skulls (as well as additional recently interred dead) are stored.

Lothar, the Master of Bones, consults his "library of skulls" for a fee when supplicants arrive to seek knowledge. Using the experiences and information provided by the dead, Lothar makes a fine living while also learning something of the seekers by the questions they ask. A stone golem and a pack of wererats serve Lothar and protect the Bones of Night.

The Hive

A labyrinth of hovels, shanties, and tents fills the Hive. This ward provides a home to the city's destitute, its criminals, and its ambitious up-and-comers. So named because its residents are packed together like hornets in a nest, the Hive comprises existence's most notorious slum. Decrepit tenements jut like broken teeth along its narrow, snaking streets. It's one of the worst places to live or visit, and life here can be deadly and extremely short. A bit of honest work can be found, but more common are the jobs best suited to the desperate and the insane. Not everyone here is bad or evil; the ward is also occupied by those who are down on their luck, who have been treated badly by life through no fault of their own, or who accidentally wandered into Sigil and can't find either a way out or a way to make a decent living. For these, the Hive is the only option.

Although legitimate businesses don't take up a lot of space in the Hive, things still get bought and sold around the ward. Thieves and robbers use fences to help them sell their stolen wares, and you can find a pawnbroker or a moneylender on almost every corner. Slave markets operate in secret in the Hive, popping up in different locations so that any authorities who care can't easily find them and shut them down. Entertainment is available in the Hive, from taverns serving cheap drinks to gladiator pits where the desperate are pitted against each other and against exotic monsters for the amusement of the crowd.

In sharp contrast to the ward's general squalor and noise, the area surrounding Sigil's vast Mortuary is pristine and silent. The faction once known as the Dustmen has formed the Mortuary Guild, and "dustman" has become a generic term for anyone who disposes of the dead. Dustman coaches gather the dead throughout the city, then cart the bodies to the Mortuary for processing. Within the Mortuary, doors to every plane are concentrated in perhaps the greatest numbers found anywhere in the city. The dustmen and their undead assistants send the city's corpses to other worlds for disposal. The doors within the Mortuary are not generally used for traveling around the planes. As often as not, these portals lead to great crematoriums, burial pits, necropolises, and other places dangerous to living creatures.

The dustmen seem to have a connection to the Shadowfell, and many revere the Raven Queen for her role in the final disposition of the dead.

Clans of goblins and orcs seem to be locked in a perpetual skirmish on the Hive's side of the Ditch. The clan leaders, Pruto of the orcs and Sojah of the goblins, wage a barely contained war for control of the area around the Ditch. Pruto uses his ferocious sons and daughters to lead strike teams against the goblins, while Sojah schemes and covertly hires mercenaries to steadily eliminate Pruto's brood.

At the very edge of the Hive, the Gatehouse overlooks the wretched ward. This arched tower with sprawling wings continues to serve as the place where the mad and the lost are administered by the people who once assembled under the faction of the Bleak Cabal. When the factions were disbanded, the Bleakers shrugged, threw off the trappings of their organization, and simply went about the business of caring for their disturbed and insane charges. There are always long lines waiting to get into the Gatehouse. Many of Sigil's destitute have looked into the planes and found madness staring back at them, and these individuals find their way to the Gatehouse for care. Some come of their own accord, seeking help in their moments of lucidity. Others must be dragged, kicking and screaming, to the doors of the place.

The Gatehouse rings with the screams of the mad and the cries of the insane. Whether the bizarre nature of a strange corner of a distant plane has unhinged an inmate's mind, or an arcane scholar read the wrong scroll and is now haunted by apocalyptic visions of a distant realm that draws ever closer, the Gatehouse caregivers take each unfortunate's symptoms in stride and provide what help they can.

The Gatehouse Night Market appears every evening as the light of day gives way to the encroaching darkness of twilight and later. For those accustomed to shopping in the Market Ward, the Night Market is a plunge into the cold water of another world. It's dangerous, exciting, and exotic in ways that the average citizen can only dream about—and usually only wants to.

What can you find at the Night Market? All kinds of goods and services that don't appear in the stalls or on the shelves of the markets set up by day. From poisons and dangerous elixirs, to burglars and assassins for hire, if it's illicit, immoral, or profane, chances are you can find it in the Night Market.

In the Night Market, stolen goods are bought and sold. If you need someone to forge a document or perform a dangerous ritual, introductions can be made for the right price. Do you need illegal ritual components? Cursed magic items? Banned goods? Wander the Night Market, and you can probably find someone willing to sell what you want. Whether that individual actually has access to the item or service you paid for is an entirely different matter.

A blackened expanse of ruined metal buildings, many of them half-melted, is known as the Slags. This portion of the Hive houses the city's most repellent and antisocial entities. Inhabited by aberrations and their depraved mortal allies, it is treated as anathema by all but the bravest adventurers. The poorest of the poor dwell on the streets in this vicinity, their sleep bedeviled by the shrieks and rending noises accompanying the near-constant combat between its mutually hostile denizens.

It is said that the Slags are the result of a random portal that deposited warring demons into the streets of the Hive. The portal has long since closed, and most of the demons have departed for other realms, but evidence of the destructive battle remains, as well as lingering dangers that keep the Slags in ruins. Windblown balls of razorvine slice their way through the streets, adding to the dangers presented by wild worgs, dire animals, and areas of planar instability. Earthquakes rumble through the area on a regular basis, opening or closing cracks in the ground, rearranging rubble, and knocking down the few ruins still standing. The demon warriors also left behind caches of weapons and supplies, but these are trapped and extremely dangerous to anyone seeking to acquire their contents. Worse, the traps reestablish themselves through demonic magic, which makes it impossible to follow a foolish adventurer and simply take the prize after he or she has been reduced to a fine red mist.

The Kadyx

The worst threat rumored to roam the broken streets of the Slags is called the kadyx. No one has ever seen the kadyx in plain view and lived to describe it. When it is glimpsed by a fleeing observer, the observer reports seeing a glistening black scale or the flash of a scythelike claw. Legends claim that the kadyx came through the portal with the demon armies, and that it is a deadly carnivore of magical origin. It demonstrates a high degree of intelligence and even a twisted sense of humor, mostly seen in the way it leaves behind the remains of its victims. The bodies of warrior types are discovered with their armor intact, but the body inside reduced to nothing more than a fleshless pile of bones, and other victims are displayed in gruesome yet ironic ways.

Faces of Sigil

Among Sigil's diverse population, a number of individuals stand out as prominent or notable members of the constantly changing society of the Cage. Here are a few of them.

Adamok Ebon: Bladeling hunter, guide, and sometime-assassin for hire, known to be occasionally employed by Shemeshka the Marauder.

A'kin: Owner of the Friendly Fiend, an exceptional magical trinket shop. The polite and cultured raavasta (see Manual of the Planes, page 136) seemingly knows the secrets of everyone's business, and appears willing and eager to assist with his customers' any need. A'kin is as friendly as his shop's name, chatting easily with his customers and often gifting them with free trinkets . . . and answering all questions except those about himself.

Alluvius Ruskin: To most, the sweet old tiefling shop owner of Tivvum's Antiquities, a prominent gate-key shop in the Market Ward. But Lu—aside from being a skillful and dangerous wizard—has her own plans for the Cage: She wants to consume enough magic from the city to overthrow the Lady of Pain.

Arwyl Swan's Son: Human paladin from Cormyr on Toril and the leader of the Sons of Mercy. Arwyl finds the situation much improved from the days when the Mercykillers imposed their harsh brand of justice in the Cage. Mindful of those times, he tries to keep the Sons out of political entanglements and focused on seeing justice done.

Autochon the Bellringer: The armor-encased Master of Couriers. Very few messages passed between folks in the City of Doors don't travel by way of his messengers. His couriers are by far the finest in the city, many of them "silent couriers" enchanted to reveal their messages only to the proper recipient. Whispered rumors claim that no one has dared to attack Autochon's messengers since he made a profitable (yet horrifying) contract for their protection with the Temple of the Abyss in The Lady's Ward.

Balthazar Thames: An independent investigator and self-proclaimed "solver of mysteries, finder of lost objects, and friend for hire." Thames's services aren't cheap, but the deva is reliable and loyal to his clients.

Black Marian: Human fortuneteller at the Singing Fountain in The Lady's Ward. Marian can hear the future of any cutter who drinks from the fountain. When she's not telling fortunes, Marian sings for the crowds and sometimes passes along hidden messages within her metaphor-laden lyrics. Autochon the Bellringer considers Marian's message-songs a direct threat to his control over the city's couriers.

Caravan: One of Estavan's best human agents, Caravan has recently become disenchanted with his employer due to his exposure to Estavan's shady dealings. He remains loyal to the oni mage, though surreptitious offers of work from would-be employers have been tempting him to change jobs. Caravan's great strength, experience, and competence mark him as one of the Cage's most sought-after hirelings.

Estavan: Merchant lord of the Planar Trade Consortium, an extensive trade-and-transport company. As the Consortium's most visible agent, Estavan has status and influence in the City of Doors that far surpasses that accorded to a simple trader. Goods travel with the Consortium's caravans from one end of the planes to another and often pass through Sigil on the way. Estavan keeps constantly busy tracking those shipments, arranging new trades, hiring bashers to guard the transports, and checking up on Consortium affairs in the town of Tradegate—yet he still finds time to arrange the order of Sigil's business with Shemeshka the Marauder and Zadara, formerly his two biggest competitors and now his partners in a stranglehold over financial matters in the Cage. Estavan's (and the Consortium's) clients include such diverse cutters as A'kin, Alluvius Ruskin, and Kesto Brighteyes. Given Estavan's growing influence, more and more folks are asking: Who, exactly, owns the Planar Trade Consortium, and who truly controls all of its vast resources?

Fell, the Rogue Dabus: The source of much tension in the City of Doors. Unlike other dabus, Fell touches the ground when he walks and is quite friendly to those he meets. Whispered chant says that Fell betrayed the Lady of Pain. No one knows why the Lady suffers him to walk the streets of the Cage, and though many would love to punish Fell for his crime, they figure that his punishment—when it comes—will be by the Lady's hand.

Kesto Brighteyes: The gnome illusionist who runs the Parted Veil bookshop in the Lower Ward. The Parted Veil remains one of the best places in all of Sigil to research any topic—if Kesto doesn't have a book on something that interests a browser, he'll know someone who does.

Kylie: This young tiefling used to work for Autochon the Bellringer until she quit in the middle of a message delivery. Autochon would have sworn revenge except that his own master, Shemeshka the Marauder, ordered him to leave the girl alone. Kylie now runs her own growing gang of touts and couriers. Kylie knows a great number of the important folks in the city and has good contacts with many of them.

Lissandra the Gate-Seeker: An émigré from the world fascinated by the workings of Sigil's portals. Lissandra keeps a log of known portals and keys and constantly updates her information by questioning anyone using the portals. She's currently looking to hire adventurers to "obtain" Ramander the Wise's log-book so that information about all the portals in the city can be disseminated to the common people, where it belongs.

Lothar the Old: The Master of Bones maintains a vast skull "library" from which he has pulled enough information to rival any chant-broker. For a considerable fee, Master Lothar consults the bones for knowledge on virtually any subject. If necessary, his wererat servants search out and obtain particular skulls that hold specific secrets. Cagers say that only Master Lothar truly knows where all the bones in Sigil are buried, and they groan at the pun—but remember the truth.

Ramander the Wise: The "Master of Portals." Whenever this human mage's team of searchers locates a new portal, Ramander tries to buy the land it sits on and charges travelers a hefty fee for the use of the portal. If he cannot buy the land, he extorts the owner into paying him an even larger fee simply to retain the portal site. If thwarted, he resorts to darker tactics. Ramander skates on the thin edge of the Lady's laws against tampering with the city's portals. The city's residents mostly leave him to his business because Ramander works for Shemeshka the Marauder, and no one wants to threaten one of her favorite operatives. But even Shemeshka cannot protect the mage from the Lady's wrath, and everyone waits impatiently for the Master of Portals to find his own private portal—one that leads to an inescapable Maze.

Rhys: The lovely tiefling face of the Sigil Advisory Council. A natural advisor and balancing factor for the council, Rhys relies on her instincts for snap judgments that—to Sigil's benefit—turn out to be accurate more often than not.

Rule-of-Three: A wise man, a trickster, and a shrewd rogue. Appearing as a githzerai sage, Rule-of-Three can often be found at the Styx Oarsman tavern in the Lower Ward, dispensing advice in triplicate riddles that often contradict each other. His peculiar rules of commerce require him to ask for payment in sets of three: for example, three coins of different metals, or three pouches, each containing a separate valuable spice. In response, he gives three answers to every question. This practice relates to an abstruse philosophy claiming that everything in existence can be grouped into triads.

Some say this wrinkled, rail-thin sage is really the son of a demon prince. He laughs off such suggestions even as he reveals disturbingly reliable information about the Abyss.

Rule-of-Three collects intelligence on political events in Sigil and draws on extensive contacts in other planes as well. He occasionally acts as a mediator and broker for warring parties. As with anyone who knows more than he's telling, others project a grand agenda onto him. Surely a disheveled tavern rat couldn't really be planning to reignite the Blood War, or to unite demons and devils for an apocalyptic final battle against the gods . . . right?

Shemeshka the Marauder: The self-proclaimed "King of the Cross-Trade." Few dare to argue with the title; the raavasta's range of knowledge and secrets is matched only by her vicious temper. Shemeshka attained her position as Sigil's most prominent and powerful chant-broker through her vast network of spies. The raavasta's agents are everywhere, and their presence ensures that the power players of the city rely on Shemeshka for news on their enemies—and fear her for what she may be revealing about them. The fiend holds the strings of powerful movers such as Autochon the Bellringer and Ramander the Wise, having ensured their debt (and others') to her through convoluted plans that always end with her granting a "favor"—one that binds them to her eternally. Shemeshka has her hands in a great deal of the city's business, whether openly or through representatives. All of these factors—spies, secrets, control, and financial might—make Shemeshka the Marauder one of the most feared, hated, and powerful creatures in the City of Doors.

Tattershade, King of the Rats: This shadow fiend rules an underground wererat "kingdom" near the Ditch. The wererats mostly act as thieves in the Hive and in squalid parts of the Lower Ward, though folks in these areas have lately reported an increase in the frequency of actual attacks. The wererat twins Trick and Track act as Tattershade's lieutenants.

The Us: A pack of cranium rats whose combined intelligence reaches godlike proportions. The Us directs its mind-controlled servants to take actions the pack thinks will help it grow and gain power.

Vocar the Disobedient: A worn, wrinkled human named Vocar leads a fugitive existence in the Hive, hiding from the servants of Vecna. His empty eye socket and missing hand testify to his past as an exarch of the maimed god. Occasionally lucid but often babblingly mad, Vocar trades the awful truths he learned while serving the god of secrets for momentary shelter from his wrath. Those bargaining for his revelations are left to sort out which are reliable and which are figments of his shattered mind.

Most residents of Sigil believe that Vocar is simply mad. He wanders the Hive with a red cloth covering his missing eye while whispering a constant stream of strange utterances. People avoid him, and only the desperate or the equally insane have anything to do with him.

Zadara: Probably the wealthiest person in Sigil. Though few know the extent of her operations, Zadara has a hand in a good many enterprises. The storm giant has a talent for recognizing those whose plans have the potential to increase her fortune, and she provides them with enough gold to put their schemes into motion. She backs and funds the various works of Lissandra the Gate-Seeker, among others. Her main rivals for financial control over the Cage include her new "partners," Shemeshka the Marauder and Estavan of the Planar Trade Consortium. Rarely seen on the streets of Sigil, Zadara employs powerful door guards—two marut blademasters named Kubriel and Gog— to keep unwanted visitors out of her mansion.

TYPICAL STREET ENCOUNTER

Encounter Level 13 (4,800 XP)

Setup

1 half-elf brigand captain (C)
1 human gladiator (G)
1 abyssal eviscerator (A)
5 dwarf thugs (D)

Use this encounter whenever the adventurers are exploring the streets of Sigil or trying to find a specific location somewhere in the Cage. This encounter works best during the twilight or night hours, when the streets are darker and more dangerous.

A gang of brigands waits to ambush anyone who enters this quiet, empty square.

As the adventurers approach the stairs down into this small square from the northern street, the first thing they notice is the pulsating glow of the strange vortex across from the fountain. None of the brigands are immediately visible.

Set this encounter in the Market Ward, the Clerk's Ward, the Lower Ward, or the Hive.

As the adventurers approach the square, read:
Stairs ahead of you lead down to an open square surrounded by dark buildings and darker alleyways. You can hear the low gurgle of water in the fountain at the center of the square, but the thing that most captures your attention is the strange, pulsating glow of swirling energy radiating in the darkness ahead.

Half-Elf Brigand Captain (C) Level 13 Skirmisher
Medium natural humanoid XP 800

Initiative +13 Senses Perception +12; low-light vision
HP 126; Bloodied 63
AC 27; Fortitude 25, Reflex 26, Will 24
Speed 6

⊕ Longsword (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+18 vs. AC; 1d8 + 8 damage, and the half-elf brigand captain shifts 1 square.

⊕ Dagger (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Ranged 5/10; +18 vs. AC; 1d4 + 6 damage.

⊕ / ⊕ Slash and Dash (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚄ ⚅)
The half-elf brigand captain makes a longsword attack, shifts 2 squares, and makes a dagger attack.

⊕ Triggering Slash (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Weapon
+18 vs. AC; 2d8 + 8 damage, and one ally shifts 1 square and makes a melee basic attack as a free action.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common, Elven
Skills Athletics +15, Diplomacy +14, Insight +12, Stealth +16
Str 18 (+10) Dex 20 (+11) Wis 12 (+7)
Con 14 (+8) Int 10 (+6) Cha 16 (+9)
Equipment leather armor, longsword, 6 daggers

Perception Check
DC 18 Somewhere to the west, a pack animal snorts.
DC 25 You notice a small figure crouching atop a nearby roof, watching intently as you approach the square.

Tactics

The brigands work well together and have learned how to incorporate the vortex into their tactics. The vortex is a random arcane event that appears in the same space on a couple of nights during every month. It appears according to no schedule, so the brigands check for its appearance on a regular basis and then use it to their advantage when it materializes.

The captain, the gladiator, and the demon stick to the shadows, hiding until the adventurers move into the square. The dwarf thugs maintain their position until they have clear shots; then they open fire and try to draw the adventurers deeper into the square.

The dwarf thugs stick to the roofs for as long as possible, firing down upon the adventurers with their crossbows. They attempt to concentrate fire on a single target whenever the opportunity presents itself, but they will spread their bolts around to keep the adventurers off balance.

The gladiator and the abyssal eviscerator rush from the dark alleyways once they can clearly spot a target in the square. Both attempt to force their opponents toward the vortex to take advantage of the aid it can provide them (see "Features of the Area").

The brigand captain moves through the shadows, looking to flank an opponent and strike with surprise before slipping away. He tries to work with the gladiator if possible, because he doesn't really trust the demon.

The brigands fight until only two remain, and then they attempt to escape, either through the dark alleys or into the sewer grate in the northwest alley.

Equipment light shield, scale armor, gladius (short sword)

Development

If the brigands are defeated but any of them manage to escape, then they will gather allies and attempt to get revenge against the adventurers. This retaliatory attack might not happen for days or weeks, but the brigands will watch the adventurers from afar, get a sense of their patterns and habits, and then strike again when the characters least expect it. These brigands are part of a larger band of thieves and cutthroats operating in Sigil, and they don't take well to losing a battle.

Features of the Area

Illumination: Dim light from the vortex in the square. Darkness in the alleys around the square.

Bench: Two benches in the square are difficult terrain.

Building: The buildings surrounding the square are locked tight and are 20 feet high. Anyone falling off a building roof takes 2d10 damage. A character can climb to the roof of a building with a DC 23 Athletics check.

Fountain: The fountain in the square gurgles with running water. The fountain is difficult terrain.

Oxcart: A cart laden with crates and barrels, hitched to the ox that pulls it, is parked next to a building. If the rope securing the ox is cut, the ox bolts at the first sign of trouble—pulling the cart along with it. It moves 6 squares each turn. Any creatures whose squares it moves through take 9 damage and are pushed 1 square out of the way.

Stalls: The stalls are empty. They are blocking terrain.

Vortex: The vortex is a swirling, pulsating cloud of arcane energy. Any creature that enters the vortex is attacked: +16 vs. Will; 1d6 + 6 damage, and the target is dazed (save ends). Whether the attack hits or misses, the target slides 1d6 + 1 squares west.

TYPICAL SEWER ENCOUNTER

Encounter Level 15 (6,000 XP)

SETUP

3 cranium rat arcanist swarms (R)
2 wererat sewer guards (G)
2 elemental oozes (O)

Use this encounter whenever the adventurers are exploring the sewers of Sigil. They could be searching for a missing person or item, seeking a hidden lair or chamber beneath the streets, or looking for a portal to a specific location.

| 2 Wererat Sewer Guards (G) | Level 13 Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Medium natural humanoid (shapechanger) | XP 800 each |
| Initiative +14 | Senses Perception +14; low-light vision |
| HP 130; Bloodied 65 | |
| Regeneration 10 (if the wererat takes damage from a silvered weapon, its regeneration doesn't function on its next turn) | |
| AC 27; Fortitude 25, Reflex 26, Will 24 | |
| Immune sewer fever (see below) | |
| Speed 6, climb 4 (not in human form) | |
| ⓣ Short Sword (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison, Weapon | |
| +18 vs. AC; 1d10 + 6 damage, plus ongoing 10 poison damage (save ends). | |
| ⓣ Bite (standard; at-will) ✦ Disease | |
| +18 vs. AC; 1d6 + 4 damage, and the target takes ongoing 5 damage (save ends) and contracts sewer fever (see below). | |
| ⓡ Crossbow (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison, Weapon | |
| Ranged 15/30; +18 vs. AC; 1d8 + 6 poison damage, plus ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends). | |
| ⸸ Dance of Poison (standard; encounter; recharges when first bloodied) | |
| The wererat makes two short sword attacks against one target, shifts up to 3 squares, and makes two short sword attacks against a different target. | |
| Change Shape (minor; at-will) ✦ Polymorph | |
| A wererat can alter its physical form to appear as a dire rat or a unique human (see "Change Shape," Monster Manual 2, page 216). It loses its bite attack in human form. | |
| Combat Advantage | |
| A wererat deals 2d6 extra damage on melee attacks against any target that grants it combat advantage. | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages Common |
| Skills Bluff +15, Stealth +17, Streetwise +15, Thievery +17 | |
| Str 20 (+11) | Dex 22 (+12) Wis 16 (+9) |

| Equipment cloak, short sword | |

The section of the sewer the PCs travel to is controlled by a pack of cranium rats. When the adventurers arrive, only three swarms are currently in residence. The rest of the pack is out and about on various errands and other business. That doesn't mean that the rats are defenseless. In addition to their own abilities, two wererat sewer guards serve as protection for the nest, and the cranium rats have also used their psychic powers to coax a pair of elemental oozes to roam the nearby waterways as further discouragement for intruders.

Set this encounter in sewers beneath the Market Ward, the Clerk's Ward, or The Lady's Ward.

The adventurers begin this encounter in the storage room, the southernmost room on the map.

As the adventurers enter the storeroom, read:
Stairs lead down into a dusty room full of crates and barrels. A large crack in the north wall opens into darkness. A foul smell emanates from the opening.

Perception Check
DC 18 You notice a faint flicker of light deep within the darkness beyond the opening in the north wall.
DC 25 You hear the low gurgle of water somewhere in the darkness beyond the opening in the north wall.

TACTICS

The wererat sewer guards work together to take down the most-powerful-looking opponent, setting up flanking situations to gain combat advantage. They have no problem hanging back and firing their crossbows, or falling back to use ranged attacks when they start taking a lot of damage. They use dance of poison at the first opportunity, and again after they become bloodied. They don't exactly work with the elemental oozes, but they do try to lure opponents toward the creatures so that the oozes get into the battle.

The elemental oozes attack any creature that is unfriendly to the cranium rats. Whenever an enemy gets within 10 squares of an ooze, the ooze notices it with its tremorsense and moves to attack on its turn. An ooze can flow freely into and out of the sewer water as part of a move action. Remember to use an ooze's elemental backlash when it takes damage, and its elemental burst when it is bloodied or killed. As long as at least one cranium rat swarm remains within 10 squares of an ooze, the ooze will keep fighting until it is destroyed. Without the influence of the swarm, an ooze attempts to flee the battle once it is bloodied.

| Sewer Fever | Level 13 Disease | Endurance improve DC 23, maintain DC 18, worsen DC 17 or lower |
|---|---|---|
| The target is cured. | ◀ Initial Effect: The target loses a healing surge. | ◀▶ The target takes a -2 penalty to AC, Fortitude, and Reflex. | ▶ Final State: The target takes a -2 penalty to AC, Fortitude, and Reflex. The target loses all healing surges and cannot regain hit points. |

The cranium rat arcanist swarms have a group mind. Each swarm makes all of the other swarms within 10 squares of it smarter and more powerful. They leave the heavy lifting of battle to the wererats and oozes, preferring to hang back and use their ranged powers from a distance. When only one swarm remains, it attempts to escape deeper into the sewer.

| 2 Elemental Oozes (O) | | Level 12 Brute |

TYPICAL SEWER ENCOUNTER

Development

If the adventurers defeat the cranium rats, they must eventually deal with the ramifications. The rest of the pack seeks revenge against them, and the cranium rats are experts at manipulating others by mental suggestions. The adventurers don't really want these creatures as long-term enemies, and they should look for ways to appease them and make amends.

Features of the Area

Illumination: Dim light from the sputtering torches hung sparingly throughout the area.

Bridges: Rickety planks cross the sewer channels in various places.

Lair: The alcove where one of the cranium rat swarms begins the encounter is the lair of the cranium rat pack. It contains two level 15 treasure parcels (see Dungeon Master's Guide, page 128).

Ladder: A ladder leads up to the streets above.

Rubble: Piles of rubble and trash are difficult terrain.

Sewer Water: The sludgy water flowing through the channels is 5 feet deep and is difficult terrain. It cost 2 squares of movement to move from the water onto the sewer platforms. Any creature that enters the water or starts its turn there takes 5 acid damage.

To some, the planes are inaccessible and unknown. These people are locked to a particular reality, unable to walk from world to world for reasons that usually involve ignorance or fear. There are those, however, who understand the ways of planes and portals, and for those select few (relatively speaking) the planes provide a wide and varied vista for trade, exploration, research, and adventure.

Whether they know the secrets of planar travel or just have a strong sword and some spells to sell, adventurers can make gold and find transport at any of the gate-towns scattered across existence. Bodyguards, couriers, and caravan guards hired to protect one of the constant trade caravans moving between Sigil and the planes are always in high demand.

A gate-town is any settlement, in the natural world or on the planes, built around a known portal to someplace else. Such portals are not the usual permanent teleportation circles that you can find in most civilized towns and cities, but actual gateways that open onto another plane of existence. The area around a gate-town takes on aspects of the plane on the other end of its portal, giving visitors an idea of what they can expect when they cross over to the other side. The planar energy that leaks through the portal causes this; the effect it has on the area depends on where the portal leads.

The other aspect of a gate-town's portal is convenience and reliability. It is always accessible (though it might have a cycle of times when it is open and times when it is closed), and you don't usually need a gate key to cause it to function. Gate-town portals to Sigil abide by all the known restrictions, however, including the fact that gods and other extremely powerful beings cannot use them.

These conduits between realities are always guarded and maintained by their communities, since they represent varying degrees of wealth and power to those that control them.

Tradegate

The bustling town of Tradegate, situated at the crossroads in the shadow of the Rumbling Hills, provides the natural world with a known and accessible gate to Sigil. Merchants from across the land come to sell local goods and buy exotic goods from across the planes that move through Sigil to the market in Tradegate. Sigil's Planar Trade Consortium runs Tradegate, using it as one of its key distribution centers along the caravan routes it maintains. Master Trader Duncam keeps a tight rein on access to the gate, however. You can't just come to Tradegate, stroll up to the ornate stone gate that stands like an arch in the middle of the town square, and step through it into Sigil. A special gate key is required to operate this portal, and Duncam reveals the key only to those he deems worthy of entering the City of Doors—and who can afford the 1,000 gp fee.

Slumber

The sleepy town of Slumber, resting in a quiet corner of the Shadowfell, features a misshapen stone gate to the Plane of Dreams. The land around Slumber fluctuates between giving off visions of contented dreams and terrible nightmares as the gate's cycle unfolds. It opens twice each month, and the land reflects which part of Dream the gate leads to when it activates. For three days in the middle of the month, the gate opens upon Dream's more fanciful and comforting regions, and the land around Slumber grows lighter and more vibrant in response. For three days at the end of the month, when the gate opens into the regions of nightmare, Slumber and the surrounding countryside take on a darker, more dangerous tone. Monsters roam the shadows, mostly out of sight. The mood of the town takes on a lunatic bent, and the usually sedate population allows its darker instincts to rise to the surface.

TOMAS GIORELLO

Excelsior

Among the shining ports of the Astral Sea, few are brighter than the gate-town of Excelsior. The streets here are paved with gold-flecked brick, and floating castles of paladin lords protect the port from pirates and other dangers. The glowing gate, like a pool of golden light radiating deep within the town's guarded perimeter, leads to the holy mountains of Celestia.

Bedlam

There's a crazy little burg in the Feywild known as Bedlam. Here, the streets seem a bit off kilter, and no building stands straight and tall. All the lines are askew, with no right angles anywhere, and the sounds of either uncontrollable crying or insane laughter echo in the shadowed alleys and behind covered windows throughout the town. The problem here is that the place is built around a gate to Pandemonium, the forgotten domain of madness and exile. Luckily for the people living in or visiting Bedlam, the gate only opens once every month, when the dark moon rises unseen above the land. The gate is said to open upon Madhouse, the citadel of the Bleak Cabal. While this might or might not be true, it is known that some former members of Sigil's disbanded faction have taken up residence in Bedlam to help keep in check those affected by Pandemonium's influence.

Plague-Mort

The ramshackle town of Plague-Mort occupies an unusually dark corner of the Shadowfell, where its gate that resembles a black pool of oil waits to transport travelers to the Abyss. Thanks to the influence of the Abyss that leaks through the gate, Plague-Mort follows the law of "might makes right." The strongest rule in Plague-Mort, and the current ruler goes by the name of Blackhelm. His enforcers, the Plague Hounds, are always looking for new recruits—and forced conscription is the normal method of hire for the Plague Hounds.

Moonstair

The town of Moonstair, built amid the ruins of the ancient troll kingdom of Vardar, serves as a trade outpost to the southwest of Nentir Vale. The town's most renowned feature is the Moon Door, a gate to the Feywild that opens whenever the moon is full and the sky is clear. The Moon Door sits atop an island of jagged stone that juts from the river beyond the westernmost point of the town. A wide ring of moss and flowering plants marks the spot where the gate appears when it opens. To reach the Moon Door, travelers traverse a series of smaller, rocky islets—the "moon stair" for which the town is named. The gate serves as a regular pathway between this part of the natural world and the eladrin castle-city of Celduilon in the Feywild.

Farren

Strange energy seems to flow through the town of Farren, nestled among the Mountains of Chaos in the natural world. Not a normal gate-town, Farren appears to have a one-way connection from someplace distant and outside the bounds of the multiverse. This connection flows from that strange and mysterious place to Farren—never the other way. The gate here, if that's what it can truly be called, appears as a cloud of slimy darkness trapped within a box canyon just beyond the limits of the town. The place feels wrong, and the inhabitants range from secretive and distant to noticeably insane. Mystics and prophets come to Farren to have visions or learn secrets, but the visions usually lead to madness, and the secrets provide nothing but death and destruction to those that hear them. Two or three times every year, the mountains rumble and the cloud comes alive with dancing energy. Abominations and aberrations of all kinds have appeared at these times, leading some to speculate that the gate—if gate it truly is—connects to the Far Realm.

Gloomport

The gate-town of Gloomport, located on the shore of the Glistening Sea in the natural world, provides one of the most stable and safest paths into the Shadowfell. Gloomport itself is a cold and dismal place, where a biting rain whips in from the sea on most days, and a dark, storm-filled cloud hangs over it even when the wind is calm and the rain isn't falling. To reach the Shadowfell, travelers board a ship and sail to the west—into the darker, stormier part of the sea. Eventually, the ship crosses over and the city of Gloomwrought appears on the horizon. Rising from the barren shore, the City of Midnight is a common destination for merchants and travelers of the planes.

Gleaming

The town of Gleaming, east of Nentir Vale, has a secret. The goods that brings merchants and travelers from far and wide come through a hidden gate that connects the town with the Astral Sea. The mayor of Gleaming, Berenda Farwalker, a halfling of great wisdom and charisma, guards the secret of the gate—as have her father, grandmother, and great-grandfather before her. The place radiates with the presence of the Astral Sea, and divine power flows through the region around the town. The gate leads to a neutral trading port in the Astral Sea, and through the gate the leaders of both sides conduct a brisk and secret exchange of goods from their respective worlds. For the right price, and if the need is great enough, Berenda will allow travelers to access the gate. She must know their business in the Astral Sea, however, and she must trust them implicitly before she grants them use of the gate.

A Conspiracy of Doors

A Conspiracy of Doors is a Dungeons & Dragons adventure for five player characters of 11th level. It can serve as an introduction to Sigil, the City of Doors, as well as a group of adventurers' first taste of action at the paragon tier.

Introduction

The Festival of Doors, one of the most beloved and profitable holidays celebrated in Sigil, fast approaches. Estavan, the Planar Trade Consortium's representative in Sigil, is worried about some recent events. Individually, none of these events seems to be a cause for concern. However, Estavan has spotted a pattern that has put him on edge. He believes that a secret attack has been launched against the Consortium, an attack associated with the upcoming holiday. Now Estavan needs to find adventurers to uncover the truth behind these attacks and reveal the conspiracy for all to see.

Background

Once a deeply spiritual event, the Festival of Doors has become little more than an excuse to have a raucous celebration. No one puts more into the Festival of Doors than Sigil's elite upper class, and no one profits more from the needs of expensive celebrations than the merchants. The Planar Trade Consortium, in particular, has a monopoly on providing the most sought-after goods for the festival feasts, including the rare cavefire wine that has become essential to the celebration.

In the weeks leading up to the Festival of Doors, a number of seemingly unrelated setbacks have troubled the Consortium. Agents have disappeared. Trade caravans have been attacked. Cargo has been hijacked. Warehouses have been robbed and even set afire. Estavan, merchant lord of the Consortium, usually chalks up such happenings as part of the cost of doing business. However, as the Festival of Doors approaches, he has been disturbed by a gnawing intuition that he can't silence: The Consortium is under attack.

The three most recent disasters to befall the Consortium have resulted in a break in certain key supply lines that provide needed foodstuffs to Sigil. The City of Doors doesn't produce any of its own food; all the food necessary to feed the city must come from someplace else. And the only way the food makes the trip is in caravans such as those used by the Consortium, caravans that travel from distant planes through portals and gate-towns to eventually reach Sigil. Without a constant influx of supplies, Sigil would quickly run out of food and drink. Once this occurs, riots and looting would break out, the Lady of Pain would take notice, and the most apparent perpetrators of the trouble would be exiled to the Mazes—or worse.

Such a fate could be in Estavan's future unless he takes action now. The oni mage knows that punishment directed at him and the Consortium won't actually solve the coming crisis. The riots will continue, food and drink will grow more scarce, and people will begin either dying or fleeing the city in droves.

Estavan has come to the conclusion that these attacks are coordinated and part of a larger plan to disrupt and eventually destroy the City of Doors. If that plan is allowed to reach fruition, Estavan believes that all of existence will be in danger. The oni mage follows the school of thought that places Sigil as the linchpin of all existence. Without the linchpin, the theory goes, the planes themselves will spread farther apart. If the chaos that follows is slow and steady, the multiverse will slowly fade away. If it's more violent, the planes will fly apart in an immediate explosion of worlds-shattering destruction. Or so Estavan believes.

Adventure Synopsis

The adventure begins in a town or city in the natural world, wherever the adventurers kick back to relax between missions. An agent of the Planar Trade Consortium seeks them out and invites them to meet with her "high-up," the oni mage Estavan. In a secret meeting, far from the prying eyes of his unknown enemies, Estavan strikes a deal with the adventurers to reopen the supply lines and discover who is behind the attacks on the Consortium.

In the opening scene, Estavan reveals the truth about the multiverse to the adventures, confirming rumors they might have heard about Sigil or perhaps being the first to introduce them to the larger existence beyond the natural world. He wants them to acquire a gate key from a trusted source, an ancient wizard and reagent seller who goes by the name of Fesdin Crale. The gate key is supposed to take the adventurers to Sigil so that they can begin their investigation. However, Fesdin—who is actually a shape-changing lamia named Arthani—provides a gate key that instead transports the Consortium agents into a trap.

After defeating the threat, the adventurers track the lamia to the gate-town of Tradegate. They arrive in time to try to prevent Arthani from destroying the town's gate.

The next clue leads the adventurers to the Night Market in the City of Doors. Questioning the locals leads to an attack by the lamia's associates, which sends the characters to the source of the missing cavefire wine. The final encounter, in a warehouse in Sigil, pits the adventurers against the demon-summoner who is behind the current conspiracy.

Starting the Adventure

At the first break between missions in your ongoing campaign, when the adventurers are back in a town or city to buy supplies and recuperate, they are approached by a female tiefling. Read:

A young female tiefling dressed in traveling leathers and still covered in the dust of the road strides confidently toward you, a friendly smile playing across her lips. "Are you the cutters that put Kalaran in the dead book?" (Rephrase this question to reflect whatever key event has just happened in your campaign.)

Her manner of speaking should make it evident to the characters that this tiefling isn't a local. If they acknowledge that they are the people she's looking for, she plops down in the nearest chair and introduces herself.

"I'm Nera, and I represent the Planar Trade Consortium. My high-up, the exquisite Estavan, wants to offer you a job. The dark of it is, he can't just stroll into this fine establishment, since the locals aren't as tolerant as those of us from the City of Doors. He's waiting for you in the upstairs room at the end of the hall. Don't worry. For an oni mage, Estavan's pretty civilized. And he always offers the best jink. You know, coin? Gold? Platinum? Jink! Tell him Nera sent you."

She drops a small sack containing 10 pp (1,000 gp). "There's more where that came from, if Estavan thinks you can handle the job," Nera says as she rises and offers her farewell.

Meeting Estavan

If the adventurers take the payment and follow Nera's directions, they find a suite on the upper floor of the best inn in town. They can knock or simply walk in, and when they do, they get their first view of Estavan. Read:

The spacious room features a small table and enough chairs for all of you. Seated behind the table, sipping from a fragile cup, is a large ogrelike creature with powdered, pale blue skin, dressed in an immaculate red kimono. "Welcome, friends," he says in a booming voice. "I am Estavan, and I assure you that I mean you no harm. In fact, I wish to hire you for a very important job. Would any of you care for some Arborean spice tea?"

For an oni mage, Estavan is exceedingly polite and friendly. He dresses well, and great care seems to have gone into every aspect of his appearance. A flashy necklace hangs in his open collar for all to see, his nails are filed neatly, and his horns are polished to a shine. Despite this outward appearance of civility and manners, Estavan can be as manipulative and merciless as he is ostentatious. For the purposes of this meeting, Estavan stays patient and interested in the adventurers for as long as it takes to win them over. His patience isn't unlimited, however, and he will defend himself if the adventurers attack.

Hopefully, it won't come to that, and Estavan does everything he can to make the adventurers feel comfortable with the arrangement. Read:

"The chant—excuse me—the situation is that the organization that I represent buys and sells goods throughout the planes of existence. You do realize that there is more to existence than just this tiny ball of dirt and water, don't you? The Planar Trade Consortium has interests in it all."

As the conversation unfolds, Estavan provides the following information:

Sigil: Sigil, the City of Doors, stands at the center of the multiverse, and all planes and worlds connect to it through its many portals.

Planar Trade Consortium: This conglomerate of trading concerns operates trading posts, markets, and caravans throughout the known planes of existence. Two of its most important centers of operation are the town of Tradegate in the natural world and Sigil. Recently, the Consortium has been the target of raids and other attacks that Estavan believes are the precursor to a more significant—and dangerous—event. Agents have disappeared, caravans have been hijacked, and supply lines have been cut off. These are harbingers, the oni mage believes, of a much larger plan to isolate Sigil. "If such a thing were to happen," Estavan insists, "the multiverse will shudder and perhaps begin to unravel."

Festival of Doors: The upcoming holiday known as the Festival of Doors, celebrated every year in Sigil, seems to be the focus of these attacks. Goods associated with the celebration are among those affected by the supply disruptions. Ice apples from the Elemental Chaos, glitterbeasts from the Feywild, and cavefire wine from the Shadowfell, among other traditional festival fare, have stopped flowing into the City of Doors. "The key to discovering who is behind this is to track the wine to its source," Estavan declares.

What do you want us to do? Investigate the attacks, follow the supply lines back to their sources, discover who is behind these attacks, and put a stop to it before the Festival of Doors starts in three days.

Why us? Estavan's usual agents are known to be operatives of the Consortium, and thus the oni mage believes that they are all being watched. "I need someone without a clear connection to my organization," he explains, "but someone who is also capable of getting this job done."

What's in it for us? "You have received an opening stipend. Complete the task, and you will also get this." Estavan places an astral diamond (worth 10,000 gp) on the table.

ENCOUNTER D1: DOORWAY TO DANGER

Encounter Level 11 (3,200 XP)

Setup

1 battle wight commander (C)
2 battle wights (B)
1 wight life-eater (W)
1 ghost spider (S)

After Estavan gets the adventurers to agree to aid the Planar Trade Consortium, he sends them to find a trusted associate named Fesdin Crale. Read:

"Crale is a wizard and sage, a seller of things arcane and mysterious," Estavan explains. "Tell him that I have sent you, and he should be willing to sell you a gate key and the location of a portal to Sigil. That's where you should start your investigation, in the City of Doors. Good luck, my agents. Know that the fate of the multiverse might well rest in your hands."

If the PCs ask, Estavan says he doesn't have a gate key to give them and would prefer they seek out the appropriate local resources to get what they need. He directs the adventurers to an out-of-the-way shop called Crale's Arcane Wonders, in a run-down part of town. Here, the adventurers meet up with the wizard and sage known as Fesdin Crale. Read:

The dark little shop is crammed full of jars and bottles, scrolls and books, and all manner of strange and exotic items. Most of it appears to be junk, but when it comes to arcane matters, who can say for sure? The proprietor you see before you is an older human male who identifies himself as Fesdin Crale. "Why do you come to this place?" he asks, examining each of you in turn with his steely gaze.

Crale warms up to the adventurers after they mention that Estavan has sent them. He listens to their request, then nods and begins to rummage around the crowded shop. After a few moments, the wizard produces a small, rectangular plank made of smooth stone, about the size of a domino. Carved into one side of the plank is the stylized image of an arched doorway. He also produces a map showing the location of a narrow alley on the other side of town.

"A gate key to Sigil, as well as the location of the portal this gate key activates," Crale says. "I can let you have both for the mere cost of 100 gold."

If the adventurers pay, Crale thanks them and asks them to give his regards to Estavan. If they try to haggle, one of the adventurers can make a Diplomacy check to reduce the price. A result of 21 or higher gets Crale to accept 75 gp instead, "as a favor to my old friend Estavan."

Through the Portal

When the adventurers step through the portal while carrying the gate key, they are transported to a new location. However, it isn't their expected destination.

As the adventurers step into the portal, read:
You find yourself in a dark, close space. The smell of dirt, stone, and stale air surround you, and silence fills the dark.

The gate key has sent the adventurers to a secret crypt somewhere in a distant corner of the natural world. The key can return the adventurers, but it won't function again until an hour passes. (A PC can determine this information with a DC 16 Arcana check.)

Fesdin Crale (actually the lamia Arthani) has sent the adventurers into this trap.

As soon as the adventurers can see, read:
You find yourselves in a sealed crypt. Pillars hold up the massive stone ceiling, and thick webs fill parts of the chamber. Four coffins stand against the wall on the far side of the room.

Tactics

The wights work together to destroy the living beings that have entered their tomb. The battle wights move to engage the adventurers in the center of the chamber, while the wight life-eater waits until they have moved past its hiding place so that it can spring out from behind them. It delays, if necessary, so that it can act later in the round.

Ghost Spider (S) Level 11 Elite Lurker
Large shadow beast (spider) XP 1,200

Initiative +9 Senses Perception +7; tremorsense 10
HP 129; Bloodied 64
AC 25; Fortitude 25, Reflex 24, Will 22
Resist insubstantial
Saving Throws +2
Speed 6, climb 6 (spider climb), phasing
Action Points 1

⊕ Ghost Claw (standard; at-will) ✦ Necrotic
+14 vs. Reflex; 1d8 + 5 damage, and the target takes ongoing 5 necrotic damage and is weakened (save ends both).

⸸ Phasing Attack (standard; at-will)
The ghost spider makes two ghost claw attacks. The ghost spider can shift 6 squares between the attacks.

⸸ Phasing Web (move; recharge ⚅ ⚅ ⚅)
The ghost spider shifts 6 squares, phasing through enemies. It attacks each enemy it phases through; +14 vs. Fortitude; target is immobilized (save ends).

Alignment Unaligned Languages –
Skills Athletics +15, Stealth +14
Str 20 (+10) Dex 18 (+9) Wis 15 (+7)
Con 20 (+10) Int 1 (+0) Cha 10 (+5)

Wight Life-Eater (W) Level 10 Skirmisher
Medium natural humanoid (undead) XP 500

Initiative +9 Senses Perception +3; darkvision
HP 104; Bloodied 52
AC 24; Fortitude 22, Reflex 21, Will 21
Immune disease, poison; Resist 10 necrotic; Vulnerable 5 radiant
Speed 7

⊕ Claw (standard; at-will) ✦ Necrotic
+15 vs. AC; 2d6 + 5 necrotic damage, the target loses a healing surge, and the wight shifts 3 squares.

Alignment Evil Languages Common
Skills Stealth +13
Str 18 (+9) Dex 16 (+8) Wis 6 (+3)
Con 16 (+8) Int 10 (+5) Cha 17 (+8)

The ghost spider phases into and out of the tomb to hunt, using part of the area as a lair. When living creatures enter the tomb, it attacks and inadvertently helps the wights. Although the wights seek to end humanoid life, they have no interest in the fluids and flesh that the ghost spider feasts upon.

If the ghost spider loses more than three-quarters of its hit points, it seeks to phase out of the tomb and escape.

The wights fight until they are destroyed.

Development

The body in the northern side chamber is the real Fesdin Crale. He has obviously been drained of life by the wights. A character who makes a DC 16 Perception check finds a copper coin in his pocket. One side shows the icon of the Planar Trade Consortium (a long caravan moving through a portal); the other is engraved with the words "Crale's Arcane Wonders."

A pouch on Crale's belt holds a small journal in which the sage has kept a record of customers and transactions as well as other notes. The most recent entries seem to be tracking a series of disturbances related to portals that lead to Sigil. The final entry reads as follows:

"A creature called Arthani seems to be the common factor, though she never appears in the same shape twice. Estavan must be warned that Tradegate is the next target!"

Battle Wight Commander (C) Level 12 Soldier (Leader)
Medium natural humanoid (undead) XP 700

Initiative +12 Senses Perception +12; darkvision
HP 106; Bloodied 53
AC 28; Fortitude 26, Reflex 23, Will 26
Immune disease, poison; Resist 10 necrotic; Vulnerable 5 radiant
Speed 5

⊕ Souldraining Longsword (standard; at-will) ✦ Necrotic, Weapon
+18 vs. AC; 1d8 + 7 necrotic damage, and the target loses a healing surge and is immobilized and weakened (save ends both).

↷ Soul Harvest (standard; recharge ⚅ ⚅ ⚅) ✦ Healing, Necrotic
Ranged 5; affects an immobilized target only; +15 vs. Fortitude; 2d8 + 7 necrotic damage, and the battle wight commander and all undead allies within 2 squares of it regain 10 hit points.

Alignment Evil Languages Common
Skills Intimidate +18
Str 24 (+13) Dex 19 (+10) Wis 14 (+7)
Con 22 (+12) Int 15 (+7) Cha 24 (+13)
Equipment plate armor, heavy shield, longsword

2 Battle Wights (B) Level 9 Soldier
Medium natural humanoid (undead) XP 400 each

Initiative +7 Senses Perception +3; darkvision
HP 98; Bloodied 49
AC 25; Fortitude 22, Reflex 18, Will 22
Immune disease, poison; Resist 10 necrotic; Vulnerable 5 radiant
Speed 5

⊕ Souldraining Longsword (standard; at-will) ✦ Necrotic, Weapon
+15 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 necrotic damage, and the target loses a healing surge and is immobilized (save ends).

↷ Soul Reaping (standard; recharge ⚅ ⚅) ✦ Healing, Necrotic
Ranged 5; affects an immobilized target only; +12 vs. Fortitude; 2d8 + 5 necrotic damage, and the battle wight regains 10 hit points.

Alignment Evil Languages Common
Skills Intimidate +14
Str 20 (+9) Dex 13 (+5) Wis 9 (+3)
Con 18 (+8) Int 12 (+5) Cha 20 (+9)
Equipment plate armor, heavy shield, longsword

Features of the Area

Illumination: Darkness.

Body: The dead body of the real Fesdin Crale. See "Development" for details.

Cracked Ground: Any creature that enters a square of cracked ground stops moving and falls prone.

Fountain: The fountain is actually a portal. A gate key is required to operate the portal.

Webs: Any creature that enters a square of webs stops moving and is immobilized (save ends).

Coffins: The coffins are used by the wights. The battle wight commander's coffin contains a level 12 magic item.

ENCOUNTER D2: TRADEGATE

Encounter Level 13 (4,300 XP)

Setup

1 lamia devourer (L)
2 mezzodemons (M)
6 cyclops guards (C)

If the adventurers take the coin they found on the dead merchant back to the shop, they find that the pretender who sent them into the trap has vacated the premises. In the back room, a door opens onto a small, empty space. Anyone carrying the coin who opens the door activates the portal to Tradegate.

If the characters don't have the wizard's coin or don't open the door in the back room, some other method of getting to Tradegate might be required. Estavan has already left the town, but Nera is still hanging out at the tavern, enjoying a short break from her regular duties for the Consortium. She can inform the adventurers about the portal to Tradegate in Crale's shop and give them a key to use it. If the PCs ask about a way to get to Sigil, she says, "There's a portal to Sigil in Tradegate, of course."

Lamia Devourer (L) Level 13 Elite Controller
Medium fey magical beast (shapechanger) XP 1,600

Initiative +8 Senses Perception +13
Swarm's Embrace aura 1; an enemy that starts its turn in the aura takes 10 damage.
HP 260; Bloodied 130
AC 27; Fortitude 25, Reflex 24, Will 26
Resist half damage from melee and ranged attacks; Vulnerable 10 against close and area attacks.
Saving Throws +2
Speed 6, climb 6
Action Points 1

⊕ Cursed Touch (standard; at-will)
+17 vs. Fortitude; 1d10 + 6 damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).

✧ Devouring Swarm (standard; at-will)
Close blast 5; targets enemies only; +15 vs. Fortitude; 3d6 + 4 damage.

✧ Swarm Burst (standard; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞)
Close burst 5; targets enemies only; +15 vs. Will; the target is pushed 3 squares and immobilized (save ends).

Change Shape (minor; at-will) ✦ Polymorph
A lamia can alter its physical form to appear as an attractive Medium humanoid of any race or gender (see "Change Shape," Monster Manual 2, page 216).

Squeezing Swarm
By altering its shape, a lamia can squeeze through small openings as if it were a Tiny creature (see "Squeeze," Player's Handbook, page 292).

Alignment Evil Languages Common, Elven
Skills Arcana +14, Bluff +16, Insight +13
Str 13 (+7) Dex 14 (+8) Wis 14 (+8)
Con 18 (+10) Int 17 (+9) Cha 21 (+11)

Arriving in Tradegate

When the adventurers move through the portal into Tradegate, they discover that something isn't quite right in the usually bustling town. Read:

You step through the broken window of a deserted building into a quiet alley. The alley opens onto a wide street that leads south toward the town square. You notice that not only is the alley unusually quiet, but the entire town seems to be deserted. The only activity you immediately notice is in the town square, where glowing lights and the crackle of strange energy indicate that something is happening near the arched gate in the center of the square.

Perception Check
DC 18 You spot large humanoids moving around the arched gate, each silhouetted against the glowing lights.
DC 23 People throughout the town have slumped over where they were standing or in the middle of some activity, and now they lay here and there, apparently fast asleep.

6 Cyclops Guards (C) Level 14 Minion
Large fey humanoid XP 250 each

Initiative +10 Senses Perception +15; truesight 6
HP 1; a missed attack never damages a minion.
AC 27; Fortitude 26, Reflex 23, Will 23
Speed 6

⊕ Battleaxe (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; +17 vs. AC; 7 damage.

↯ Evil Eye (immediate reaction, when a melee attack misses the cyclops guard; at-will)
The cyclops guard makes a melee basic attack against the attacker.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Elven
Str 22 (+13) Dex 16 (+10) Wis 17 (+10)
Con 20 (+12) Int 11 (+7) Cha 11 (+7)
Equipment hide armor, heavy shield, battleaxe

2 Mezzodemons (M) Level 11 Soldier
Medium elemental humanoid (demon) XP 600 each

Initiative +9 Senses Perception +13; darkvision
HP 113; Bloodied 56
AC 27; Fortitude 25, Reflex 22, Will 23
Resist 20 poison, 10 variable (2/encounter)
Speed 6

⊕ Trident (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; +18 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage.

↯ Skewering Tines (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Requires trident; reach 2; +18 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage, ongoing 5 damage, and the target is restrained (save ends both). While the target is restrained, the mezzodemon can't make trident attacks.

✧ Poison Breath (standard; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞) ✦ Poison
Close blast 3; targets enemies; +16 vs. Fortitude; 2d6 + 3 poison damage, and ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends).

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Abyssal
Skills Intimidate +11
Str 20 (+10) Dex 15 (+7) Wis 16 (+8)
Con 17 (+8) Int 10 (+5) Cha 13 (+6)
Equipment trident

The lamia Arthani, who impersonated Fesdin Crale to send the adventurers into the crypt ambush, has performed a ritual to put the residents of Tradegate into a deep slumber. When the adventurers arrive, Arthani is in the process of completing a ritual to destroy the gate to Sigil.

When the adventurers approach the town square, read:

The arched gate is clearly the centerpiece of the town square. The icon of the Planar Trade Consortium is carved into the arch's keystone, and images of all kinds of doors decorate the rest of the ancient stone. Six glowing rods, each about 5 feet tall, jut from the ground in a pattern around the square. A one-eyed giant stands guard at each rod, and you also spot two insectlike demons wielding tridents hovering protectively near a female eladrin in a red gown. She's reading from a scroll as you approach.

Tactics

The lamia devourer is on the verge of completing her ritual that will destroy the gate to Sigil. Unless she is in great danger, she uses a minor action each turn to make a DC 20 Arcana check and advance the ritual. She needs to achieve six successful checks before getting three failures. She uses swarm burst to clear enemies away from her, but prefers to use devouring swarm from a distance. See "The Ritual" for more details. If the ritual is disrupted and if six or more of the other monsters are defeated, Arthani flees through the gate to Sigil (she has a key).

The mezzodemons remain near Arthani to protect her. They try to use their poison breath attacks on restrained foes. They fight to the death.

The cyclops guards seek to engage the adventurers on the road, as they are reaching the square. If any of the PCs attempt to disturb the glowing rods, the guards move to attack them. They fight to the death.

The Ritual

Each round that Arthani achieves a success during the performance of the ritual, roll a d6. The result indicates which of the rods (numbered 1–6 on the map) draws energy from the gate. That rod emits energy in a close burst 2 that deals 5 damage to any of the lamia's enemies within the burst.

A character adjacent to one of the rods can remove it from the ground with a DC 18 Thievery check, a DC 23 Arcana check, or a DC 20 Strength check. A failed check deals 10 damage, pushes the character 2 squares, and knocks him prone.

If Arthani succeeds at the ritual, it doesn't destroy the gate as she had hoped, but it does lock it so that it no longer functions. Estavan will need to send powerful spellcasters at a later time to reverse the ritual and reestablish the portal to Sigil.

If all of the rods are removed, or if Arthani gets three failures, or if the adventurers otherwise defeat the lamia, the ritual fails.

Development

If Arthani escapes through the gate, the adventurers must find Master Trader Duncam, wait for the slumber ritual to wear off in an hour, and then get a gate key from him so they can follow the lamia to Sigil. This gate key is a phrase, "the center of all things."

If Arthani is defeated, she collapses into a pile of dead and dying beetles. In the belt pouch that remains, the adventurers find three 1,000 gp gems and a flier for The House of Song, a festhall in the infamous Gatehouse Night Market in the Hive. One of the mezzodemons carries the same flier, though his has the name "Tarvas" scrawled upon it.

Features of the Area

Illumination: Bright light.

Arch: This stone arch occupies a prominent place in the town square. With the proper gate key, it opens a portal to Sigil.

Glowing Rods: These 5-foot-tall metal rods are inscribed with runes. They jut from the ground and glow with arcane brilliance. See "The Ritual" for additional details.

Wagons: The wagons are piled high with crates and barrels bound for Sigil, including such goods as ice apples, eladrin chocolate, and dwarven black ale.

ENCOUNTER D3: THE NIGHT MARKET

Encounter Level 13 (4,100 XP)

Setup

Tarvas Demoncaller (T)
2 arctide runespiral demons (A)
2 bloodcry barlguras (B)
2 ogre bludgeoneers (O)

The adventurers follow Arthani or the clues the lamia left behind to Sigil. They arrive during the day, so they have time to do a little research or investigation before the Night Market opens.

Exploring Sigil

The first thing the adventurers notice upon stepping through the portal is that Sigil is much more cosmopolitan and diverse than any other town or city they might have visited before. Not only do they see that all the usual races are represented, they also run into demons, devils, monstrous races, and creatures they have never encountered before. None of them act overtly hostile, but most carry themselves with confidence and bravado.

The second thing that the adventurers notice is that the horizon, where it can be seen through the crowds and the close-stacked buildings, curves up instead of down. A soft but persistent rain falls from above, but every so often the mist lifts enough to reveal a glimpse of the city hanging upside down above them.

As the adventurers explore the city, at some point call for a Perception check.

Perception Check
DC 23 You notice a figure, bundled in a hooded cloak to stave off the rain, following you at a discreet distance.

This agent of Tarvas Demoncaller (see "The Night Market," below, disappears into the crowd if the adventurers try to approach him.

Research

Visiting various locations around the city and asking the right questions accomplishes two things: It provides the adventurers with information, and it gets them noticed by all the wrong people. Here are some things the adventurers can learn around the city:

Arcana DC 25: Arthani had been visiting Sigil for the last few weeks, purchasing rituals and ancient spellbooks of all descriptions.

Diplomacy DC 15: The Festival of Doors celebration is coming up, but most citizens appear to be apprehensive about the holiday for some reason that no one is willing to talk about.

Insight DC 18: The city seems to be in a state of heightened tension, though you can't figure out what is causing this condition through observation.

Streetwise DC 18: Food, drink, and other essentials have been becoming increasingly more expensive and harder to come by. Small riots have broken out at a few market locations, and rumors abound that the citizens are becoming more restless and reckless in light of these unusual shortages.

Streetwise DC 23: The best source for acquiring cavefire wine is a trader named Tos, who sets up a stand in the Night Market when she's in Sigil.

The Night Market

When the adventurers head for the Gatehouse Night Market, whether to locate The House of Song or to look for the trader named Tos, they run into Tarvas Demoncaller and a few of his associates. If Arthani the lamia escaped after Encounter D2, she will also be on hand for this battle. Adjust the XP accordingly.

Tarvas Demoncaller is a wizard committed to spreading chaos and destruction. As a means to this end, he leads an effort to impede the flow of necessary supplies to Sigil's population. He won't fight in this encounter, however, so his statistics are provided in a later encounter.

Tactics

Thanks to his agents spread out around the city, Tarvas has been keeping a watch on the adventurers, and he is alerted when they approach the Night Market from the street to the northeast. He directs his demons and hired thugs to attack the PCs, sticking around long enough to be noticed by them and to trade a jibe or two before disappearing into the night.

If the lamia escaped in the previous encounter, she starts out beside Tarvas and takes command of the situation after the wizard departs. This time, she battles to the death.

The barlguras wade in to make double attacks each round, each demon concentrating on a single foe. They move to stay close enough to as many enemies and allies as possible to take full advantage of bloodcry when they become bloodied the first time.

The ogres are hired thugs that attempt to set up flanks with the demons.

Development

Tarvas doesn't stick around for this battle. He has places to be and things to do in order to cause the chaos he hopes to engender by the time the Festival of Doors begins. He hopes that his underlings can stop the adventurers.

After the battle ends, the adventurers can ask around and locate the trader named Tos. With a bit of coaxing, and maybe a bit of gold to loosen her tongue (say, 500 gp), she'll reveal that the source of the cavefire wine she sells to the Consortium is a cave in a remote part of the Shadowfell. The adventurers must convince Tos that they plan to reopen the trade corridors before she tells them how to get to the cave, providing them with the location of an appropriate portal and a key.

The House of Song festhall is located in the building that Tarvas stood atop at the beginning of the battle. Inside, the adventurers discover that a back room in the festhall has been converted into a summoner's laboratory, complete with magic circles and other paraphernalia. In his haste, Tarvas leaves behind a level 13 magic item and notes concerning a demon summoning ritual. A DC 25 Arcana check reveals that it was used to send demons to Tos's cave.

Features of the Area

Illumination: Dim light.

Buildings: The flat-topped roofs are 10 feet above the street, while the gabled roofs are 20 feet high. A DC 15 Athletics check is needed to climb the walls.

Razorvine: These sharp patches deal 20 damage to any creature that enters a square occupied by the plant or starts its turn in one.

Tables and Tents: These portable shops pop up when night falls. When the battle begins, the merchants scatter. Tables are difficult terrain, while tents are blocking terrain.

ENCOUNTER D4: THE DEMON CAVES

Encounter Level 11 (3,200 XP)

Setup

1 pod demon (D)
4 podspawn (P)
Falling rocks hazard

When the adventurers approach Tos's cave in the Shadowfell, they are greeted by a male who bears a striking resemblance to the independent merchant. It's her brother, Thom, who handles the production of cavefire wine. He appears to be greatly agitated when the adventurers arrive. He asks who they are and why they are here. If the adventurers tell Thom that Tos sent them, he immediately relaxes and relates some important information. Read:

"Tos told you that these caves are the source of our cavefire wine? Well, that source isn't doing so good right about now," he informs you. "The cavefire mushrooms we crush and ferment to make the wine appear to be dying, and I think I know what's killing them. There's a terrible monster in the caves, and I'm not able to chase it away. Perhaps you can take care of this for us."

Questioning Thom

Here are some questions the adventurers might ask, and Thom's responses to them.

What's a cavefire mushroom? "It's a rare fungus that grows within this network of caves. We've learned how to turn these mushrooms into cavefire wine. The taste is warm and soothing, and it has become a central element of Sigil's Festival of Doors."

Why would someone want to keep you from selling the wine? "Cavefire wine's purpose ranges from spiritual to celebratory, but it has become intertwined with the celebration of the Festival of Doors. Without it, many people in Sigil will believe that the festival has been ruined and that bad luck and ill fortune will follow them throughout the coming year."

What kind of monster is in the cave? "It's a large mass of disgusting goo that creates smaller versions of itself. It told me to get out of the cave when it arrived, and I haven't gone back in since."

Entering the Cave

After the adventurers enter the cave, it takes them a few minutes to follow the winding passages toward the chamber where the cavefire mushrooms grow. The path to the main chamber is marked with arrows, so it's easy to find. The PCs approach the main chamber (depicted on the map) from the west.

When the adventurers enter the chamber, read:
The shadowy cave ahead is warm and moist. A central column divides the chamber. Water drips down the column to form a pool at its base. Deeper in the chamber, thick patches of mushrooms glow with a discernible light, though the intensity seems to drop noticeably as you approach.

Perception Check
DC 16 A body floats, face down, in the pool of water.
DC 21 A telltale amount of dust and pebbles sprinkles down from cracks in the cave's ceiling.
DC 23 You notice faint sketches scrawled on the walls of the cave's central column of rock. The sketches seem to form some kind of symbols, but you have a hard time staring at them for too long.

Falling Rocks — Level 13 Lurker
Hazard — XP 800

The caves rumble and shake, and suddenly rocks rain down from the ceiling above.

Hazard: A shower of rocks comes down in certain parts of the cave, as shown on the map.

Perception
- ✦ DC 18: A telltale amount of dust and pebbles sprinkles down from cracks in the cave's ceiling.
- ✦ DC 23: You notice faint sketches scrawled on the walls of the cave's central column of rock. The sketches seem to form some kind of symbols, but you have a hard time staring at them for too long.

Additional Skill: Dungeoneering
- ✦ DC 18: You recognize the unstable nature of the cracked and pitted ceiling, and you feel a slight shaking in the ground beneath your feet.

Initiative +2

Attack
Standard Action Area special
Target: Each creature in area
Attack: +14 vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d10 + 6 damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).
Special: Each round, on the hazard's initiative count, roll a d6 to determine which zone or zones the rocks fall in during that round. The rocks attack each creature in each affected zone.

Countermeasures
- ✦ If a character spots the symbols on the central column, he or she can attempt a skill challenge to identify them and break the enchantment that has instigated this hazard.

  Each turn, if a character is adjacent to a symbol scrawled on the wall, that character can make a DC 18 Thievery check, a DC 18 Arcana check, or a DC 23 Religion check to disrupt the magic imbued within the symbol. A failure on any check causes the hazard to immediately attack, as described above.

  If the characters achieve 4 successes before they get 3 failures, the cave stops rumbling and the hazard no longer functions.

  If the characters fail the skill challenge, the hazard remains and the damage increases to 2d10 + 6. After an hour, the characters can attempt to disrupt the magical hazard again.

Tactics

The hazard drops rocks each round on its turn. The adventurers can eliminate this hazard by succeeding on a skill challenge. Note that the falling rocks attack all creatures in the affected zone, including the pod demon and its spawn.

As soon as the pod demon realizes that intruders have entered the chamber, it orders its minions to engage them and set up flanking situations for it to take advantage of. Then it moves in, takes advantage of combat advantage by employing its slam attack, and then spends a minor action to use detonate minion. It retreats after that to use its ranged attacks. Every round at the start of its turn, it spawns one podspawn within 2 squares of its position. When it has two or fewer minions remaining, it uses generate podspawn to create more. The pod demon is a demented and twisted creature that fights to the death.

Development

The presence of the demon causes the cavefire mushrooms to grow sick and die. As soon as the PCs defeat the demon, the mushrooms begin to improve.

The body belongs to the cultist who accompanied the demon and set up the falling rocks hazard. After he completed his ritual, the pod demon killed him.

A DC 16 Perception check allows the adventurers to discover 500 gp and a note that shows the location of a Planar Trade Consortium warehouse in Sigil's Market Ward.

Features of the Area

Illumination: Dim light. The gloom of the Shadowfell mutes light sources used in this area, reducing the radius illuminated by 50 percent. For example, a torch illuminates 2 squares instead of 5. Magical light sources are unaffected.

Mushroom Patch: These patches of faintly glowing mushrooms are difficult terrain.

Pool: The pool of water is 3 feet deep.

ENCOUNTER D5: THE WAREHOUSE

Encounter Level 15 (6,300 XP)

Setup

Tarvas Demoncaller (T)
1 needle demon (N)
2 vrock swordwings (V)
2 immolith deathragers (D)

The adventurers return to Sigil on the day of the Festival of Doors. The celebration is set to kick off at nightfall, in just a few hours, but a grand soiree seems to be the furthest thing from the minds of the citizens. Read:

The streets of Sigil appear to be on the verge of chaos and violence. Angry protestors fill the Market Ward, exchanging nasty words with merchants and each other as tempers grow exceedingly thin. More dabus than usual float in plain view, and even these mysterious creatures seem to be nervous and on edge. "Where's our cavefire wine?" one protestor calls out. Another shouts, "I heard that all shipments have stopped. How will we survive without food and water?" A rock occasionally sails out of the crowd to narrowly miss a merchant's head.

In Sigil

Here are some things the adventurers might want to do upon returning to the City of Doors.

Seek Out Estavan: The adventurers can find Estavan in his office in the Clerk's Ward. He appears more agitated than when last they met, and he leaps up and starts asking questions as soon as they enter the office. He wants to know what they've found out, because he feels more and more certain that something bad is about to happen. If they didn't find the clue about the warehouse, Estavan tells them that he has been out of contact with the manager of the place and he is overdue for a report from that location. He asks them to go check it out for him while he explores a few last leads. If they did find the clue and mention it, Estavan asks them to go ahead and see what's going on there. "Hurry," he implores them. " I believe that Sigil and the multiverse have no time remaining for us to waste."

Look for Tarvas Demoncaller: The adventurers might decide to go back to The House of Song and seek out Tarvas. A DC 23 Streetwise check points the adventurers toward a warehouse in the Market Ward. "Strange things have been happening all over the city," one local tells them, "but the weirdness appears to be centered on that building."

The Warehouse

This large building is one of many used by the Planar Trade Consortium to store goods before they are loaded on caravans or distributed to the markets in Sigil. This particular location has been commandeered by Tarvas Demoncaller, chosen because he seeks revenge against the Planar Trade Consortium for some real or imagined slight. He hopes that by disrupting trade into Sigil, he can cast doubt upon the Consortium's ability to provide for the city. Cutting off the flow of goods, he hopes, will lead to a level of panic and rioting that would be enough to send the Lady of Pain on a rampage and result in the banishment or even the destruction of the Consortium.

This encounter is continued from the previous page.

Exploring the outside of the warehouse yields few clues. The place's only windows are located high on the walls, near the 30-foot roof line. Flashes of light appear at irregular intervals, briefly illuminating the dirt-caked windows. A massive cargo door at the front of the building is locked from the inside. A normal door, situated in the alley on the eastern side of the building, is also locked. It can be opened with a DC 25 Thievery check. The encounter assumes that the adventurers enter the warehouse through this door.

When the adventurers enter the warehouse, read:

Towering containers fill large portions of the massive interior. Much of the place sits in darkness, though a pool of dim light that occasionally flashes into brightness occupies a section near the center of the building. As you draw closer, you can see that the contents of some of the containers have been spilled across open sections of floor. A glowing circle inscribed on the floor seems to be the source of the dim light, and you hear a voice chanting in a strange language somewhere among the crates and barrels ahead of you.

Tactics

Tarvas Demoncaller is in the midst of a ritual designed to alter and corrupt the goods that come through portals to Sigil. He chants in Abyssal, calling on the power of demons to aid him in his effort to foment chaos.

Tarvas makes sure to stay within line of sight of his demon servants to allow them to take advantage of his demonic command aura. Each round, he uses a minor action to advance his ritual. Doing this causes him to teleport from one magic circle to another. See "The Ritual" for details. His preferred standard action is to use demonic wrath whenever it is available; otherwise, he falls back on explosive summoning or elemental bolt, as appropriate.

The needle demon waits for the immoliths to wade into battle before joining them. It seeks to use rage of the betrayed to dominate a foe. If that isn't ready, it seeks combat advantage and uses of claws of betrayal.

The immoliths move forward to take up space, slow the intruders down, and pound on them as often as possible.

The vrock swordwings fly from high point to high point, making flyby attacks along the way. If any enemies get close to its perch, a vrock unleashes its frightful screech.

Tarvas and his servants fight to the death.

The Ritual

Each round at the beginning of his turn, Tarvas uses a minor action to continue his ritual. Roll a d20. The result determines which magic circle he teleports to: 1–5 = circle 1; 6–10 = circle 2; 11–15 = circle 3; 16–20 = circle 4. If the result indicates the circle he already occupies, roll again.

When Tarvas teleports, the circle he leaves flashes with abyssal energy. This effect deals 5 damage to any creature that isn't a demon that is standing in or adjacent to the circle. He also attempts a DC 25 Arcana check. If he achieves 10 successes before getting 3 failures, he completes the ritual (see "Ending the Adventure"). If he gets 3 failures, the ritual doesn't work and he flies into a terrible rage. When this happens, he stops hopping from circle to circle and turns his full attention to destroying the meddlesome adventurers.

Features of the Area

Illumination: Dim light around the magic circles inscribed on the floor. Darkness throughout the rest of the building.

Containers: Large containers, crates, and barrels are stacked high throughout the warehouse's massive interior. Some of these stacks are 10 feet high, others 20 feet high. A DC 20 Athletics check is required to climb the stacked containers.

Magic Circles: These glowing runes, inscribed on the floor of the warehouse, are part of the ritual that Tarvas is conducting to temporarily shut down Sigil's portals. See "The Ritual" for details on how Tarvas uses them in this encounter.

Razorvine: These sharp patches deal 20 damage to any creature that enters a square occupied by the plant or starts its turn in one.

Scattered Goods: Items spilled from broken containers form difficult terrain across the floor.

Ending the Adventure

If the adventurers defeat Tarvas and the ritual fails, Sigil slowly goes back to normal. The Festival of Doors comes off without any further complications, except that some of the usual celebratory accompaniments are in short supply. Estavan thanks the adventurers, gives them the astral diamond he promised, and hurries to get his caravans moving again.

If Tarvas completes the ritual, Sigil goes through 24 hours of upheaval as incoming food and beverages are discovered to be rancid and spoiled, and trade goods of every kind are warped and corroded. Riots spread quickly throughout the streets. The Lady of Pain makes a multitude of appearances, and citizens disappear as she works to restore order. Estavan (and Tarvas, if he survived) disappears during this time, and the adventurers receive no additional reward for their efforts. The fate of the Planar Trade Consortium and Estavan are left to the needs of your campaign.

Into the Dark

THE SHADOWFELL is a mysterious realm that mortals fear. It is the world's dark reflection, containing in abundance elements that most people prefer to avoid—death, darkness, and peril. The souls of the dead pass into the Shadowfell on their way to their final rest. Ghosts and other undead linger there, alongside darker creatures. But the plane of shadow also contains power for those willing to seek it and pay the price. Perhaps the call of such power appeals to you.

SHADOW MAGIC

Where the world is life and light, the Shadowfell is death and gloom. Where the world is growth and vitality, the Shadowfell is decay and apathy. The world, being a point of balance, holds these darker elements too. But even the Shadowfell's lighter side is beset with such sinister components.

The darker aspects of existence embodied in the Shadowfell contain fearsome power. Any magic laced with the essence of the plane of shadow already has dread on its side. Shadow magic is the stuff of fell legends, wielded by terrible villains. In stories it is the province of the desperate, the vicious, and the reckless.

Such tales fall from the lips of the ignorant and the superstitious. Shadow magic is no more evil than any other magic. It is attractive because it can be easier to acquire than other forms of power, but it is also demanding.

Divine power requires, at least initially, devotion to an external source. Arcane magic can entail study and hard work. Martial excellence comes through difficult training and mastery of refined techniques. Psionic power hones the mind in a similar way. Shadow magic, unlike all of the foregoing, requires simple surrender.

Soul Sacrifice

Those who wish to connect to the innate power of the Shadowfell must forge a strong bond with the plane. To do so requires nothing less than a shard of the supplicant's soul, given over to the unknown of death. How this gruesome task is accomplished varies among practitioners.

According to Evard's Legendry of Phantoms and Ghosts, "To tap into the powers of shadow, you must find that lightest part of your soul and use the following rites to kill it. Fear not. It is only right. That piece simply goes ahead, in death, to that void of great mystery beyond all mortal cares. (May the rest of your soul never join it.) The power of shadow shall bleed into the hollow, making you anew. A darker you lives on, more potent than before. In a way, you have become my kin. Think not to become my rival."

Wizards such as Evard learn arcane rituals to bond with the Shadowfell in this way. Others make pacts with obscure entities of the Shadowfell or lend

ABOUT THIS BOOK

Player's Option: Heroes of Shadow™ is a DUNGEONS & DRAGONS® game supplement designed for players who are already familiar with the game through books such as Rules Compendium and Heroes of the Fallen Lands™ or Heroes of the Forgotten Kingdoms™. This book presents the rules you need to make characters who use shadow magic. You'll need to refer to Rules Compendium for all the details on how the game works.

This book adds an enormous amount of information to the lore of shadow magic. It supports and is supported by several DUNGEONS & DRAGONS® game supplements and Dragon® magazine articles.

You'll find more about the Shadowfell in The Shadowfell: Gloomwrought and Beyond™ supplement, and more about its creatures in the various Monster Manual® and Monster Vault™ products. Zvomarana, the Raven Queen's most holy temple, is detailed further in the adventure E1: Death's Reach™. The wanderers known as Vistani, who often visit the plane, are detailed in Dragon 380. In addition, some of the Shadowfell's domains of dread are presented in other issues of the magazine.

magical potency to passionate oaths. Those who wield divine power swear service to the darker gods or focus on emotions that have destructive connotations. Practitioners of primal magic evoke spirits of death, disease, and decay, which have powers rooted in shadow. Assassins learn the secrets of soul sacrifice in their hidden guilds.

Not all who tap into shadow magic deliberately set out to do so, however. Shadow magic seems to have a quiet awareness that waits to fill any dire need or unintended opening. Fiery vows sworn to no one in particular but made with ominous intent can awaken shadow magic within a person. A desire to transcend death at all costs, or the willingness to give up life and love for a goal, can infuse the soul with shadow magic. Careless use of sinister powers, rituals, or items can crack the soul, allowing the shadow in. Interaction with or falling prey to undead or entities from the Shadowfell might do the same.

Gorm the Hidden, the renowned assassin, came to his power in this way. A soldier in Nerath during the gnoll wars that led to the empire's fall, he was on the battlefield when King Elidyr died. Gorm survived. He swore by any powers that were listening to avenge the king. For reasons only he knows, he and his companions went on to slay three barons who also survived the battle that broke the empire. Gorm's story has no true end. He eventually went into the Shadowfell, some say bound for the Raven Queen's domain of Letherna, and never returned to the world again.

Shadow Scholarship

Despite the possibility of a spontaneous tie to shadow, most of those who wish to use shadow magic must actively learn to do so. A few such seekers are self-taught. Others have patrons, guides, or mentors.

Teachers of shadow magic are easy to find if the seeker knows where to look and is willing to take the risks involved in finding instruction. Temples devoted evil deities or to the darker aspects of some gods offer training. Assassins coach others in their arts within guilds or other underworld organizations. Some creatures of the Shadowfell know shadow secrets and are willing to impart them. A would-be apprentice in the arcane shadow arts can find a master who knows necromancy or nethermancy. Several schools or organizations impart their knowledge to members. Even the great shadow wizard Evard has been known to offer his knowledge of shadow magic, among other secrets, for a price. The numerous copies of his grimoire, Legendry of Phantoms and Ghosts, sometimes change hands.

The practitioners of shadow magic guard their secrets closely. Any potential student must pay a price beyond the cost to his or her soul. Divine outlets demand faith and submission to the temple authorities. Guilds, organizations, and academies ask for loyalty and fees, and they hand down harsh penalties for failing to keep secrets. Individual shadow masters usually have good reason why they are not a part of a larger organization. An apprentice is lucky to find a tutor who is sane, honest, competent, and merely harsh in his or her methods. Creatures that can teach or grant shadow magic are worse, since many of them are native to the Shadowfell and often disdain mortal values.

One misstep in finding a place to learn or a trainer to teach shadow magic can lead to a horrible fate, of which death might only be the beginning. Necromancers are noted for their distasteful habits, and if an apprentice is fortunate enough to avoid grave robbing during his or her tutelage, he or she could still end up a servant to such a master in more ways than one.

The powers of shadow are subtle, and an unscrupulous mentor can create bonds that a neophyte can't detect. When the time is right, such ties can be used to benefit the teacher. Results are seldom favorable for the former student. Some, if not all, copies of the Legendry of Phantoms and Ghosts are said to create such links for Evard. But Evard has always been honest, even in the pages of his grimoire, about the fact that anything he gives out—especially knowledge—comes at a price.

Another infamous wizard known as Emirikol was educated near the city of Nera in the Ghostflame Spire, a tower that exists simultaneously in the world and the Shadowfell and is devoted to teaching nethermancy, necromancy, pyromancy, and other destructive magical arts. Emirikol left Nera after his tutelage, only to return some years later. His homecoming was no happy event, however. Emirikol sought Zahrimahn, his former mentor, and killed the man spectacularly in a public duel, declaring, "So it goes with any who dare mark Emirikol with their paltry shadow powers!" Then Emirikol summoned a steed of shadow and began his legendary flight from the city, during which he killed all who opposed him with shadowy rays and fire.

As Emirikol proclaimed, so it goes with shadow magic and weak masters who try to control or monitor their pupils.

Creeping Gloom

In Legendry of Phantoms and Ghosts, Evard wrote, "Shadow lives in the gaps. It fills them in, bridging the breaches between assumptions and reality, solid and ephemeral, light and dark, life and death. It is the heart of all my arts: illusion, nethermancy, and necromancy. Shadow is the most powerful force in creation, and it existed before the world. If one counts darkness as deeper shadow, it is far greater than light. Only a fool fails to acknowledge this. I am no fool. Are you, dear reader?"

On a number of points, Evard is correct. Shadow likes to be attached to other things—creatures, objects, and powers. It does lurk just behind everything and fill the spaces in between. The sum of darkness in the cosmos might indeed surpass that of light. Shadow or darkness connect everything.

Perhaps this is why pure use of shadow magic is rare. Shadow power is usually attached to darker aspects of arcane magic or divine power. Some wielders of the power couple it with martial prowess. Shadow prefers to lurk in the background, remaining unnoticed but ubiquitous.

Shadow magic is also scarce because its practice is feared even among the wise. It is a magic of darkness, terror, dissolution, and madness. Even if the power's user is not cruel, the results of shadow magic often are.

Dark Focus

To gain shadow magic, an individual must often engage in selfish acts, grasping for power and ignoring social conventions. Self-important pride is a common trait among users of shadow power. Other negative traits are also widespread among shadow magic practitioners.

The great shadow wizard Maikedhon wrote, in his master work Tome of Shadow, "Shadow's influence is strong and its darker ways easy to fall into, but it can be mastered. Once you feel its touch, you must master it. Fail, and it shall master you." He points out that the sway of shadow magic can be insidious. After the pain of the initial sacrifice, its use becomes easier and easier. An increase in apparent power can come quickly.

Such progress gives the user the illusion of control. Shadow magic's nature, however, is conducive to negative emotions. Like the Shadowfell from which it comes, shadow power can accentuate rage, sloth, arrogance, greed, and all similar vices. A user might find bouts of wrath growing more frequent and less controllable, or desires growing into unsatisfying addictions. Minor misunderstandings can become feuds, and any reason for suspicion can rouse paranoia.

Shadow magic is most useful for doing harm or preserving its user, the latter often at the expense of others. It might also lead the practitioner to deal too much with dread forces such as death, the undead, and supernatural creatures of shadow.

Callousness, then, is the foremost danger in using shadow magic. Twisted experiences and shadowy energy strip away compassion and gentleness first. Once coldness creeps into the heart, real evil might not be far behind. A user of shadow magic who wishes to retain the more temperate side of his or her personality must be prepared to face the darkness.

Reflections of the World

"In the cosmic scheme, the world is at the center. It is said that during the process of creation, the primordials of the Elemental Chaos found middle ground in the world, discarding the parts that seemed too dim and deathly and those parts that contained too much vivacity and magic. The gods of the Astral Sea manipulated the results. At the end of this so-called Middle World, they had finished something like the world we know. But they had also created something more. Something unintended.

"Shadowy elements and vibrant magical pieces the creators had called into being remained. Laws of magic say that like attracts like, do they not? Those bits discarded as not for the world joined together anyway in imperfect mirror images of our realm. Thus was the Plane of Shadow, the Shadowfell, the glorious darkling realm, born alongside its siblings, the world and the magical Feywild.

"The Shadowfell and the Feywild, as likenesses of the First Work, resemble our world, but they are only superficially similar. A fortress in the world might have a counterpart in the other realms. An ignorant mortal from the world might not even note a Feywild settlement as such, because it was built with eladrin magic to meld with a gnarled and ancient forest. A similar spot in the Shadowfell might contain a bleak ruin or mere hints that life once went on. Some areas across the planes match up not at all.

"Our scheme of the cosmos with the world at the center is a gross simplification, as any fool of a wizard can tell you at length. Although the Elemental Chaos and the Astral Sea are distant planes, they still touch the world in places. So it is with our sibling planes. They share features in superficial ways.

"This sharing of reality happens spontaneously in the world where one plane has a connection to the nature of another. The site of an ancient battlefield where thousands died and were left unburied might have ties to the Shadowfell. A forest where the elves raised a fey fortress or a standing-stone circle to honor Corellon could connect to the Feywild.

"The process is unpredictable, following no set pattern. In some places, it's hard to say if the connection between planes came before the physical evidence of the link. Such connections can be impermanent, and sometimes they fade or shift. The only consistency is that where a neighboring plane affects the world, the world grows more like the intruding plane.

"Some magical practices are easier to perform in such areas, making it useful to be able to find such places. It is also practical to be able to create such a locale, temporarily of course. I speak of shadowfall . . ."

– From Evard's Legendry of Phantoms and Ghosts

The Shadowfell

As Evard reveals, the "glorious darkling realm" of the Shadowfell is a counterpart of the world. In the Shadowfell, the brightest day the pale sun can muster is as full of gloom as a stormy day in the world. The night can be so dark that the darkness feels like a clinging fog, with few stars to break up the black sky. When the moon shines, it is a dim lantern of unusual hue, such as gold or red. Light in the Shadowfell can be half as bright as it might be in the world. Color pales in the dismal air.

Emotions are equally dulled, turning to apathy and melancholy. High spirits are rare in the realm where the dead pass through on their final journey. Negative emotions—fear, anger, greed—might be amplified. Such feelings are easier to raise in the murky atmosphere, leading visitors from the world who linger down a self-destructive path.

The land is little better. It is broken and, where it provides any sustenance, covered in strangely colored plants. In places, it is dangerous in ways that those wise to the nature in the world might miss. The energy of the plane of shadow can become so strong that it saps life and amplifies necrotic powers. It can strengthen the undead while sapping the will to survive from the living. Dark energy can gather to pool and flow like water.

People and other living creatures still dwell in the Shadowfell. Some, despite being native to the world, even manage to live well in the infrequent settlements of the plane—the city of Gloomwrought, for instance. Beings native to the plane—such as banderhobbs, dark ones, death giants, nightwalkers, shadar-kai, and shadows—usually fare better. So do those creatures infused with shadow, such as shadowborn, the undead, shades, and vrylokas.

Explorers and other brave souls from the world travel back and forth across the boundaries. Shadow creatures do the same, although many of them do so because they hunger for something in the world. Banderhobbs creep from the shadows to kidnap people for some mysterious purpose, and shadows devour and manipulate their inanimate counterparts for equally enigmatic reasons. The Shadowfell and its magic have a way of spawning predatory creatures.

Gloomwrought

An eerie city rises along the shore of the Stormy Sea in the Shadowfell. One of the few reasonably safe settlements in the plane of shadow, the City of Midnight is a place of mystery. Its oldest structures have been present, it is said, since before any settlers came to reside within its walls. Inscrutable folk known as the keepers were its only inhabitants then, although some citizens wonder if the keepers are not actually a part of the city.

Gloomwrought is thought to be a living being itself, since it moves and reacts as a creature might.

The realms of fey and shadow are no less real than the world we call home

Dark, twisting, dangerous, and changeable, the city is like the society within its walls. It is a cosmopolitan metropolis full of locals and travelers of all kinds, as well as numerous merchants, leaders, and factions. The City of Midnight is a haven for intrepid folks, offering as much potential for adventure, wealth, and glory within its walls as without.

Crossing the Boundary

Evard's tome speaks of environments where the Shadowfell is close to the world. In such areas, shadow might crossings exist, allowing travelers from one world to pass into another. Sometimes the passage allows travel in only one direction, or it merely pollutes an area of the world with aspects of the plane of shadow without allowing travel. Whatever the case, these places are always dangerous.

Halflings and other roving travelers such as the Vistani might know of shadow crossings that are available along their nomadic routes. Those who have a tradition of using such crossings, as the halflings and the Vistani do, call them Bleak Paths. Both peoples use such paths to travel more quickly through shadow, or to avoid or ambush enemies.

Sometimes the Shadowfell's touch on the world is temporary. The plane's influence settles in for a time and then departs. Where the two worlds meet, though, passage to and fro is easy. This is what Evard refers to as "shadowfall." Dire events usually precede a shadowfall, but as Evard's writing portends, baleful rituals can create one of these locations. When a shadowfall occurs and then ends, entire locales can be changed or disappear altogether into shadow.

Vistani Made up of folk from all races, the colorful and uncanny Vistani are a people apart. In gaudy wagons, they wander the lands of the world and its mirror planes with no ties to kings or temples. Essential to the Vistani is the blood—the familylike mystic bond each member shares that makes each one a Vistani and ties clan to clan. Eldritch arts are also central among the Vistani, who are noted for their strange magic, wondrous items, and horrible curses.

Vistani seem to be able to cross the boundaries between the worlds as easily as they cross those between civilization and wilderness. As they rove, they collect unusual goods, abilities, and news. When they set up camp near a settlement, they become entertainers and traders, selling these commodities for whatever they need and pilfering what they cannot afford. In leaving, they also take the orphaned, the lonely, and the worthy to become one with the blood—new members of the Vistani.

Domains of Dread Sometimes a mortal creature commits an act so vile, with consequences so unforeseen, that creation itself seems to be offended.

MATIAS TAPIA

Perhaps some unknown dark forces take note and seek to punish the offender, or maybe the agents of fate take an interest in the ultimate outcome of the situation. Whatever is at work seems irrelevant, for the outcome is the same. After the deed, a shadowfall occurs in the nearby area, dark mists rolling in with shadows and a deathly chill. The whole place and often all its inhabitants are swept into the Shadowfell behind a wall of impenetrable mist.

The realm becomes a prison of sorts with that haunting fog as its walls. Those within, including the offender, cannot escape until the deed is righted or the wrongdoer is dispatched in the right way. These supernatural jails within the Shadowfell are known as domains of dread, and those who rule such personal purgatories are called dark lords.

A domain of dread can be entered from the outside, but visitors find themselves trapped until they perform some deed required to break free. Sometimes that endeavor is nothing short of correcting the cause of the domain's appearance. Only the Vistani know methods of crossing into and out of domains of dread safely without being bound in such a way. Vistani give their secrets to no one, and, fearing long-reaching retribution, even the dark lords leave the magical vagabonds to their ways.

Despite being trapped, a powerful dark lord can exert some influence across the boundary of a domain of dread. If a lord is invoked with the proper rites, he or she can forge mystic pacts with those who want the powers of darkness and have already given up a part of themselves to access shadow magic. Some dark lords are so insane or so lost in the false reality of their domain of dread that they are unaware of the pact, but others manipulate such bonds in hopes of breaking free.

The Lure of Shadow

The promise of great power has lured many creatures to the art of shadow magic. Delving into shadow is a two-way street, a symbiotic relationship between its user and the plane of shadow. While shadow magic grants its user power, it also extracts a price from his soul. A power-hungry creature usually fails to realize its fate until the moment of its death.

Sometimes, though, the lure of shadow looms much larger. A hero surrounded by enemies, a young wizard who unleashes a demon from within the sigils that bound it, and a thief caught in the act by guards all might hear the distant whisper of the Shadowfell, offering escape, power, or a sudden inspiration. When the shadow offers such gifts to mortals, it expects a much higher price in return. It is not content to merely wait for the time to claim a soul.

The following section presents a set of optional rules for depicting the lure of shadow magic. When the characters are trapped in a desperate situation, one of them might hear shadow's call. Characters who answer it might gain the edge needed to survive, but at a price.

The Raven Queen's Whisper

The Raven Queen's whisper is a tool DMs can use to highlight the power offered by shadow magic and the price it comes with. You can easily link it to a different deity or power in your own campaign, depending on the nature of your pantheon. Generally speaking, the god or power that uses this approach is unaligned

FAR SHADOWS

Scholars on the subject claim the Far Realm touches creation from the outside, like a foul skin of stuff older than all knowing. The unwise seek its encompassing madness and alien nature in the depths of the night sky, especially in the dark between the stars. The Shadowfell's nighttime firmament is, as a vast void with few dim or flickering lights, the perfect place to seek the realm also called the Outside.

Volnath, a wizard of old Nerath, sought such learning from Telkon, his observatory in the world. He discovered ancient texts on shadow and the Outside, and he invited dark beings into his ritual chambers to give him counsel. Living shadows whispered to him during his observations, speaking of the power of shadow magic and the nearness of the Far Realm in the Shadowfell's sky.

The wizard, his sanity on the brink, summoned a shadowfall to take Telkon and the nearby village of Hadder into the Shadowfell. There, from instructions on ancient tablets and through the toil of the enslaved folk of Hadder, he remade the village and Telkon into a monumental arcane focus. Volnath slew any who intruded in the area of his great work. He sacrificed numerous innocents and ultimately his own life for undead immortality.

He then activated his focus with the help of undead assistants, burning a hole in the sky overhead. Although several villagers cried out and died on the spot, presumably from fear, nothing else happened immediately. Then the mists rolled in around Hadder and Telkon, sealing the area off from the Shadowfell. Soon after, Volnath's withered flesh, as well as that of his assistants, began to take on an unnatural hue and a squirming will of its own . . .

rather than overtly evil. Deities of fate or chance might also utilize it.

From her abode in the Shadowfell, the Raven Queen keeps watch over all that lives and dies. In her eyes, the weave of fate turns, twists, and unravels. Sometimes, she takes an interest in a particular mortal who could prove useful to her. She watches such a subject with a particularly keen eye, waiting for her chance to turn its destiny to her own devices.

When a creature under the Raven Queen's watch faces mortal peril, she sometimes reaches forth and offers to delay its death. This offer is made only out of self-interest. A creature that accepts the Raven Queen's offer of assistance is bound to her will, at least for a time. The debt is irrevocable and undeniable.

The Offer

The Raven Queen's offer comes in the form of a whisper that only one character can hear. She targets the character who, in her judgment, is the most likely to accept her deal. That might be a shady, unaligned character who is interested in saving his own skin or is too shortsighted to worry about a debt. A lawful good paladin or similar character might also make a good target. In that case, the Raven Queen plays upon the character's sense of duty or obligation to protect his or her friends. The offer usually grants power to a selfish character, or a useful boon or gift to a good or heroic character.

In any case, the Raven Queen's offer always provides a clear path to safety. She might destroy an enemy with a blast of arcane power, turning the tide in the characters' favor. Some other possibilities include:

- ✦ Teleporting the party to safety
- ✦ Smiting enough enemies to even the odds in battle
- ✦ Ending all the hindering conditions and effects the characters are subject to
- ✦ Granting a character an automatic critical hit on his or her next attack
- ✦ Restoring all characters' hit points and healing surges
- ✦ Restoring the use of expended daily and encounter powers
- ✦ The answer to a riddle
- ✦ A significant bonus to a skill check or series of skill checks
- ✦ A sudden coincidence or lucky break

The Raven Queen tailors her offer of aid to fit the situation. In noncombat situations, she takes indirect action to help the characters. In battle, she might resort to direct blasts of magic to incinerate the characters' enemies.

The Price

When a character accepts the Raven Queen's offer of aid, his soul becomes bound to her will. His fate becomes like clay in her hands, something she can bend and twist to her will. With this power, she can visit a curse of ill luck upon him.

The curse is neither trivial nor subtle: Once per encounter, when an enemy hits the character, the Raven Queen chooses to make that hit a critical hit.

While the Raven Queen could easily use this curse to slaughter a defiant character, she made her offer in the first place because she needs the character's assistance. The Raven Queen never extends an offer of assistance without a clear goal in mind.

Thus, the Raven Queen uses her curse as a reminder to a character who strays from the path she sets before him. She balances her ability to punish with her need to push the character toward the goal she has selected for him.

The Raven Queen's machinations and goals are largely up to you. As DM, you should consider the situation in your campaign and portray the Raven Queen accordingly. Are there vestiges of a cult to Nerull that needs stamping out? Does Orcus or his agents gather power in the world? Is there a lich, vampire, or other creature that has cheated death and must be brought to justice? Before using this option in your game, consider what the Raven Queen wants in return before she makes her offer.

Some of the typical quests the Raven Queen might set before a character include:

- ✦ Slay the agent of her enemies
- ✦ Clear and consecrate a fallen temple
- ✦ Seek out traitors within the ranks of her faithful
- ✦ Ensure that a simmering rivalry between two realms erupts into war, thereby expanding the power of death
- ✦ Destroy an ancient ritual book unearthed by a sage

The Raven Queen cares little if her unwilling agent understands why she sets a task before him. In some cases, ignorance is useful. Perhaps a ritual book contains some way to unseat the Raven Queen. The fewer people that know of it, the better. The same applies to quests against the Raven Queen's own followers. A corrupt priest or a sect perverted to the worship of Orcus or some other enemy might gain control over the Raven Queen's worshipers in an area. Only a properly motivated outsider can hope to defeat them.

Once the Raven Queen is satisfied that the task is complete, she loses her power over the character. The Raven Queen is a god, but she is still bound to keep her word. The other gods would move against her if they saw her take too active a hand in the affairs of mortals.

CHAPTER 2

Shadow Classes

CHARACTERS IN a DUNGEONS & DRAGONS game share common traits, including a thirst for excitement, a need to explore the mysterious places of the world, and a willingness to take on challenges that the common folk cannot stand against. Heroes of shadow are no different, although such characters might have darker motivations and techniques for facing the dangers arrayed against them.

Your character's class is a general vocation. It determines the kind of adventurer you can become and the types of things you can do. Your class defines and gives boundaries to your combat prowess, magical aptitude, skills, and other special abilities. Most of the capabilities your class provides fall into one of two categories: features and powers.

Features are special talents your character learns. They make you better at a task related to your class, or they give you a special benefit in certain situations. If you play a blackguard, for instance, you gain features that grant you benefits based on the vice you embrace. As a vampire, however, you gain features that hone your blood-drinking, undead nature.

Powers are active abilities that represent special actions a character can take, often during combat. A warlock's spells are all powers, as are a vampire's attacks and a blackguard's potent smites.

NEW CHARACTER CLASSES

This book provides all the information you need to create and play assassins, paladins, and warlocks who invest in shadow power. Also appearing in this book is the vampire class, which enables you to play a creature of the night in all its dark glory. The following sections lay out each class's background and key abilities, along with a step-by-step guide to creating a character of that type or class.

A class provides a general set of abilities and traits that all characters of that class share. Individual members of a class can vary wildly, however. The type of character you can create within a given class leaves you plenty of room for customization.

Other products and information from DUNGEONS & DRAGONS INSIDER increase your options.

Assassin

Assassins are cunning hunters and stalkers. They use a combination of lethal poisons, exotic weapons, and shadow magic to ambush, confuse, and slay their enemies. Although many assassins are villains willing to kill anyone for the right price, some view themselves as society's caretakers. By culling society of tyrants, murderers, and fiends, they ensure peace and stability for all. Executioners are assassins who use shadow magic as part of their arsenal. Their magic allows them to close with a foe and finish it off with their finely honed combat abilities.

Paladin

Most paladins embody virtue, and they channel the holy virtues to defend their allies. But not all cleave to such high-minded ideals. Shadow power can be channeled through anger, fear, and a consuming desire for control. A blackguard is a striker who taps into menacing facets of the divine through the dreaded vices: dark emotion and ambition rather than high ideals. Heroic blackguards are dark warriors who combine heavy weapons and armor with fearsome deific might.

Vampire

Fear of death, obsession with power, or poor luck can lead a character down the path of the bloodthirsty undead. One vampire is usually the spawn of another, but more than one vampire has awakened with no clue as to his or her origin. As undead creatures, vampires naturally tap into the Shadowfell and its power. A vampire who wishes to be more than a monster fights against the heartless grip of his or her shadowy nature to retain a semblance of mortal values. Such an adventurer uses the sinister traits of his or her new form to fight against the hungry darkness that threatens the world.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR

Warlock

The Shadowfell offers power at a price, and a few ambitious souls are willing to pay the cost for a fast track to magical capabilities. You can create a binder warlock, a controller who combines shadow power with arcane magic. The gloom pact directly harnesses the powers of the Shadowfell to hinder enemies, while the star pact exploits the unfathomable darkness between the stars. Turning the dark power of shadow to laudable ends is the unenviable task of the heroic warlock.

Class Options

The power of shadow presents a temptation to all who wield magic. This book offers new choices for the cleric, the warlock, and the wizard, focusing on how these classes adapt shadow magic to enhance their capabilities.

Cleric

The gods who invest clerics with power have numerous aspects and control of distinct parts of creation. Clerics have equally numerous paths to power, and some prefer to embody the frightening deific spheres of influence. This section presents shadow powers that any cleric can take, as well as the powers associated with the death domain.

Warlock

Warlocks are accustomed to calling on dark forces, and some choose to emphasize that darkness with power drawn more directly from shadow. This section presents shadow powers that any warlock can take, as well as the gloom pact for the hexblade warlock.

Wizard

Wizards seek arcane secrets wherever they can be found, and the Shadowfell has many mysteries to reveal to the bold and curious. It is said that wizards were among the first to tap into the power of shadow. Whether or not this is true, spells of death, dissolution, and darkness offer advantages to any skilled wizard. This book offers wizards access to two new schools of magic—necromancy, the manipulation of death energy, and nethermancy, the shaping of raw shadow.

Paragon Path

When your character reaches 11th level, you select a paragon path from among the options available to you. Your class describes your basic role, but your paragon path represents a particular area of expertise or interest. It grants you new features and powers from 11th level to 20th level. In addition to an association with part of the lore of the Dungeons & Dragons universe, you gain capabilities that enhance and complement the abilities of your class.

This book presents paragon path options for each full class description, and it also offers additional paragon paths that might fit with more than one class. You can select any paragon path as long as you meet its prerequisites. When you select a paragon path, you gain that path's features and powers instead of those of any other paragon path. An array of paragon paths appears in other Dungeons & Dragons supplements and on Dungeons & Dragons Insider.

Epic Destiny

After twenty levels of adventure, it's time for you to assume your epic destiny and shape your legend in the universe forevermore. Like a paragon path, an epic destiny grants special powers and features in addition to your class features. Unlike a paragon path, an epic destiny is not a mere specialization of your talents. Instead, your choice of destiny offers extraordinary abilities that represent your journey toward your ultimate fate as you define it.

When your character reaches 21st level, you select an epic destiny from among the options available to you. This book presents several epic destinies, starting on page 152. When you select an epic destiny, you gain that destiny's features and powers instead of those of any other epic destiny. Additional epic destinies appear in other Dungeons & Dragons supplements and on Dungeons & Dragons Insider.

"Honor? What good is honor? How will high ideals protect you from the hidden blade, the poison staining your cup, or the strangler's cord waiting in the shadows? Fool. Assassins care nothing for duty or honor. They want only the gold your corpse will bring. Cling to your honor all you like, but should you cross paths with one such as me, think twice before using your honor as a shield."

—Lassiveren the Dark

Assassin

Assassins embrace shadow magic and pledge a shard of their souls to the Shadowfell to gain their power. By replacing a fundamental part of themselves with a dark reflection, they can manifest that piece of shadow to accomplish incredible things. The infusion of shadow magic allows assassins to identify weak points in an opponent's defenses so that with a few moments of study they can reduce the stoutest enemies to corpses.

An assassin usually keeps his or her profession a secret, since few trust those who regularly deal in death. Assassins' guilds provide some measure of protection, especially in those regions where the study of shadow magic and assassination as an art form are banned.

As an assassin, you are an outcast. You traded away a part of your soul for the power of death, and only the most-loyal companions accept your skills into their midst. Whatever drew you onto the assassin's path, you become a trained killer from whom few can escape unharmed.

The type of assassin you can create with this book is the executioner.

Executioner

Martial and Shadow Striker: Your sense of timing, skill with weapons, and ability to use the shadows as a weapon allow you to strike with lethal effect against an unsuspecting foe. You even mix in some shadow magic when appropriate.

Key Abilities: Dexterity, Charisma

Executioner Traits

Hit Points: You start with hit points equal to 12 + your Constitution score. You gain 5 each time you gain a level.

Bonuses to Defenses: +1 to Fortitude, +1 to Will

Healing Surges per Day: 7 + your Constitution modifier

Armor Proficiencies: Cloth, leather

Weapon Proficiencies: Simple one-handed melee, military one-handed melee, garrote, simple ranged, blowgun, bola, shortbow

Implement Proficiencies: Ki focuses

Class Skills: Acrobatics (Dex), Arcana (Int), Athletics (Str), Bluff (Cha), Endurance (Con), Insight (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Perception (Wis), Stealth (Dex), Streetwise (Cha), Thievery (Dex)

Trained Skills: Stealth, plus four more from the list of class skills

ERIC BELISLE

Death can come calling when you least expect it

Executioners are more than just assassins for hire. When someone wants to send a message through an assassination, an executioner arranges the death in such a way that the message is delivered with maximum effectiveness. This might mean the quiet poisoning of a crooked merchant to warn other merchants to deal fairly, or it could be a public execution of a tyrannical noble, meant to frighten the leaders of an area into treating the common folk more humanely. Though many executioners perform these deeds at the request of a third party, others might do what they do in order to accomplish personal goals related to battling evil or enforcing justice.

Executioners rely on their effectiveness as both infiltrators and assassins to get the job done. They dabble in shadow magic, which lets them walk through walls, create artificial shadows, and craft illusions to hide their intrusion into secure areas. They also master the art of poison use, giving them the ability to strike at enemies both directly and indirectly.

Adventuring executioners tend to perform their assassinations in the pursuit of the goals of their fellow adventurers, using such killings to influence the party's allies and enemies. An executioner stands as a capable warrior, even when not performing an assassination. This quality makes the executioner an invaluable member of an adventuring party that frequently finds itself immersed in conflict.

Creating an Executioner

This section walks you through the steps of creating an executioner. As you make choices at each step, consider how those choices relate to your character's personality, history, and goals.

Consult the three class tables, one for each tier of play, for a summary of what you gain as you advance in level.

Assassins' Guild

When you create your assassin, you must choose which guild you belong to. The executioner assassin has a choice between the Red Scales and the League of Whispers, though your Dungeon Master might substitute his or her own guild names and descriptions for these. Your choice of guild determines some of your weapon proficiencies and the kinds of special attack techniques you learn throughout your career.

Red Scales This order of assassins works to keep society in balance. If any organization grows too powerful, too corrupt, too wealthy, or too vile, the Red Scales weigh and measure the members of that organization and then collect a payment that they are owed in blood. Though one might call the Red Scales idealists, none can say what truly drives them. Rumors abound that this guild's Grandfather of Assassins is touched by some planar entity. They say that his eyes are orbs of golden fire, a feature he gained, along with his new policies, only after he returned from a journey to the distant East.

League of Whispers The very existence of this guild of executioners is often dismissed as myth or urban legend. The League of Whispers keeps its membership a secret. Although individual members might be known as assassins, their association with the guild is rarely more than a matter of speculation for nonmembers. The league keeps its existence a mystery by executing anyone who discovers the truth. The order holds secret meetings once every full moon, where the members converge to discuss jobs, trade secrets and tricks, and receive orders from their Grandfather of Assassins.

Race

Choose your race. Drow, human, and revenant make good choices for an executioner.

Drow Perhaps no race is better suited for the role of executioner than the drow. Not only do the drow's racial bonuses to Dexterity and Charisma match the executioner's ability score preferences, the race's cloud of darkness power is extremely useful in sowing confusion, providing cover, and warding off interference. Additionally, the drow racial bonuses to Intimidate and Stealth can provide the executioner with the ability to bully people out of his or her way or to avoid them entirely.

As a drow assassin, you can let your experience in the Underdark guide the way in which you perform your duties. You might prefer to stick to the shadows, leaving public assassinations to others. You might work only at night, giving you an advantage over the surface-dwelling races that are all but blinded by the darkness. Furthermore, you probably have some experience in the cutthroat world of drow politics, so you might tend to seek out targets who have significant political strength or whose death could serve as the trigger for a significant shift in political power.

Drow assassins often worship the Raven Queen, the god of fate and death. Executioners directly serve the Raven Queen every time they perform an assassination by sending another soul into her domain. Many even believe that they are the Raven Queen's weapons in the world and that she moves them around like playing pieces on a game board. Other drow executioners worship Sehanine for her connection to the moon and night, the time when executioners flourish.

Human Human executioners are among the most common assassins in existence, both because of the sheer number of humans in the world as well as the versatility that humans display (a trait executioners need in order to succeed and survive). Use the race's ability score bonus to boost Dexterity. The extra skill is useful for expanding the scope of your talents; training in Bluff might get you past gate guards, or Thievery might disable traps on the magistrate's windows.

When you play a human executioner, consider how your race's penchant for versatility and ambition played into your decision to become an assassin. Perhaps you were recruited at a young age, an orphan snatched off the street by a guild of assassins and given training in a wide variety of weapons and assassination techniques. Alternatively, you might have been a simple thug who dabbled in shadow magic or the use of poisons before you were wooed into an assassins' guild with promises of wealth and power. Maybe you simply saw a way to put your talent for killing to good use and began advancing through the ranks of your assassins' guild with your eyes set on the position of Grandfather Assassin.

Human executioners are usually adherents of the Raven Queen, guided to do her bidding through the touch of shadow magic they possess. Some human executioners worship Erathis, particularly her aspect of civilization; these rare individuals turn their weapons on any that threaten the strength of a civilization, such as insurgents and rebels who try to break the bonds of society.

Revenant Revenants have the combination of implacability and physical prowess needed to flourish as executioners. To accomplish whatever task returned the revenant to life, the skills and powers of an executioner might be just the edge required to get the job done. The touch of shadow already inherent within the revenant's returned form blends and combines perfectly with the shadow magic employed by the executioner.

Revenants most often follow the Raven Queen, because the Lady of Fate is often the source of their return to the natural world. Whether willingly or unwillingly, a revenant must complete the tasks set before him or her by the Raven Queen, for the goals of death cannot be long denied.

Ability Scores

Determine your ability scores, remembering that an executioner is best served by a superior Dexterity score. You use Dexterity to make your weapon attacks; a steady hand and quick reflexes help you exploit an enemy's weaknesses. Because you rely on stealth to evade guards and other obstacles, you also need a good Dexterity to boost your Armor Class and skill checks.

Charisma helps you deceive and distract your foes, so you also want to have a high score in this ability. The Bluff and Streetwise skills in particular can be crucial when you must throw an enemy off your trail.

You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1 each when you reach certain levels: 4th, 8th, 14th,

An assassin strikes without fear or compassion

BEN WOOTTEN

18th, 24th, and 28th. In addition, all your ability scores increase by 1 at 11th and 21st levels.

Your other ability scores can help shape your character's background and interests. If you have a solid Strength score, you are likely the kind of assassin who leaps from rooftop to rooftop, clambers over walls, and uses physical ability to get close to your foes. If you have a good Wisdom score, you might instead be a more thoughtful and studious executioner, one who likes to spend hours and days studying a target before striking with lethal precision.

Skills

At 1st level, you have training in Stealth. In addition, you choose four more trained skills from the following list of class skills: Acrobatics, Arcana, Athletics, Bluff, Endurance, Insight, Intimidate, Perception, Streetwise, and Thievery.

For an executioner, each skill represents a tool that can be used when the time is right. Executioners have many different skill needs, depending on the situation. Sometimes they need to be secretive and silent, while at other times they need to be cunning and street smart. It benefits an executioner to have a wide range of skills so that any situation can be dealt with swiftly without disrupting the plan.

Your skills help describe your preferred assassination methods. An executioner who has training in Acrobatics and Athletics might have spent his formative years dashing across rooftops and might now specialize in second-story intrusions and assassinations in a target's lair. Alternatively, an executioner with training in Bluff and Streetwise might be a master of blending in. Such assassins spend years learning the mannerisms and habits of a variety of different cultures so that they can range far and wide in the pursuit of a target.

Class Features and Powers

Note which class features and powers you gain at 1st level, as specified on the Executioner Heroic Tier table on page 19.

For your guild attacks, decide whether you want to fight with melee or ranged weapons. If you want to fight close up and personal, choose Red Scales and the powers associated with that guild. If you want to attack from a distance, select League of Whispers and the powers connected to that guild. You also have a choice of two types of poison that you are familiar with.

Feats

Choose one feat at 1st level. You gain an additional feat at every even-numbered level, plus a feat at 11th and 21st levels.

Feats from the quick reaction category are a good choice for reflecting the executioner's ability to react and move quickly in any unexpected situation. Similarly, feats from the weapon training category can give the assassin an edge in combat. Assassins prefer melee weapons and those that can be easily used at close range, where they are most effective. Because executioners can use shields, consider taking the expertise feat that applies to a one-handed weapon, such as a dagger (light blades). The Master at Arms feat is also a great choice if you plan to use multiple weapons.

Additionally, many executioners spend a great deal of time studying and practicing their abilities. Consider taking feats from the learning and lore category, particularly those that enhance Athletics, Bluff, and Stealth, all of which can be extremely useful to executioners.

Equipment

You have proficiency with the following types of armor: cloth and leather. You can also use light shields. You have proficiency with the following weapons and weapon types: simple one-handed melee, military one-handed melee, garrote, simple ranged, blowgun, bola, shortbow.

You have 100 gp to buy your starting equipment. Begin by purchasing a poisoner's kit, which you will need to create the poisons you use. Next, buy a suit of leather armor, a light shield, and a one-handed weapon. A dagger is a good choice for a melee weapon because it is small, easy to conceal, and lightweight. A spear is also a good choice for an executioner who does not need to hide his weapon, since its larger damage die will make you a bit

ASSASSIN TOOLS

All assassins have certain tools of their trade that they specialize in. Described below are three weapons and a new item of gear for use with the executioner.

Blowgun: This long, tubular weapon is used by blowing on one end. It can launch darts and other agents.

Bola: Consisting of two or three weighted spheres connected by cord, bolas tangle up opponents, but the spheres are also strong enough to inflict injuries.

Garrote: This strangling tool is a length of wire or knotted rope with handles at either end.

Poisoner's Kit: A poisoner's kit is an essential part of the assassin's repertoire. It contains the base components and tools needed to craft poisons. See page 159 for more information.

SUPERIOR MELEE WEAPONS

Two-Handed

| Weapon | Prof. | Damage | Range | Price | Weight | Prop. | Group |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Garrote* | +3 | 1d4 | — | 1 gp | 1 lb. | HC, S | Garrote |

The only attacks that you can make with a garrote are ones that require or allow its use. Also, if you are holding a garrote in both hands, you can use the grab action even without a hand free. If the grab hits, the target takes 1[W] damage from the garrote.

SUPERIOR RANGED WEAPONS

One-Handed

| Weapon | Prof. | Damage | Range | Price | Weight | Prop. | Group |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Bola | +3 | 1d4 | 4/8 | 5 gp | 2 lb. | LT | Flail |

Two-Handed

| Weapon | Prof. | Damage | Range | Price | Weight | Prop. | Group |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Blowgun | +3 | 1d4 | 5/10 | 5 gp | 2 lb. | LM, S | Blowgun |

more dangerous. Likewise, be sure to purchase the weapons associated with your guild attacks.

You also want a ki focus (page 159), an item through which you channel shadow magic. Once you have a magic ki focus, you will be able to confer its enhancement bonus to your arsenal of weapons.

Defenses and Hit Points

Calculate your defenses using your ability modifiers and the bonus for your character's armor and shield. In addition, you gain a +1 bonus to Fortitude and a +1 bonus to Will.

You start with hit points equal to 12 + your Constitution score. You gain 5 hit points each time you gain a level. You have a number of healing surges per day equal to 7 + your Constitution modifier.

Alignment and Final Details

At this point, you should have all the mechanical details of your character determined. There are a few more decisions to make.

Pick an alignment, which represents a basic outlook on the world that helps shape how your character acts. Do you execute only those who are perpetrating evil on the world? If so, lawful good or good is the best match for your character. If you perform executions only to serve your own needs and wants, then unaligned is a good choice.

Finally, check with your DM to see where you are from in the campaign setting, the people you already know, and what your current situation is. It also helps to spend a few minutes working out how or if you know the other players' characters.

Heroic Executioner

As your career begins, you work on the basic skills that allow you to evade notice and deliver killing strikes. Although you might begin by assassinating goblin chiefs and orc warlords, the abilities you develop in the heroic tier set the stage for far greater accomplishments.

| 20,500 | 10 | +1 | Utility power |

Level 1: Versatile Defense

Ever watchful, an executioner practices techniques for staying alive. You have learned a mode of defense tailored to your fighting style.

Benefit: You choose a bonus feat, either Shield Proficiency: Light or Two-Weapon Defense. You don't have to meet the feat's prerequisite.

Level 1: Attack Finesse

For the executioner, speed, agility, and precision are more important than muscle. An executioner learns how to handle any weapon with a finesse that lends itself to more accurate strikes.

Benefit: You can use Dexterity instead of Strength for your melee basic attacks.

In addition, once per turn you can deal 1d8 extra damage with a weapon attack using a one-handed weapon, a garrote, a blowgun, or a shortbow. The extra damage increases to 2d8 at 11th level and 3d8 at 21st level.

Level 1: Guild Attacks

As a member of either the Red Scales or the League of Whispers, you have learned various deadly attack techniques. At the start of your career, you can use the techniques associated with your guild.

Red Scales

The Red Scales are considered by many to be the masters of close-quarters combat. The techniques that their guild members learn combine decades of study of both martial arts and common assassination techniques, giving them an edge when they are unarmed, wielding a dagger, or using a garrote.

Benefit: You gain the powers garrote strangle, poisoned dagger, and quick lunge.

Garrote Strangle

The garrote is a favorite weapon for silent executions. It gives the assassin a silent and efficient weapon for use on the unsuspecting. Though it is difficult to use a garrote on someone who is aware of its presence, assassins have been known to lie in wait for just the right moment when their target wanders too close, then reach out to strangle the target before he or she can react.

BASIC ATTACKS

As an assassin, you make most of your attacks using basic attacks. Your guild attacks and poisons are more situational, giving you a diverse array of tools in battle.

Garrote Strangle — Assassin Attack

You wait for the perfect moment when your foe is within reach, then strangle it with your garrote.

At-Will ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must use this power with a garrote.
Effect: You shift up to 2 squares before the attack.
Target: One creature you are hidden from
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is grabbed until the end of your next turn. While the grab persists, the target takes a –2 penalty to attack rolls against you and cannot speak, and you cannot make other attacks.
Level 21: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Sustain Standard: The grab persists, and the target takes 2[W] + your Dexterity modifier damage.
Level 21: 4[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.

Poisoned Dagger

The dagger's narrow blade excels at piercing armor and slipping through gaps in defenses, making it a good candidate for delivering poisons. Since only a slight nick is required to administer a poison, many assassins carry daggers for just this purpose, even when using some other weapon as their primary one.

Poisoned Dagger — Assassin Attack

Your piercing blade delivers poisons quickly and cleanly, making them difficult to shake off.

At-Will ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must use this power with a dagger.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage. If you deliver an assassin poison with this attack, the target takes a –4 penalty to its first saving throw, if any, against the poison's effect.
Level 21: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: If the dagger has an assassin poison on it that is normally delivered on a hit, you can deliver that poison to the target even if the attack misses.

Quick Lunge

You focus some of your training on the speed of your movements in combat. This particular attack technique allows you to lash out quickly at an enemy that believes itself to be out of your reach. You can not only attack a quarry that would normally be protected by an intervening bodyguard, but you can also upend a foe to prevent its retreat.

Quick Lunge — Assassin Attack

You lunge forward quickly, upending your foe with a kick and a thrust of your weapon.

At-Will ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Melee 1
Effect: You shift 1 square before the attack.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] damage, and you knock the target prone. You can then shift 1 square back to your starting position.
Level 21: 2[W] damage.

League of Whispers

Members of the League of Whispers specialize in the use of a variety of ranged weapons. This training allows them to perform special tricks that can help them execute a target or escape the local authorities. League members undergo training with bolas, hand crossbows, and blowguns to give them an edge against enemies both near and far. Like other executioners, members of the League are trained in the use of multiple weapons and usually carry a variety of weapons with which they are skilled.

Benefit: You gain the powers bola takedown, precision dart, and quick shot.

Bola Takedown

The proper application of bolas can bring down even the most nimble of enemies. Executioners frequently use bolas to keep their targets from escaping, since most creatures tend to flee from their killers on sight. However, this particular technique, which uses a specialized throwing motion to ensure maximum extension of the weapon, is also sometimes used to trip up pursuit when fleeing from the scene of an execution.

Bola Takedown — Assassin Attack

You whirl your bola over your head and take careful aim before hurling it at a foe's legs.

At-Will ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must use this power with a bola.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 1[W] damage, and the target falls prone.
Level 21: 2[W] damage.

Precision Dart

Though one of the weaker weapons in the executioner's repertoire, the blowgun is an excellent tool for ensuring that a poison is delivered directly to an opponent and not turned aside by armor that can deflect a dagger. This technique gives you pinpoint accuracy with the blowgun. A well-placed dart can even be lethal to weaker foes if it punctures a vital area.

Precision Dart — Assassin Attack

The poisoned dart flies from your blowgun with unerring accuracy.

At-Will ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged weapon
Requirement: You must use this power with a blowgun.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage. If you deliver an assassin poison with this attack, the target takes a –4 penalty to its first saving throw, if any, against the poison's effect.
Level 21: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: If the ammunition has an assassin poison on it that is normally delivered on a hit, you can deliver that poison to the target even if the attack misses.

Quick Shot

The hand crossbow is one of the great equalizers when it comes to lethal ranged combat. Executioners often prefer to perform most of their assassinations up close, which can sometimes bring the assassin too close to other enemies. This particular quick-fire technique uses the hand crossbow to surprise and stagger nearby enemies long enough for the executioner to escape.

Quick Shot — Assassin Attack

You loose a quick bolt from your crossbow, thereby creating a momentary opening for your escape.

At-Will ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action Ranged 1
Requirement: You must use this power with a hand crossbow.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Level 21: 2[W] + Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: You shift up to 2 squares.
Special: Using this power doesn't provoke opportunity attacks.

Level 1: Assassin's Strike

The heart of the executioner's ability to take down a foe is the assassin's strike technique. An executioner often has only one chance to eliminate an enemy. Once the element of surprise is lost, bodyguards (or even targets themselves, if capable) can interfere with the mission, leaving the target regretfully alive. This powerful technique represents the intersection of the assassin's knowledge of vital areas of the body, extreme mastery of weapons, and ability to throw everything he has into a single formidable attack. The executioner must wait for the exact right moment to strike, but when he does, this attack can slay a target instantly.

Benefit: You gain the assassin's strike power.

Assassin's Strike — Assassin Attack

You strike with precision at the exact right moment, landing an attack that can be instantly fatal.

Encounter ✦ Martial
No Action Personal
Trigger: You hit a creature within 5 squares of you with an attack using a weapon.
Target: The creature you hit
Effect: The target takes 1d10 extra damage from the triggering attack. If the target is helpless, this damage is maximized.
Level 3: 2d10 extra damage.
Level 7: 3d10 extra damage.
Level 13: 4d10 extra damage.
Level 17: 5d10 extra damage.
Level 23: 6d10 extra damage.
Level 27: 7d10 extra damage.
Special: Nothing but a short or an extended rest can allow you to regain the use of this power.

Level 1: Quick Swap

Your weapons are extensions of your body. When you are changing your focus from nearby foes to distant enemies, you can switch between your melee and ranged weapons with ease.

Benefit: Once during each of your turns, you can take a free action to draw or stow a weapon and then draw another weapon.

Level 1: Poison Use

Executioners have a long history with poison. All become masters at mixing their own poisons. For most assassins, poison is only one of their many weapons. Most of the poisons used by executioners are merely the set-up for a later attack, a precursor to ensure that the target won't be able to stop the executioner once the assassination attempt begins in earnest.

Many poisons are outlawed in civilized realms, so executioners learn to craft simple, unstable venoms that quickly break down into inert components. In this manner, an assassin can travel with a seemingly innocent array of materials. When it is time to strike, the executioner quickly crafts a poison as needed. Because the poison is unstable, it decays rapidly and leaves no incriminating evidence if unused. A shrewd executioner can maintain an innocent facade even in the face of a thorough search of his or her person and quarters.

SPECIAL POISONS

Several of the poisons described here have special effects that begin with "If the DM allows it, a creature reduced to 0 hit points by this poison is not killed, but . . ."

These are discretionary effects in that they call for some interpretation by the players and the DM. For example, id moss powder causes permanent insanity. We don't define what that means; it's up to you. You might decide that the target's Intelligence and Wisdom scores drop to 1 with no hope of recovery, or that it regains its former mental capacity but is forever twisted in some psychotic way. Likewise, the extent of the visible scarring caused by ungol dust is open to interpretation. Do the scars cover the victim's whole body or only its face? Do they affect Charisma?

All of this assumes, of course, that the assassin leaves the target alive at 0 hit points rather than just finishing it off.

If these poisons are ever used against fellow player characters, the DM should consider allowing the "permanent" effects to be removed through quests, long-lost rituals, or some other adventurous process.

Benefit: You learn the recipes for two 1st-level assassin poisons of your choice. During an extended rest, you can prepare one vial of a 1st-level assassin poison.

You must know the poison's recipe and have a poisoner's kit. The vial contains a single use of the poison, which expires if it isn't used before the start of your next extended rest. An item can benefit from the effects of only one assassin poison at a time.

Only you can use your assassin poisons, and you are immune to the effects of the ones you create.

Bloodroot Poison

The poison created from the oil of the bloodroot plant causes a temporary fever and weakening of the body. Bloodroot (named for the deep crimson color of the root) is a relatively common plant often mistaken for other, harmless plants that grow nearby. The poison is favored by assassins who seek to knock an enemy off balance and disorient it before the lethal strike.

Bloodroot Poison Level 1

This crimson liquid causes fever and disorientation.

Assassin Poison

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You apply the poison to your melee weapon or one piece of your ammunition. During this encounter, the next creature you hit with a weapon attack using the poisoned item takes 6 extra poison damage, and it is dazed (save ends).

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You pour the poison into a drink or onto a plate of food. The first creature to consume the food or drink within the next hour is dazed until the end of its next extended rest.

Carrion Crawler Brain Juice

Carrion crawler brain juice is exactly what its name claims: a poison derived from the brains of vicious carrion crawlers, which makes it a difficult substance to harvest. Carrion crawler brain juice makes the body of the target sluggish as the poison attacks muscles and essential tissues that help the body move. Longer exposure to brain juice causes a form of paralysis that makes it impossible for the victim to move a significant distance.

Carrion Crawler Brain Juice Level 1

Purple, oily carrion crawler brain juice can cause sluggishness and paralysis.

Assassin Poison

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You apply the poison to your melee weapon or five pieces of your ammunition. Until the end of the encounter, whenever you hit a creature with a weapon attack using the poisoned item, the target takes 4 extra poison damage, and it is slowed until the end of your next turn.

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You apply the poison to a single handheld object. Within the next hour, the first creature other than you to hold or wear the object for more than 1 minute is immobilized until the end of its next extended rest.

Greenblood Oil

Named for its color and thickness, greenblood oil is a viscous poison derived from poisonous plants that grow deep in primeval forests. This combination of oils from several different sources has medicinal uses: It breaks up dangerous blood clots and can be used to help drain infections from the body. Assassins, however, use greenblood oil to make it more difficult for the body to heal. This poison is often used to make a target more vulnerable to harm rather than by harming directly. For example, an assassin might pour greenblood oil over a target's food early in the day before performing a very public assassination, to ensure that the victim cannot be magically healed once the attack takes place.

Greenblood Oil — Level 1

This thick, green oil has the consistency of blood and makes enemies more susceptible to grievous injuries.

Assassin Poison

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You apply the poison to your melee weapon or one piece of your ammunition. During this encounter, the next enemy you hit with a weapon attack using the poisoned item takes 10 extra poison damage, and it cannot regain hit points (save ends).

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You pour the poison into a drink or onto a plate of food. The first creature to consume the food or drink within the next hour takes a –4 penalty to saving throws and cannot regain hit points until the end of its next extended rest.

Id Moss Powder

Id moss grows primarily in caves and crevasses in the earth, particularly in places where the sun never reaches. Most forest-dwelling people know to avoid consuming id moss even in desperate situations, because the moss causes mental trauma and eventually insanity. When crushed into a fine powder, id moss powder can be inhaled, allowing it to attack the mind more quickly.

Id Moss Powder — Level 1

This green powder causes mental anguish and eventually insanity.

Assassin Poison

Power (Consumable ✦ Implement, Poison, Psychic): Standard Action. Effect: You make the following attack.
Ranged 5
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d10 + Dexterity modifier poison damage, and ongoing 5 psychic damage (save ends).
Each Failed Saving Throw: The target makes a basic attack as a free action against its nearest ally.
Miss: Half damage, and ongoing 5 psychic damage (save ends).
Special: If the DM allows it, a creature reduced to 0 hit points by this poison is not killed, but is instead driven permanently insane.

Power (Consumable): Standard Action. You place the poison in a closed container, such as a chest or a jewelry box. Make the attack above against the first creature to open the container within the next hour.

Nitharit Poison

One of the few slow-acting poisons in the assassin's repertoire, nitharit poison gradually breaks down a creature's natural defenses against toxins and eventually turns those defenses against the poisoned creature. Nitharit poison is often used as a precursor to weaken a target before a second poisoning assault. For example, an assassin might put nitharit poison in a magistrate's wine, then later in the evening return to finish the job with a stronger poison once the target's body is in no shape to fight it off.

Nitharit Poison — Level 1

This clear, odorless, tasteless liquid slowly turns a creature's natural defenses against poison into a harmful weapon.

Assassin Poison

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You apply the poison to your melee weapon or five pieces of your ammunition. Until the end of the encounter, when you hit a creature with a weapon attack using the poisoned item, the creature takes ongoing 2 poison damage (save ends).
First Failed Saving Throw: The creature instead takes ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends).

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You apply the poison to a handheld object. Within the next hour, the first creature other than you to hold or wear the object for more than 1 minute gains vulnerable 5 poison and loses all poison immunity and resistance until the end of its next extended rest.

Ungol Dust

Ungol dust is a black powder made of the crushed remains of dried-up spiders and scorpions that is so fine that one errant breath can blow away an entire dose. Most of those who craft this poison wear masks to ensure that they do not accidentally disperse—or inhale—the dust before packing it into small, easily shattered pellets. When ungol dust comes into contact with flesh or other living material, it becomes highly corrosive.

Ungol Dust — Level 1

This black powder dissolves organic material.

Assassin Poison

Power (Consumable ✦ Acid, Implement, Poison): Standard Action. Effect: You make the following attack.
Ranged 5
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d8 + Dexterity modifier poison damage, and ongoing 5 acid damage (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and ongoing 5 acid damage (save ends).
Special: If the DM allows it, a creature reduced to 0 hit points by this poison is not killed, but is instead knocked unconscious until the end of the encounter, and it is permanently and visibly scarred.

Power (Consumable): Standard Action. You place the ungol dust in a closed container, such as a chest or a jewelry box. Make the attack above against the first creature to open the container within the next hour.

Level 2: Utility Power

Part of being an assassin is knowing which tool to use in any situation. Some executioners master the power of shadow magic early to gain a supernatural edge over their targets. Others simply refine their natural skills, pushing themselves to peak performance.

Benefit: You gain a 2nd-level assassin utility power of your choice.

Distracting Illusion

Mastering the ability to weave shadow magic to create illusions can be a useful skill for the assassin who wants to focus on subterfuge and misdirection. The images created by distracting illusion won't fool anyone who examines them closely or interacts with them. Instead, these illusions are meant to cover up the assassin's actions. For example, an assassin might create an illusion of the guard that the assassin just killed, standing at his assigned post, in order to fool observers into thinking the guard is still on duty. Alternatively, an assassin might lure his or her quarry out into the open by creating an illusion of a trusted companion beckoning the target urgently to where the assassin lurks in the shadows.

Distracting Illusion — Assassin Utility 2

The image of a creature flickers and then solidifies as you craft an illusion meant to cover your dark deeds.

Encounter ✦ Illusion, Shadow
Minor Action — Close burst 10

Effect: You create the illusion of a Medium creature of your choice in an unoccupied square in the burst. The illusion is silent but moves and acts as though it was the creature it appears to be. Creatures that closely examine the illusion can make an Insight check to discover the illusion for what it really is. The check is opposed by a Bluff check that you make when you create the illusion. The illusion lasts until the end of your next turn.

Sustain Minor: The illusion persists until the end of your next turn, and you can move it up to 6 squares.

Silent Stalker

You have learned to quiet your steps and keep your equipment from making noise. As soon as your enemies turn their backs on you, you can approach quickly and quietly, using your enemy's body to shield yourself from sight.

Silent Stalker — Assassin Utility 2

You pad quietly toward your victim, unseen and unheard.

At-Will ✦ Martial
Move Action — Personal
Requirement: You must be hidden.

Effect: You move up to your speed to a square within 2 squares of an enemy. You remain hidden until the end of this turn or until you make an attack.

Summon the Mists

Summon the mists is a simple power that provides rudimentary cover against observation. It allows you to call up a bank of fog that rolls out from the shadows to conceal your actions. When used properly, it usually draws little attention from observers because the fog appears to be perfectly natural even as it conceals dark deeds.

Summon the Mists — Assassin Utility 2

A thick fog rises around you.

Daily ✦ Shadow, Zone
Minor Action — Close burst 5

Effect: The burst creates a zone of lightly obscured squares that lasts until the end of the encounter.

Level 3: Death Attack

Executioners know how to ensure that the job gets done. You rarely leave your enemies on the brink of death and know how to drive your weapon just a little deeper to turn a grave wound into a killing blow.

Benefit: When you hit an enemy with a melee or a ranged attack that deals damage, you can choose to reduce the enemy to 0 hit points automatically if it has 10 hit points or fewer after the damage is dealt.

Level 4: Ability Score Increase

Shadow is becoming so ingrained within you that it infuses your essential nature and makes you more than you were before.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 4: Nimble Drop

Whether high on the rooftops or lurking along the edge of a cliff, you often find yourself using hiding places that are perched upon great heights. You know how to soften a fall so that you can leap into action from your lofty lair.

Benefit: When you take falling damage, you can take a free action to reduce the damage by 6 + your level. If this reduces the damage to 0, you don't fall prone.

Level 5: Improved Poison Use

Your confidence in your skills as a maker of poisons grows, as does your speed in doing so. Even when handling deadly toxins, your hand remains steady, and your eye for mixtures gives you the ability to accomplish more in a short time.

Benefit: You learn the recipe for another 1st-level assassin poison of your choice. During an extended rest, you can now prepare two vials of 1st-level assassin poison.

Level 6: Utility Power

You have learned to master a more advanced assassination technique, ranging from improved skill in shadow magic to practical experience in staying out of sight.

Benefit: You gain a new assassin utility power of your level or lower.

Ghost of the Rooftops

Streets and alleyways are filled with city guards and other witnesses, so some executioners learn the art of dancing from roof to roof with speed and precision. For such a character, clearing the distance between buildings or scaling a palace wall is like taking a stroll around the corner.

Ghost of the Rooftops — Assassin Utility 6

Your skill at climbing and leaping allows you to move across the rooftops unhindered.

At-Will (Special) ✦ Martial
Move Action — Personal
Effect: You climb or make a long jump, moving a number of squares up to your speed, without making an Athletics check.
Special: You can use this power only once per round.

Darkness

Not every execution can be performed with only your victim present. Bodyguards, servants, and innocent bystanders sometimes interfere with assassinations. Darkness allows you to sow confusion by creating an area of pure, magical darkness that no light can penetrate. Those in the area of its effect cannot see you performing your lethal task. Some executioners also use this power to conceal their hiding places from outside observers; a well-placed darkness effect can block the light of lamps and candles, making a room in an inn appear dark to observers who might be hunting the assassin just outside the window.

Darkness — Assassin Utility 6

A cloud of pure shadow expands from you, shrouding the area in darkness.

Daily ✦ Shadow, Zone
Minor Action — Close burst 2
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. To creatures other than you, the zone is totally obscured and blocks line of sight.
Sustain Minor: The zone persists until the end of your next turn. You must be in the zone to sustain it.

Vanish

A quick escape is one of the most valued tools in your repertoire. This power ensures that you can disappear without a trace, at least long enough to retreat without being pursued. It envelops you in a cloak of invisibility, then teleports you a short distance to make sure that your enemies are completely confounded.

Vanish — Assassin Utility 6

Without warning you disappear from the sight of all around you. By the time you reappear, you are far from where you once stood.

Encounter ✦ Shadow, Teleportation
Immediate Reaction — Personal
Trigger: You are hit by an attack.
Effect: You become invisible until the start of your next turn, and you teleport up to your speed.

Level 7: Hidden Stab

An assassin's target is not often easy prey. Assassins are usually tasked with taking down enemies that have powerful spells, years of training, and extensive experience in avoiding assassination attempts. However, the most skilled assassins are those who can land their devastating strikes on these powerful enemies, and most successful assassins use this technique to catch a well-defended enemy off guard and then land a killing blow.

Benefit: You gain the hidden stab power.

Hidden Stab — Assassin Attack

With a quick grab from behind, you cause your enemy to lower its defenses, allowing you to land a deadly blow even as they struggle to break free.

At-Will ✦ Martial, Weapon
Standard Action — Melee 1
Requirement: You must have a hand free and use this power with a light blade.
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] damage, and the target is grabbed until the end of your next turn. While the grab persists, the target grants combat advantage, and it takes a -2 penalty to its first escape attempt. If you make a melee weapon attack against the target before the grab ends and your assassin's strike is not expended, you can use that power against the target even if the attack misses.
Level 21: 2[W] damage.
Sustain Minor: The grab persists until the end of your next turn.

Level 8: Ability Score Increase

You are long accustomed now to the darkness within you, and your body and mind become more formidable.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 8: Flawless Disguise

Deception is a key part of the executioner's ability to reach his or her targets without impediment. Because infiltration is often necessary for gaining access to a target, executioners learn to disguise themselves well enough to blend in with their surroundings. You might pass yourself off as a servant to infiltrate the local lord's manor or appear as a merchant's cook to get into his dining chambers.

Benefit: During a short rest, you can craft an excellent disguise that makes you appear to be another humanoid of your size (either a specific person or a nondescript member of a race or an organization). Any creature that attempts to see through your ruse makes an Insight check opposed by your Bluff check, with a +5 bonus to your check. You must use a disguise kit to create the disguise.

Level 9: Improved Poison Use

The longer you work with your poisons, the more you learn about them. Whether you pick up the knowledge from a fellow assassin, pay a local apothecary for new instruction, or simply learn of new poisons by trial and error, your repertoire of poisons continues to grow.

Benefit: You learn the recipe for another 1st-level assassin poison of your choice. During an extended rest, you can now prepare three vials of 1st-level assassin poison.

Level 10: Utility Power

At the peak of your power in the heroic tier, your mastery of shadow magic gives you access to a variety of tools that you can use to perform your executions without being obstructed or captured.

Benefit: You gain a new assassin utility power of your level or lower.

Death Mark

Executioners often mark their targets in some way before the assassination occurs. This power creates a singed, black sigil somewhere on the target's body that pulses with shadow magic. This mark creates a bond between the executioner and the target that gives the executioner the ability to detect the target with unerring accuracy. Once a death mark is placed, the assassin is rarely far behind.

Death Mark — Assassin Utility 10

A black mark appears on the target's form, appearing to be burned in with a hot iron. It warns of impending death.

Daily ✦ Shadow
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: One creature in the burst
Effect: Until the end of your next extended rest, you always know the direction and approximate distance to the target. In addition, the target cannot become invisible to you.

Eyes Unseen

A useful power that has saved the lives of many an executioner, eyes unseen allows the user to peer through walls, around corners, and even through ceilings and floors to see what lies ahead. It creates a small, invisible sensor crafted by shadow magic that can appear within a small radius and pass visions back to the assassin. Many executioners use eyes unseen to search for guards, keep an eye on pursuers, or reveal traps and ambushes before walking into them.

Eyes Unseen — Assassin Utility 10

You conjure a sensor of shadow that appears nearby and allows you to see through walls and other barriers.

Encounter ✦ Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Choose a square within 5 squares of you, even a square on the other side of blocking terrain. Until the end of your next turn, you can see and hear from that square, as well as from your own.

Walk Through Shadow

When you use walk through shadow, you create a brief, flickering shadow that whisks you quickly from one place to another. Unlike some other teleportation abilities, walk through shadow can take the user into unknown places and allows him or her to bypass walls, doors, and other barriers with a blind jump.

Walk Through Shadow — Assassin Utility 10

A swirling mass of shadow surrounds you before transporting you instantaneously a short distance.

Encounter ✦ Shadow, Teleportation
Move Action Personal
Effect: You teleport up to 5 squares. You do not need line of sight to the destination space. If you try to teleport into a space that you cannot occupy, the teleportation is negated.

Paragon Executioner

Executioners who reach the paragon tier have proven themselves more than capable of carrying out assassinations (both clandestine and public) without being caught or killed themselves. For you, simple political assassinations and hired killings begin to lose their luster, because city watchmen or the bodyguards of local merchants rarely challenge your skills. Your abilities are better utilized stalking more powerful quarry—those that threaten the entire world, if not the planes themselves.

Paragon Path: Guild Executioner

At 11th level, your executioner takes on a paragon path, typically the guild executioner paragon path. As a member of a powerful guild, you are afforded training and education in the killing arts that surpasses the prowess of most who work alone. You learn secret fighting techniques, gain access to experts in the field of poison use, and rise through the ranks of your guild as your skills progress. Perhaps one day you will even challenge the Grandfather of Assassins for control of the guild.

Prerequisite: Only an executioner can take this paragon path.

EXECUTIONER PARAGON TIER

| Total XP | Level | Feats Known | Class Features and Powers |
|---|---|---|---|
| 26,000 | 11 | +1 | Ability score increaseBlindside [guild executioner]Devastating Assassination [guild executioner]Executioner's Action [guild executioner] |

| 119,000 | 19 | — | Improved Poison Use |
| 143,000 | 20 | +1 | Poisoner's Secrets [guild executioner] |

Level 11: Ability Score Increase

As if to prepare you for the paragon tier, your body and mind gird themselves against future threats by making you more formidable in every way.

Benefit: Each of your ability scores increases by 1.

Level 11: Blindside

Guild executioner paragon path feature

A key trait taught to you by your guild is how to take advantage of the ignorance of your enemies. While hidden, you can remain so still that, when your strike comes, your enemies have no time to react or to defend themselves. Though truly blindsiding your enemies is difficult (requiring them to move within striking distance of you without seeing you), good luck and a good hiding place can often make your assassinations easier than ever.

Benefit: If you are hidden from your enemies at the start of an encounter, you gain a +4 bonus to your first attack roll during the encounter.

Level 11: Devastating Assassination

Guild executioner paragon path feature

Your guild has taught you its secret techniques for executions. These secrets may be as simple as the angle of a blade or as complex as a long period of preparation before the execution takes place. Regardless of the actual form it takes, this knowledge increases the potency of your deadliest attack.

Benefit: When you use assassin's strike, increase the extra damage it deals by 2d10.

Level 11: Executioner's Action

Guild executioner paragon path feature

For you, the span of time when your killing blow streaks toward your enemy's body seems to slow to a crawl. That crucial instant passes in the blink of an eye for your enemies and allies, but you perceive each fraction of it in full clarity that lets you guide your strike to where it will do the most harm.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to make an attack and you roll a 1, 2, or 3 on any damage die associated with that attack (including extra damage from assassin's strike or critical hit dice), that die instead deals 4 damage.

Level 12: Daring Escape

Guild executioner paragon path feature
When the kill is made, you need to be prepared to bolt away at a moment's notice. Your guildmasters taught you a special slaying technique that uses the momentum of your last, deadly strike to propel yourself away. Before your enemies even know that their ally is dead, you are already speeding out of sight.

Benefit: You gain the daring escape power.

Daring Escape — Guild Executioner Utility 12

You transfer the momentum of a killing blow into a rapid dash that leaves remaining enemies far behind.

Encounter ✦ Martial
Free Action — Personal
Trigger: You reduce an enemy to 0 hit points.
Effect: You shift up to twice your speed. During the shift, you can climb and jump, with a +5 power bonus to Athletics checks to do so.

Level 13: Improved Death Attack

Death comes swiftly to the wounded, and even more swiftly when you are involved. Your ability to end the life of a wounded enemy grows to the point that even those who don't yet feel truly endangered can fall to your attack.

Benefit: When you hit an enemy with a melee or a ranged attack that deals damage, you can choose to reduce the enemy to 0 hit points automatically if it has 20 hit points or fewer after the damage is dealt.

Level 14: Ability Score Increase

Your continued cultivation of the dark forces within you enhances your physical and mental resilience.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 15: Improved Poison Use

As you gain greater experience in the wider world, you also come across rare substances that can enhance the effectiveness of your poisons. Through study and experimentation, you learn to create dangerous toxins that draw their potency from exotic creatures and plants.

Benefit: You learn the recipe for a 15th-level assassin poison of your choice. When you prepare vials of assassin poison during an extended rest, one of them can be up to 15th level.

Black Lotus Extract

This powder is derived from the legendary black lotus flower. The effect is devastating when this substance comes in contact with a creature for more than a few seconds. Black lotuses bloom only once every three years, and it is during that time that the flowers can be harvested to produce this toxic oil. Black lotuses grow only in deep swamps, along shadowed riverbanks, and at the edges of caves where they are sheltered from direct light.

Black Lotus Extract — Level 15

This thick oil is dark blue, though it becomes invisible when applied to a weapon or object.

Assassin Poison
Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You apply the poison to your melee weapon or five pieces of your ammunition. Until the end of the encounter, when you hit a creature with a weapon attack using the poisoned item, the creature takes 8 extra poison damage.
Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You apply the poison to a handheld object. Within the next hour, the next creature other than you to hold or wear the object for more than 1 minute takes 40 poison damage.

Insanity Mist

Another poison designed to affect the mind as much as the body, insanity mist is a liquid that is only potent when made airborne and then inhaled. A liquid is distilled from the brains of mind flayer thralls (or mind flayers themselves, which produce a much higher quantity of poison) and combined with several kinds of mold spores to deliver the poison straight to the brain. Insanity mist begins eroding the consciousness of the victim almost instantly.

Insanity Mist — Level 15

This deep purple liquid swirls with milky colors that sometimes seem to resolve into disturbing images.

Assassin Poison
Power (Consumable ✦ Implement, Poison, Psychic): Standard Action. Effect: Make the following attack:
Ranged 5
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3d10 + Dexterity modifier poison damage, and ongoing 10 psychic damage (save ends).
First Failed Saving Throw: The ongoing damage increases to 15.
Miss: Half damage, and ongoing 5 psychic damage (save ends).
Special: If the DM allows it, a creature reduced to 0 hit points by this poison is not killed, but is instead driven permanently insane.
Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Standard Action. You place the insanity mist in a closed container, such as a chest or a jewelry box. Make the attack above against the first creature to open the container within the next hour.

Lich Dust To those uneducated in the art of poison crafting, lich dust is often believed to be a powder made from the ground-up bones of liches. This belief is only partially correct; in truth, lich dust is made from a combination of pulverized bones taken from a variety of undead creatures (liches among them) mixed with other alchemical and natural substances. Lich dust retains some of the necromantic power that once animated the bones it is made from, which can drain the energy and spirit of creatures that consume it or are injured by a weapon coated with the poison.

Lich Dust Level 15

This white powder looks to be the residue of ground-up bones.

Assassin Poison

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You apply the poison to your melee weapon or one piece of your ammunition. During this encounter, the next creature you hit with a weapon attack using the poisoned item takes 10 extra poison damage, and it is weakened (save ends).

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You pour the poison into a drink or onto a plate of food. Within the next hour, the first creature to consume the food or drink is weakened until the end of its next extended rest.

Level 16: Vital Strike

Guild executioner paragon path feature

In your pursuit of a greater ability to execute your targets quickly and efficiently, one of your fields of study is the anatomies of various types of creatures. You have found about more than just the natural races—you've learned where to strike demons to inflict the most damage, where the weak points of angels can be found, and where an archon's armor leaves tiny but dangerous gaps.

Benefit: Your at-will weapon attack powers deal half damage on a miss.

Level 16: Untraceable Step

When you use untraceable step, you use the power of shadow magic to create a veil around yourself that hides you from the sight of others. This veil is short-lived, but it does not waver even when you engage in strenuous activity. Many assassins use this power as a means of both infiltration and escape, either slipping past the eyes of guards on the way to an assassination or vanishing from sight long enough to get free of the chaos that follows a killing.

Benefit: You gain the untraceable step power.

Untraceable Step Assassin Utility 16

The air wavers for a moment before a veil of invisibility covers you from head to toe.

Encounter ✦ Shadow
Move Action Personal

Effect: You become invisible and move up to your speed. You remain invisible until the end of your next turn.

Level 17: Shadow Coffin

Those who hire executioners usually want proof of a target's death. The shadow coffin power is an application of shadow magic that allows the executioner to bring back more than just a simple token of the assassination; it retrieves the entire body of the intended target. Even in situations when no proof of death is necessary, an executioner might use shadow coffin to quickly and expertly dispose of an inconvenient corpse. This is especially important when authorities are investigating nearby.

Benefit: You gain the shadow coffin power.

Shadow Coffin Assassin Utility

You trap the target of your assassination in a small object, which keeps the body out of sight until you are ready to release it.

Encounter ✦ Shadow
Free Action Melee 1

Trigger: You kill an adjacent creature and don't already have a corpse trapped by this power.

Target: The creature's corpse

Effect: The target disappears and is trapped in a non-magical object of your choice on your person (such as a handheld mirror, a small gem, or a piece of jewelry). The target remains trapped until you release it or until the object is destroyed. To release the target into an adjacent square, you must hold the object and concentrate for 1 minute.

Level 18: Ability Score Increase

Seemingly, there is no end to how much you can hone your abilities by surrendering to, and taking control of, the power of the dark.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 19: Improved Poison Use

Your mastery of the arts of making and using poison continues to become stronger. Your repertoire of toxins is more debilitating than ever before.

Benefit: You learn the recipe for another 15th-level assassin poison of your choice. When you prepare vials of assassin poison during an extended rest, two of them can be 15th level.

Level 20: Poisoner's Secrets

Guild executioner paragon path feature

When you reach the height of your power within your assassins' guild, you become privy to the secrets and mysteries that your guild's poisonmasters have held for many years. You not only learn the secret to crafting the deadly poison known as wyvern venom, you also learn how to mix your poisons more efficiently so that you can craft more of them in the same amount of time.

Benefit: You learn the recipe for the assassin poison wyvern venom. During an extended rest, you can prepare a 20th-level assassin poison that does not count as one of the poisons you can normally prepare.

Wyvern Venom

The secret to creating this rare and potent toxin is closely guarded by the most powerful assassins' guilds. Versatile in its application, it not only does injury to a creature's body, it rots away flesh and bone, melts sinew, and boils the blood. Even after the initial shock of the effect of the venom is over, the pain and damage inflicted by the poison linger, making it difficult for the body to heal. The base of the poison is the venom from an actual wyvern, though the poison used by executioners is the result of a complex alchemical process that increases its potency tenfold.

Wyvern Venom Level 20

This poison is far more dangerous than that delivered by the sting of a wyvern itself, as a result of the alchemical process that produces this inky-black liquid.

Assassin Poison

Power (Consumable ✦ Necrotic, Poison): Minor Action. You apply the poison to your melee weapon or one piece of your ammunition. During this encounter, the next creature you hit with a weapon attack using the poisoned item takes 25 extra necrotic and poison damage.

Power (Consumable ✦ Necrotic, Poison): Minor Action. You pour the poison into a drink or onto a plate of food. Within the next hour, the first creature to consume the food or drink takes necrotic and poison damage equal to half of its bloodied value, and it cannot regain hit points until the end of its next extended rest.

Power (Consumable ✦ Necrotic, Poison): Minor Action. You apply the poison to a single handheld object. Within the next hour, the first creature other than you to hold or wear the object for more than 1 minute takes necrotic and poison damage equal to half of its bloodied value, and it cannot regain hit points until the end of its next extended rest.

"Long ago I realized all life was illusion and that the only truth in this world was death. Accident or malady, death comes for us all. It was this truth that opened my eyes and revealed to me the path I was to walk and allowed me to offer up my soul for death's power. It was a trade I have never regretted and one that gives me the certainty that my mission is true. I kill, yes, but I kill because it is my fate."

—Rook

Epic Executioner

By the time you reach the epic tier, you are much more than a simple killer for hire: You are among the greatest assassins ever to have lived. Elemental princes watch over their shoulders for a sign that you might be lurking in their shadows, and the very whisper of your name sends chills through the courts of the fey.

When your executioner reaches 21st level, he or she takes on an epic destiny of your choice. This epic destiny represents the grand finale of your adventuring career, and like your paragon path, it grants a set of related features and powers.

EXECUTIONER EPIC TIER

| Total XP | Level | Feats Known | Class Features and Powers |
|---|---|---|---|
| 175,000 | 21 | +1 | Ability score increaseEpic destiny feature |
| 210,000 | 22 | +1 | Ignore barriers |
| 255,000 | 23 | – | Improved Death Attack |
| 310,000 | 24 | +1 | Ability score increaseEpic destiny feature |
| 375,000 | 25 | – | Improved Poison Use |
| 450,000 | 26 | +1 | Epic destiny feature |
| 550,000 | 27 | – | – |
| 675,000 | 28 | +1 | Ability score increase |
| 825,000 | 29 | – | Improved Poison Use |
| 1,000,000 | 30 | +1 | Epic destiny feature |

Level 21: Ability Score Increase

Your entrance into the epic tier is heralded by a rush of vitality and clarity. You are now stronger, wiser, and even more unassailable.

Benefit: Each of your ability scores increases by 1.

Level 21: Epic Destiny Feature

As you enter the epic tier, your final destiny comes into focus. Perhaps you are fated to save the world from some great evil, or maybe fate has dictated that you must fight against a god. The destiny you pursue shapes you just as your actions shape the cosmos.

Benefit: You gain a feature associated with your epic destiny.

Level 22: Ignore Barriers

Executioners often receive assignments to assassinate powerful individuals that cordon themselves off from the world behind walls of stone and gates of steel. This power allows you to use shadow magic to cause walls, doors, and other objects to temporarily fade from existence when you approach them, allowing you to pass through barriers that would keep other creatures out.

Benefit: You gain the ignore barriers power.

Ignore Barriers Assassin Utility 22

Your physical form becomes as unstable as a shadow, allowing you to step through physical barriers with ease.

Daily ✦ Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You are phasing until the end of the encounter.

Level 23: Improved Death Attack

Your gift for executing the weak and dying allows you to put down creatures of greater power quickly and without a mess. Your attacks rarely leave your enemies at death's door; instead, they escort your enemies through that door into death's parlor.

Benefit: When you hit an enemy with a melee or a ranged attack that deals damage, you can choose to reduce the target to 0 hit points automatically if it has 30 hit points or fewer after the damage is dealt.

Level 24: Ability Score Increase

Yet again, the darkness in your soul works physical and mental changes within you.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 24: Epic Destiny Feature

Your place in the cosmic order becomes cemented as you gain still more power. At this point, fate seems to bend and weave to ensure your survival.

Benefit: You gain a feature associated with your epic destiny.

Level 25: Improved Poison Use

Like any other field of learning, mastery of poisons comes only after a long period of practice and diligent studying. As you approach the apex of knowledge in the poisoning arts, you learn how to manipulate poisons extracted from the bodies of powerful beings such as angels, basilisks, and dragons.

Benefit: You learn the recipe for a 25th-level assassin poison of your choice. When you prepare vials of assassin poison during an extended rest using your Poison Use feature, one can be up to 25th level and two can be up to 15th level.

Dark Reaver Powder

Said to come from the pulverized bodies of angels devoted to gods of death, dark reaver powder has the ability to knock a creature unconscious for a long time. Assassins use dark reaver powder to get enemies out of the way without killing them or to send a message not to cross the wrong person. When applied in powder form to a weapon, the poison seeps into the blood and produces a diluted effect that renders enemies woozy for a short period of time.

Dark Reaver Powder Level 25

Assassin Poison

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You apply the poison to your melee weapon or five pieces of your ammunition. Until the end of the encounter, when you hit a creature with a weapon attack using the poisoned item, the creature takes 10 extra poison damage, and it is dazed until the end of your next turn.

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You pour the poison into a drink or onto a plate of food. Within the next hour, the first creature to consume the food or drink falls unconscious (save ends). The creature can make a saving throw against this unconsciousness only at the end of an extended rest and does so with a -5 penalty.

Dragon Bile

Dragon bile is one of the most sought-after substances harvested from dragons. It can be made into a deadly poison that can slay a person in a matter of minutes. The dragon bile used by assassins is among the most potent, and is harvested from the bodies of powerful and ancient dragons slain by adventurers. A brief touch of dragon bile can make it impossible for a creature to move or do anything else, while prolonged exposure is almost always fatal.

Dragon Bile Level 25

Harvested from the bodies of ancient dead dragons, this poison is one of the most lethal.

Assassin Poison

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You apply the poison to a melee weapon or one piece of your ammunition. During this encounter, the next creature you hit with a weapon attack using the poisoned item falls prone, and it is stunned until the end of your next turn.

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Minor Action. You apply the poison to a single handheld object. Within the next hour, the first creature other than you to hold or wear the object for more than 1 minute dies, but only if the creature is your level or lower.

Eye of Basilisk Powder

Among the rarest of poisons used by assassins, eye of basilisk powder is exceptionally potent in minute quantities. The eyes of actual basilisks (harvested at great expense by adventurers) are dried out and ground into a powder that, when properly prepared, can turn its victims to stone. Assassins put small amounts of the powder into alchemical pellets that explode when broken to release a small cloud of the poison around the victim.

Eye of Basilisk Powder Level 25

This unremarkable white powder harnesses the petrifying ability of the basilisk.

Assassin Poison

Power (Consumable ✦ Implement, Poison): Standard Action. Effect: You make the following attack.
Ranged 5
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 6d10 + Dexterity modifier poison damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The target is slowed (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target is instead immobilized (save ends). Second Failed Saving Throw: The target is instead petrified (save ends).

Power (Consumable ✦ Poison): Standard Action. You place the poison in a closed container, such as a chest or a jewelry box. Make the attack above against the first creature to open the container within the next hour.

Level 26: Epic Destiny Feature

Your foes' worst attacks cannot sway you from the great goal that lies before you. When all seems lost, you have the strength and determination to deny death and fight on.

Benefit: You gain a feature (typically a utility power) associated with your epic destiny.

Level 28: Ability Score Increase

Your destiny is not yet fulfilled, and you need to be stronger and sharper to stand up to the challenges that await.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 29: Improved Poison Use

If there's anyone in the world better at the poisoner's art than you, it's only because that individual hasn't crossed paths with you yet.

Benefit: You learn the recipe for another 25th-level assassin poison of your choice. When you prepare vials of assassin poison during an extended rest using your Poison Use feature, two of them can be up to 25th level and one can be up to 15th level.

Level 30: Epic Destiny Feature

You have achieved the absolute pinnacle of your abilities. On the verge of facing your destiny, you gain one final edge that could spell the difference between ultimate victory and utter defeat.

Benefit: You gain a feature associated with your epic destiny.

RON LEMEN

Paladin

The world knows paladins to be shining paragons who champion lofty ideals such as compassion, nobility, sacrifice, and valor. Such virtuous figures are symbols to the common people, icons from which they draw the strength and courage to stand fast against the encroaching darkness. Yet in every light a shadow lurks—the brightness of these noble warriors is equaled by the shadow spreading from their sinister counterparts.

The type of paladin you can create with this book is the blackguard.

Blackguard

Divine Striker: You are a warrior who focuses divine power through a dark vice. You wield this vice as a weapon, using it to slay any who oppose you.
Key Abilities: Strength, Charisma

Blackguards are shadow warriors who embrace the power of what most people consider to be a vice or a dark emotion. A blackguard's vice becomes a central focus for that individual's divine power. Dominance and fury are among the forces that blackguards cultivate to fuel their might.

Because malevolent deities and wicked forces in the cosmos are more likely to hold a vice in esteem, most blackguards are villains. Nevertheless, blackguards who cling to higher ideals do exist. A heroic blackguard might be born when a divine soldier who tries to exemplify virtue cannot control his or her anger or some other base emotion. Such blackguards are referred to as fallen paladins. Other heroic blackguards cleave to a vice that a non-evil religion or deity promotes as an asset, or they have learned by necessity to turn their negative tendencies into a divine focus so that they can lead productive lives.

The power of vice is alluring because it offers fewer restrictions than virtue does. Though the power comes easily, a blackguard always faces the worst temptations of his or her vice, as well as that of other negative emotions that echo the vice. Scruples can be hard to maintain in the face of such a lure. A truly heroic blackguard can never give in and take the easy path.

Heroic blackguards have a hard road to travel. Their truly immoral counterparts form orders that actively oppose virtuous knights and cavaliers. Whether or not a specific blackguard is a member of such a dark order, those same knights and cavaliers rarely understand that a person can channel divine power through a vice without becoming debased. The common people rightly fear all blackguards the same way they fear the black knights of legend. A blackguard who uses the divine power of the dreaded vices to combat evil still has difficulty finding a wide array of allies. He or she rarely enjoys a hero's accolades.

The most common blackguard vices are domination and fury.

Blackguard Traits

Hit Points: You start with hit points equal to 15 + your Constitution score. You gain 6 hit points each time you gain a level.

Bonuses to Defenses: +1 to Fortitude, +1 to Reflex, +1 to Will

Healing Surges per Day: 10 + your Constitution modifier

Armor Proficiencies: Cloth, leather, hide, chainmail, scale, plate; light shield, heavy shield

Weapon Proficiencies: Simple melee, military melee; simple ranged, military ranged

Implement Proficiencies: Holy symbol

Class Skills: Arcana (Int), Athletics (Str), Bluff (Cha), Endurance (Con), History (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Religion (Int), Thievery (Dex)

Trained Skills: Four from the list of class skills

Creating a Blackguard

This section walks you through the steps of creating a blackguard. As you make choices at each step, consider how those choices relate to your character's personality, backstory, and goals.

Consult the three class tables, one for each tier of play, for a summary of what you gain as you advance in level.

Vices

Each blackguard selects one vice to embrace above all others, but only evil blackguards embrace all vices as a way of life. Two vices, domination and fury, are included in this book.

Domination Blackguards of domination demand submission from their enemies. They impose order by force whenever necessary, crushing resistance and making others do their bidding. Surrender on the blackguard's terms is the only hope for any foe. Those who fail to capitulate can expect to be crushed and displayed as bloody examples of what it means to oppose the blackguard's resolve. In the hands of evil, dominance becomes tyranny.

See page 46 for the features and powers associated with the vice of domination.

Kantos, human blackguard

JIM NELSON

Fury A blackguard of fury channels raw anger into the violence required for victory. In battle, blackguards of fury are wild killers, impulsive, bloodthirsty, and destructive. They answer every offense or injury with overwhelming retaliation, and their enemies receive little mercy. Allies can expect a blackguard of fury to rush to the forefront of any armed conflict and to bring foes to ruin as quickly as possible. Evil blackguards of fury allow the vice to rule them entirely, not just on the battlefield.

See page 47 for the features and powers associated with the vice of fury.

Race

Choose your race. Half-orc and human are particularly good choices for a blackguard.

Half-Orc The half-orc's untamed and wrathful spirit is eminently suited to the blackguard's path. Born from two worlds yet at home in neither, a half-orc blackguard knows the loner's road. A few half-orc blackguards temper their rage to follow a hero's path.

These higher-minded dark champions are still furious warriors, but they use their dread powers to purge the world of the evil that produced them and the callousness that isolated them. In this way, they raise the ire of dark powers, isolating themselves even further. They are agents of destruction who partner with like-minded companions. Among such allies, a half-orc blackguard cares even less how others perceive him or her.

Half-orc blackguards find Kord to be a fine patron. The god of storms respects the power of fury as long as it isn't used for wanton destruction or cowardly bullying.

Human Their versatility and adaptability, as well as innate toughness, serve humans well on the lonely path of the blackguard. They can be strong enough to channel the power of fury and magnetic enough to enforce their dominance. Their desire for power leads them to seek it in any medium, including tapping into the power of the dreaded vices.

Blackguards who used vice for power without succumbing to wickedness were respected in fallen Nerath. In the empire's final days, blackguards such as Sir Saemus Altann thought that King Elidyr had grown complacent, too lax in enforcing the land's laws. Sir Saemus, without anger or malice, urged the king to crush the squabbling factions to wring from the kingdom the resources it needed to counter the coming threat. Elidyr balked. Some say it was the influence of cavaliers, softened by their virtue, that made the king hesitate to assert his dominance. Sir Saemus followed his king on the final and fateful charge that led to the sundering of the empire, and there he perished. His legacy lives on in the Order of the Closed Gauntlet.

Human blackguards favor temples that revere Erathis, Kord, and the Raven Queen. Although morality might demand the exclusion of evil deities from their worship, some human blackguards look to Bane for inspiration.

Ability Scores

Determine your ability scores. A blackguard needs to be able to fight effectively in melee, so make Strength your highest score. Blackguards control their dark magic through force of personality and belief in the self, so Charisma should be your next highest score. No blackguard can afford to ignore Constitution, since that ability grants extra hit points and healing surges.

You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1 each when you reach certain levels: 4th, 8th, 14th, 18th, 24th, and 28th. In addition, all your ability scores increase by 1 at 11th and 21st levels.

Although the abilities discussed above are of primary import, your Dexterity, Wisdom, and Intelligence scores can help shape your character's personality and history. Dexterity's connection to Stealth and Thievery suggests a possible criminal past. You might have stolen into the Ghostflame Tower and made off with forbidden knowledge. A high Wisdom, on the other hand, suggests an association with a religious order affiliated with blackguards. You might have been raised as an orphan in a monastery dedicated to a dark god, and if the deity is evil, you fled but took your power with you. A high Intelligence could point to an academic past. Perhaps your scholarly pursuits led you to question the value of virtue in the face of overwhelming evil.

Skills

At 1st level, choose four trained skills from the following list of class skills: Arcana, Athletics, Bluff, Endurance, History, Intimidate, Religion, and Thievery.

Blackguards veer far from other paladins in skill choices. You might devote time to Arcana to help you understand the dark forces at your disposal. You have more use for threats and spun truths than for niceties, so Bluff and Intimidate can help you dominate situations when armaments are of little use. Endurance is helpful on your path, since you're likely to find little welcome in civilized lands. Thievery is helpful for reaching guarded locations, bypassing traps, and manipulating objects unseen.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR

Sibarra, drow blackguard

All class skill choices can reflect your character's background. Familiarity with History could explain why you see the value in drawing power from vice. Perhaps you learned the truth of the end days of Nerath. Religion might indicate ecclesiastic indoctrination. Maybe you were a guard in a good-aligned temple and fell from grace after succumbing to temptation or being overcome by disillusionment.

Class Features and Powers

Note which class features and powers you gain at 1st level, as specified on the Blackguard Heroic Tier table on page 37. Also note the powers and class features you gain from the vice you chose for your character.

Feats

Choose one feat at 1st level. You gain an additional feat at every even-numbered level, plus a feat at 11th and 21st levels.

Consider selecting feats from the enduring stamina, quick reaction, and weapon mastery categories. Enhancing your fighting skill with your favored weapon gives you a decided edge in battle. Your task as a striker is to deal damage to your foes, so Weapon Focus might be a good choice for you. Reacting quickly to the start of hostilities and being able to move where you need to be quickly are boons, so consider Improved Initiative or Eager Advance. Your Armor Class and other defenses are likely to be good, so you needn't worry about being alone on the battlefield as much as other strikers might. Improved Defenses can still be of benefit, since you're in the thick of every clash.

Your heavy armor and shield are great in most combat situations, but they can cause mobility problems. Take a look at Armor Finesse and Shield Finesse if you'd like to have an easier time navigating unusual terrain. After that, Heavy Armor Agility eliminates the last hindrance your heavy armor imposes.

If you're interested in emphasizing your vice or your dark powers, you might consider divine devotion feats or shadow feats from this book. Disciple of Strength might emphasize your rising fury. Feats in the ghostwise category show your connection to shadow, as does Born of Shadow.

Equipment

You have proficiency with the following types of armor: cloth, leather, hide, chainmail, scale, and plate. You can also use light shields and heavy shields. You have proficiency with the following weapon types: simple melee, military melee, simple ranged, and military ranged. You also have proficiency with holy symbols, although you typically channel your divine magic through a weapon.

You start with 100 gp to buy your starting equipment. Your abilities are highlighted when you stand at the front of any battle and draw attacks. As a result, you should purchase the best armor and shield you can find, most likely plate armor and a heavy shield. One-handed weapons such as the flail or the longsword free your other hand for your shield.

Flail Less accurate than the longsword, the flail makes up for its unwieldy quality by delivering greater damage. Consider this weapon if you team up with another melee warrior, so you can flank opponents and rip them apart.

Longsword With its great accuracy and reasonable damage, the longsword is a staple of many paladins' arsenals. If you are the group's sole melee warrior, the longsword should be your go-to weapon.

Defenses and Hit Points

Calculate your defenses using your ability modifiers and the bonus for your character's armor. In addition, you gain a +1 bonus to Fortitude, Reflex, and Will.

You start with hit points equal to 15 + your Constitution score. You gain 6 hit points each time you gain a level. You have a number of healing surges per day equal to 10 + your Constitution modifier.

Alignment and Final Details

At this point, you should have all the mechanical details of your character determined. There are a few more decisions to make.

Pick an alignment. See the description of your chosen vice (domination, page 46, or fury, page 47) for how your vice restricts your alignment choices.

Finally, check with your DM to see where you are from in the campaign setting, the people you already know, and what your current situation is. It also helps to spend a few minutes working out how or if you know the other players' characters.

Heroic Blackguard

In the heroic tier, you learn to combine fighting skill and divine magic into a potent combination. Your first efforts at using the essence of shadow to improve your prowess are successful and hint at greater, and darker, things to come.

BLACKGUARD HEROIC TIER

| Total XP | Level | Feats Known | Class Features and Powers |
|---|---|---|---|
| 0 | 1 | 1 | Dark MenaceDread smiteShroud of shadowSpirit of ViceVengeance strikeVice at-will power |
| 1,000 | 2 | +1 | Vice's reward |
| 2,250 | 3 | – | Extra dread smite |
| 3,750 | 4 | +1 | Ability score increaseServant of vice |
| 5,500 | 5 | – | Daily power |
| 7,500 | 6 | +1 | Utility power |
| 10,000 | 7 | – | Improved Shroud of Shadow |
| 13,000 | 8 | +1 | Ability score increase |
| 16,500 | 9 | – | Daily power |
| 20,500 | 10 | +1 | Utility power |

Level 1: Dark Menace

You are a warrior first and foremost, demonstrating your battle prowess through complex fighting maneuvers and weapon mastery. Even so, you are unconstrained by cumbersome notions of virtue, and you readily exploit any advantage available. You've found that the dark vice growing in your soul is a fighting boon. You draw on this darkness, spreading it to your enemies when they are vulnerable.

Benefit: Whenever you make a weapon attack against an enemy granting combat advantage to you, that enemy takes extra damage equal to your Charisma modifier.

Level 1: Dread Smite

Filled with the strength of your convictions, you call upon divine power as you smite a foe. That power coalesces around your weapon as you strike, introducing your enemy to the power of your vice even before your attack connects.

Benefit: You gain the dread smite power.

Dread Smite — Paladin Attack

The dark coldness at the heart of your vice makes your strike all the more crippling.

Encounter ✦ Cold, Divine, Necrotic, Shadow
Free Action — Personal
Trigger: You target an enemy with an at-will weapon attack power.
Effect: The target takes cold and necrotic damage equal to 2 + your Charisma modifier. If the triggering attack hits, the target also takes ongoing 5 cold and necrotic damage (save ends).
Level 7: 4 + Charisma modifier cold and necrotic damage.
Level 17: 7 + Charisma modifier cold and necrotic damage, and ongoing 10 cold and necrotic damage (save ends).
Level 27: 10 + Charisma modifier cold and necrotic damage, and ongoing 15 cold and necrotic damage (save ends).

Level 1: Shroud of Shadow

Shadow rises at your beck and call. You can command it to sheathe you in a protective swirl.

Benefit: You gain the shroud of shadow power.

Shroud of Shadow — Paladin Utility

A misty cloud of gloom swirls about you, confounding your enemies and fortifying your resolve.

Encounter ✦ Shadow
Minor Action — Personal
Effect: You gain partial concealment until the end of your next turn. You also gain 5 temporary hit points.
Level 11: 10 temporary hit points.
Level 21: 15 temporary hit points.

Level 1: Spirit of Vice

Your devotion to your vice rewards you with a new level of power.

Benefit: You gain a benefit associated with your vice (domination, page 46, or fury, page 47).

Level 1: Vengeance Strike

The violence of battle fuels your commitment to your vice. You draw strength from the carnage around you, fighting relentlessly against all opponents.

Benefit: You gain the vengeance strike power.

Vengeance Strike — Paladin Attack 1

As your enemies press in upon you, your soul is filled with vengeance, and you use that strength to lash out.

At-Will ✦ Divine, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action — Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage. You gain a power bonus to the damage roll equal to twice the number of enemies adjacent to you (maximum of +8).
Level 21: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.

Level 1: Vice At-Will Power

Your vice grants you access to the power of shadow, coloring your most common assault.

Benefit: You gain an at-will attack power associated with your vice (domination, page 46, or fury, page 47).

Level 2: Vice's Reward

You are a living expression of your vice, and this dedication to the dark side of existence has its rewards. When you need it, your devotion provides a lift to your spirits.

Benefit: You gain the vice's reward power.

Vice's Reward — Paladin Utility 2

Your vice buoys your heart, and you revel in the power it provides.

Encounter ✦ Shadow
Minor Action — Personal

Effect: You gain 5 temporary hit points, and you can make a saving throw. In addition, you gain a +2 power bonus to all defenses until the end of your next turn.
Level 11: 10 temporary hit points.
Level 21: 15 temporary hit points.

Level 3: Extra Dread Smite

Drawn deeper into the power of shadow, you learn to call on it more frequently.

Benefit: You gain one more use of dread smite per encounter, but you can use it only once per turn.

Level 4: Ability Score Increase

Shadow is becoming so ingrained within you that it infuses your essential nature and makes you more than you were before.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 4: Servant of Vice

The vice at the core of your being is strong, and it seems to have a will of its own, calling you toward darker deeds. You can now call on your vice to manifest in physical form, according to your concept of its appearance. The creature might wear any number of different forms, such as that of a black dog, a rat, a raven, or something even more monstrous or sinister.

It is part of you, so it obeys your commands, but it is also part of the vice that exists outside you. The nature of your vice transcends you into a universal principle. Therefore, your servant can tap into hidden truths.

Benefit: You gain the servant of vice power.

Servant of Vice — Paladin Utility 4

Acrid smoke disperses to reveal a creature called from the vice that dwells in your heart.

Daily ✦ Conjuration, Shadow
Minor Action — Close burst 2

Effect: You conjure a Small servant in an unoccupied square in the burst. The servant lasts until the end of the encounter. The servant occupies its square and can be attacked. Its defenses equal yours, and it is destroyed if it is hit by an attack. Creatures other than you grant combat advantage while adjacent to the servant.

You can give the servant the following commands.

Move Action (Teleportation): The servant teleports up to 6 squares.

Minor Action: The servant tries to answer a question you pose to it. The DM determines a DC for the question, and you roll a d20 and add 7 + one-half your level. For every daily magic item power sacrificed by you or an ally within 5 squares of the servant, the servant gains a +5 bonus to the check. You can take this minor action a number of times per day equal to your Charisma modifier.

Level 5: Daily Power

You channel divine magic into your weapon attacks. Shadow's hold on you twists that energy, warping it into a scourge against your foes.

Benefit: You gain a new paladin daily attack power of your level or lower.

Dark Majesty

Your imposing presence is too intense to be ignored. Others bow to your commands and leap at your orders. Using this to your advantage, you can turn those who stand against you into your unwitting pawns, binding them to your terrible authority for a time.

Dark Majesty — Paladin Attack 5

Your strike worms its way into your enemy's mind, turning it against its erstwhile allies.

Daily ✦ Charm, Divine, Psychic, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action — Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Will

Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier psychic damage, and you slide the target up to 2 squares. One enemy adjacent to the target at the end of the slide then takes 10 damage.

Miss: Half damage, and you can slide the target 1 square. One enemy adjacent to the target at the end of the slide then takes 5 damage.

Frenzying Smite

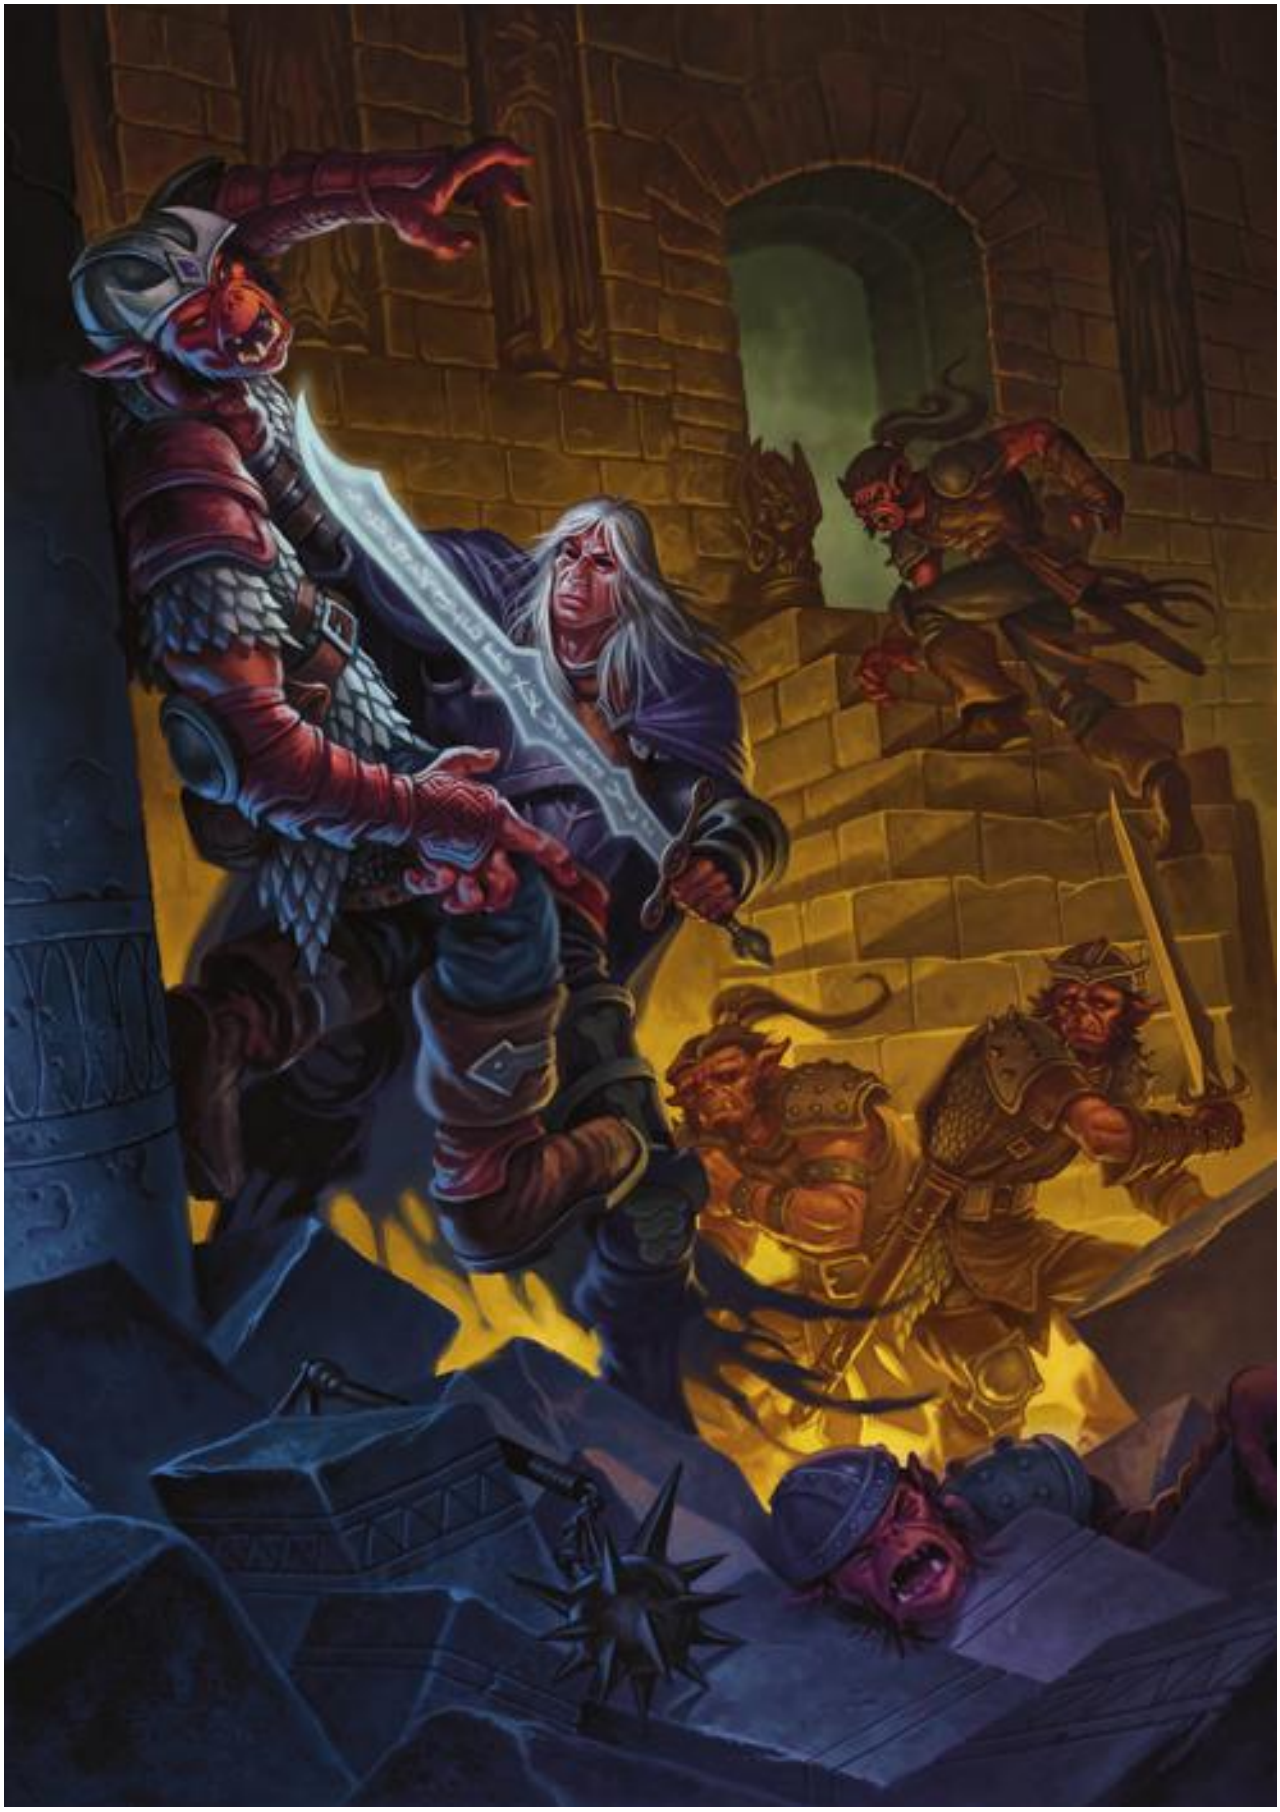
When you release divine energy into your strike, you lose control. Your raw ferocity overpowers your enemy, driving it back. You follow, heedless of any threats.



JIM NELSON

Kantos skewers the hobgoblin chief while the others think twice about pressing their attack

Frenzying Smite — Paladin Attack 5

Your anger gets the better of you, lending weight to your strike, driving you after the fleeing foe, and blinding you to danger.

Daily ✦ Divine, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 4[W] + Strength modifier damage, and you push the target up to 2 squares. You then shift up to 3 squares to a square adjacent to the target.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: You grant combat advantage until the start of your next turn.

Level 6: Utility Power

The vice you carry in your soul allows you to transform yourself into an even more effective fighting machine.

Benefit: You gain a new paladin utility power of your level or lower.

Aspect of Domination You promise pain and suffering to your enemies, compelling them to flee before your presence.

Aspect of Domination — Paladin Utility 6

You radiate crushing dread so powerful that your enemies cannot bear to be near you.

Daily ✦ Fear, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, when you hit any enemy with an at-will melee attack, you also push that target up to a number of squares equal to your Charisma modifier.

Aspect of Ferocity You surrender to your anger and become fury incarnate. Your wrath adds strength to your attacks, and the more enemies you face, the more dangerous you become.

Aspect of Ferocity — Paladin Utility 6

The blood of wounded foes feeds your anger, empowering your blows.

Daily ✦ Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, your melee weapon attacks deal 1[W] extra damage when you are adjacent to at least one bloodied creature.

Level 7: Improved Shroud of Shadow

Your connection to the realm of shadow deepens, fortifying your cloaking ability.

Benefit: Your shroud of shadow power gains an additional effect associated with your vice (domination, page 46, or fury, page 47).

Level 8: Ability Score Increase

You are long accustomed now to the darkness within you, and your body and mind become more formidable.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 9: Daily Power

The more you draw on the mingled divine and shadow energy that powers your strikes, the more easily the power comes to you. You can shape it to devastating effect, bringing a battle to a swift conclusion.

Benefit: You gain a new paladin daily attack power of your level or lower.

Death Angel You assume the aspect of a dark angel—winglike shadows extend from your back and skeletal features darken your face. You flow through your enemies' ranks, leaving destruction and fear in your wake.

Death Angel — Paladin Attack 9

You single out an enemy for punishment, adding confusion or fear for good measure. So ghastly is your visage that your foes make way.

Daily ✦ Divine, Fear, Necrotic, Shadow, Teleportation, Weapon
Standard Action Close blast 3
Target: One creature in the blast
Attack: Strength vs. Will
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier necrotic damage. The target chooses either to take a free action to move up to its speed to a square as far as possible away from you, or to become dazed (save ends).
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: You can teleport to an unoccupied square in the blast.

Spirit Harrow Combining shadow and divine magic to serve your needs grants you insight into the essential qualities that make up living creatures. With this prayer, you focus your weapon strike where your foes are most vulnerable—their spirits.

Spirit Harrow — Paladin Attack 9

Your weapon fades, becoming smoky and gray. It passes through flesh and armor to touch the animating spirit within.

Daily ✦ Divine, Psychic, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 1
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier psychic damage, and the target cannot shift or make opportunity attacks (save ends both).
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: If the target has 10 hit points or fewer, it is stunned until the end of your next turn.

Level 10: Utility Power

The shadowy forces coursing through you take on new aspects, insinuating decay into enemy wounds or granting relief at a price.

Benefit: You gain a new paladin utility power of your level or lower.

Deathly Aura

At your command, dark mist flows from your wounds and works its way into your enemies' injuries.

Deathly Aura — Paladin Utility 10

The spirit of death surrounds you, nipping at your foes as they are struck.

Daily ✦ Aura, Necrotic, Shadow
Minor Action — Personal

Effect: You activate an aura 1 that lasts until the end of the encounter. While you are bloodied, enemies in the aura take necrotic damage after they are hit by any attack. The damage equals your Charisma modifier.

Turn of the Dark Tide

The grim ethos that guides you can free you and your allies from debilitating effects, but at a price.

Turn of the Dark Tide — Paladin Utility 10

You whisper a dread word that lets you and your companions sacrifice health to shed an affliction.

Daily ✦ Shadow
Standard Action — Close burst 3
Target: You and each ally in the burst

Effect: Each target can take damage equal to one-half his or her level to make a saving throw with a +4 power bonus. The damage cannot be reduced in any way.

Paragon Blackguard

As you grow in power, the vice within you, already strong, takes a more prominent role. It begins to define your powers completely, and you must be strong to keep the vice's stain from affecting other aspects of your life.

Paragon Path: Grim Blackguard

At 11th level, your blackguard takes on a paragon path of your choice, typically the grim blackguard paragon path. You are a living embodiment of your chosen vice when you choose to be. Your powerful devotion to vice can strengthen its hold on you, allowing it to reach past the bounds you might want to place upon it. More care is required if you wish to be the one in control.

Prerequisite: Only a blackguard can take this paragon path.

BLACKGUARD PARAGON TIER

| Total XP | Level | Feats Known | Class Features and Powers |
|---|---|---|---|
| 26,000 | 11 | +1 | Ability score increaseGrim Blackguard's Action [grim blackguard]Vice's Strength [grim blackguard]Vice encounter power [grim blackguard] |
| 32,000 | 12 | +1 | Vice utility power [grim blackguard] |
| 39,000 | 13 | — | Extra dread smite |
| 47,000 | 14 | +1 | Ability score increase |
| 57,000 | 15 | — | Daily power |
| 69,000 | 16 | +1 | Dark Blessing [grim blackguard]Utility power |
| 83,000 | 17 | — | Dauntless presence |
| 99,000 | 18 | +1 | Ability score increase |
| 119,000 | 19 | — | Daily power |
| 143,000 | 20 | +1 | Vice daily power [grim blackguard] |

Level 11: Ability Score Increase

As if to prepare you for the paragon tier, your body and mind gird themselves against future threats by making you more formidable in every way.

Benefit: Each of your ability scores increases by 1.

Level 11: Grim Blackguard's Action

Grim blackguard paragon path feature

You usually retain control over the sinister impulses you experience, but when desperation pushes you to reach beyond your normal limits, your power over your vice can break.

Benefit: You gain a feature associated with your vice (domination, page 46, or fury, page 47).

Level 11: Vice's Strength

Grim blackguard paragon path feature

The vice darkening your soul is never far from your thoughts. It lends you strength when other forces threaten to overpower you.

Benefit: You gain a +2 bonus to saving throws and a +4 bonus to saving throws against fear effects.

Level 11: Vice Encounter Power

Grim blackguard paragon path feature
Combat reveals the depths to which your vice has taken hold. The temptation to draw on the darkness is great, since it offers immediate reward when your enemies assail you.

Benefit: You gain an encounter attack power associated with your vice (domination, page 46, or fury, page 47).

Level 12: Vice Utility Power

Grim blackguard paragon path feature
Vice can lead to evil, and evil often turns on itself. The blackguards of history knew that their power must unite their allies and underlings. You have gained the ability to turn your vice into a physical manifestation that instead unifies your allies.

Benefit: You gain a utility power associated with your vice (domination, page 46, or fury, page 47).

Level 13: Extra Dread Smite

Benefit: You gain one more use of dread smite per encounter, but you can still use it only once per turn.

Level 14: Ability Score Increase

Your continued cultivation of the dark forces within you enhances your physical and mental resilience.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 15: Daily Power

Temptation is a strain on your soul—the tighter your control over your vice, the more enthralling becomes the idea of giving in to it. Your sway over your vice, or your service to it, helps you bend divine shadow magic to your will.

Benefit: You can gain a new paladin daily attack power of your level or lower. If you do so, this new power must replace one of the daily attack powers you already have from your class (usually your lowest-level daily attack power).

Avatar of Slaughter

Mercy is weakness, compassion failure. Both are your enemies. Every contest is a chance to carve victory from the broken bodies of your foes. You do not falter or hesitate—because your opponents will not.

Avatar of Slaughter — Paladin Attack 15

Your skin turns stark white and your eyes blacken as you strike with a death shriek.

Daily ✦ Divine, Necrotic, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier necrotic damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: You gain the following benefits until the end of the encounter.
- ✦ You gain a +4 power bonus to damage rolls.
- ✦ The first time you hit an enemy with an attack on each of your turns, a second enemy adjacent to you takes 10 necrotic damage.

Avatar of Subjugation

Life is a struggle between the strong and the weak, between victors and victims. You are a champion, never surrendering, never conceding defeat. You can draw blood from your allies in exchange for a measure of invulnerability.

Avatar of Subjugation — Paladin Attack 15

Your skin becomes like iron, your eyes like the fire of the forge as you crush your foe before you.

Daily ✦ Divine, Necrotic, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier necrotic damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: You gain the following benefits until the end of the encounter.
- ✦ You gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls.
- ✦ You gain 5 temporary hit points at the start of each of your turns.
- ✦ Once per round as a minor action, you can choose one willing ally. That ally takes 5 damage but gains 10 temporary hit points.

Level 16: Dark Blessing

Grim blackguard paragon path feature
Dark devotion brings with it darker might. When an enemy falls to your onslaught, your commitment to shadow magic allows you to snatch a part of its fleeting spiritual energy and turn it to your advantage.

Benefit: Whenever a creature adjacent to you drops to 0 hit points, roll a d4 to determine which Dark Blessing you receive.

1: You gain 10 temporary hit points.

2: You gain a +2 power bonus to all defenses until the end of your next turn.

3: You gain a +1 power bonus to attack rolls until the end of your next turn.

4: You regain hit points equal to your Charisma modifier.

Level 16: Utility Power

You are as strong as your dark conviction. When you might falter, your fervor preserves you while maintaining the balance in another way.

Benefit: You gain a new paladin utility power of your level or lower.

Pragmatic Sacrifice

Your dark essence enables you to deflect the damage of a killing stroke to a nearby ally, and your spiritual strength makes the trade-off less painful for your proxy.

Pragmatic Sacrifice — Paladin Utility 16

Your stained soul seals your wounds as they occur, and, blunted by the transference, the damage finds another home.

Daily ✦ Shadow
Immediate Interrupt Close burst 5
Trigger: An attack's damage reduces you to 0 hit points or fewer.
Target: One ally in the burst
Effect: You don't take the damage. Instead, the target takes it and then gains 10 temporary hit points.

Shadow Healing

You can draw on the power of shadow to heal your wounds, though doing so blocks your natural recuperative abilities for a time.

Shadow Healing — Paladin Utility 16

Your soul fires with darkness, and your body heals, but your natural faculties are dormant for a while afterward.

Daily ✦ Healing, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You regain hit points equal to your bloodied value and can make a saving throw. You cannot spend healing surges until the end of your next short rest.

Level 17: Dauntless Presence

Few would accuse you of sentimentality toward your companions, yet you hate to see them harmed. When they flag, your cause is weakened. That cannot be allowed. When your allies pause to heal, your fanaticism to continue the fight is bolstered.

Benefit: When an ally spends a healing surge while adjacent to you, you gain temporary hit points equal to your Charisma modifier.

Level 18: Ability Score Increase

Seemingly, there is no end to how much you can hone your abilities by surrendering to, and taking control of, the power of the dark.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 19: Daily Power

The deeper you delve into shadow power, the stronger your vice becomes. You eventually set aside lesser methods for new powers that more fully demonstrate your true strength.

Benefit: You can gain a new paladin daily attack power of your level or lower. If you do so, this new power must replace one of the daily attack powers you already have from your class (usually your lowest-level daily attack power).

Plundering Smite

All creatures have uses, even enemies. You can exploit opponents to serve your interests—as your attack ravages a foe, your injuries begin to heal.

Plundering Smite — Paladin Attack 19

Your strike leaves a vile blight behind. As your enemy's energy ebbs, yours grows.

Daily ✦ Divine, Healing, Necrotic, Shadow
No Action Melee 1
Trigger: You hit an adjacent creature with an at-will weapon attack.
Target: The creature you hit
Effect: The target takes 10 necrotic damage, and ongoing 10 necrotic damage (save ends). The target takes a -2 penalty to saving throws against this ongoing damage. Each time the target takes the ongoing damage, you regain 10 hit points.

Ruinous Smite

The vice within you magnifies your outrage. Such unrestrained anger strengthens your strikes, bringing ruin to all who face you.

Ruinous Smite — Paladin Attack 19

Your blow proves more costly than the enemy realized, and it collapses to the ground.

Daily ✦ Divine, Shadow
No Action Melee 1
Trigger: You hit an adjacent creature with an at-will weapon attack.
Target: The creature you hit
Effect: The target takes 25 damage and falls prone. It can't stand up while you are adjacent to it (save ends). You grant combat advantage until the end of your next turn.

Level 20: Vice Daily Power

Grim blackguard paragon path feature

A career spent in service to your vice leaves an indelible mark, twisting your appearance when you use your powers so that you embody your vice. Your presence afflicts your enemies with your vice's power.

Benefit: You gain a daily attack power associated with your vice (domination, page 46, or fury, page 47).

Epic Blackguard

When using your dark power, you are a physical manifestation of your chosen vice. No foe is beyond you. If any creature calls your dark prowess into question, you have the might and the will to face it.

When your blackguard reaches 21st level, he or she takes on an epic destiny. This epic destiny represents the grand finale of your adventuring career. Like your paragon path, it grants a set of related features and powers.

BLACKGUARD EPIC TIER

| Total XP | Level | Feats Known | Class Features and Powers |
|---|---|---|---|
| 175,000 | 21 | — | Ability score increaseEpic destiny feature |
| 210,000 | 22 | +1 | Vice utility power |
| 255,000 | 23 | — | Shadow Leap |
| 310,000 | 24 | +1 | Ability score increaseEpic destiny feature |
| 375,000 | 25 | — | Daily power |
| 450,000 | 26 | +1 | Epic destiny feature |
| 550,000 | 27 | — | Shadow Infusion |
| 675,000 | 28 | +1 | Ability score increase |
| 825,000 | 29 | — | Avatar of vice |
| 1,000,000 | 30 | +1 | Epic destiny feature |

Level 21: Ability Score Increase

Your entrance into the epic tier is heralded by a rush of vitality and clarity. You are now stronger, wiser, and even more unassailable.

Benefit: Each of your ability scores increases by 1.

Level 21: Epic Destiny Feature

Your destiny comes into focus, as does your control over your vice and its influence on you. Fate lends you new capabilities with which you can determine your ultimate course.

Benefit: You gain a feature associated with your epic destiny.

Level 22: Vice Utility Power

By invoking your vice, you grant your allies a glimpse of the dread power within you.

Benefit: You gain a utility power associated with your vice (domination, page 46, or fury, page 47).

Level 23: Shadow Leap

When cloaked in shadow, you can leap through the darkness between space and time, vanishing and reappearing elsewhere.

Benefit: After you use shroud of shadow, you can take a free action to teleport up to 5 squares.

Level 24: Ability Score Increase

Yet again, the darkness in your soul works physical and mental changes within you.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 24: Epic Destiny Feature

Your place in the cosmic order elevates as you gain still more power. At this point, fortune bends to help ensure your survival.

Benefit: You gain a feature associated with your epic destiny.

Level 25: Daily Power

Mingling divine magic more deeply with shadow pays dividends, letting you lay waste to enemies with spectacular success.

Benefit: You can gain a new paladin daily attack power of your level or lower. If you do so, this new power must replace one of the daily attack powers you already have from your class (usually your lowest-level daily attack power).

Ravenous Shadows

The dead haunt your dreams and whisper in your mind, begging for release. When you strike a foe, you can call forth these lingering spirits, raising a malevolent wave that menaces your foes and draws them into a killing darkness.

Ravenous Shadows — Paladin Attack 25

You recall the twisted spirits of your past victims to torment your current enemies. Channeled through your weapon, the spirits form a swirling, life-draining mass.

Daily ✦ Cold, Conjuration, Divine, Necrotic, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action — Area wall 10 within 10 squares

Effect: You conjure a wall of darkness that lasts until the end of your next turn. The wall's squares are heavily obscured, and it can be up to 4 squares high. Any creature that enters the wall or ends its turn there takes 15 cold and necrotic damage. When the wall appears, make the following attack.

Target: Each creature in the wall or adjacent to it
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: The target is immobilized until the end of its next turn. If the target is outside the wall, the target slides 1 square into it.

Sustain Minor: The wall persists until the end of your next turn, and you can repeat the attack.

The dark deeds of the epic blackguard are known throughout the multiverse

MARC SASSO

Venomous Infection Your shadow-infused divine energy alters an enemy's physiology, turning vitality into toxicity. The victim bloats with corruption, spraying caustic blood when it sustains severe damage.

Venomous Infection — Paladin Attack 25

You cleave with a suddenly toxic weapon, leaving behind a deadly infection. The enemy sickens as its blood becomes virulent poison.

Daily ✦ Acid, Divine, Poison, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and ongoing 20 acid and poison damage (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and ongoing 10 acid and poison damage (save ends).
Effect: When the target first becomes bloodied or drops to 0 hit points, creatures in a close blast 3 from the target take 10 poison and acid damage. You determine the location of the blast.

Level 26: Epic Destiny Feature

Your foes' worst attacks cannot sway you from your cause. When all seems lost, you have the strength and determination to fight on.

Benefit: You gain a feature (typically a utility power) associated with your epic destiny.

Level 27: Shadow Infusion

Shadow power infuses your soul, your mind, and your body. You no longer fear the touch of the grave or the icy cold of darkness.

Benefit: You gain resist 20 necrotic and resist 20 cold.

Level 28: Ability Score Increase

Your destiny is not yet fulfilled, and you need to be stronger and sharper to stand up to the challenges that await.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 29: Avatar of Vice

You can manifest the vice within your heart and soul, personifying it perfectly now. When you do, you experience a sudden transformation, leaving your mortal form behind and becoming the embodiment of shadow magic.

Benefit: You can gain the avatar of vice power. If you do so, this new power must replace one of the daily attack powers you already have from your class (usually your lowest-level daily attack power).

Avatar of Vice — Paladin Attack 29

Your soul-searing strike releases the vice within you, transforming you into living shadow.

Daily ✦ Divine, Necrotic, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 5[W] + Strength modifier necrotic damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: You gain the following benefits until the end of the encounter.
- ✦ Your attacks deal extra necrotic damage equal to your Charisma modifier.
- ✦ Once per turn after you attack an enemy and hit, you gain 10 temporary hit points. If the attack already grants temporary hit points to you, you gain 5 additional temporary hit points.
- ✦ If you start your turn with no uses available of your dread smite power, roll a d6. On a 5 or 6, you regain one use of that power.

Level 30: Epic Destiny Feature

You have reached the pinnacle of your dreadful abilities. On the verge of facing your final destiny, you gain one last edge that could spell the difference between ultimate victory and utter defeat.

Benefit: You gain a feature associated with your epic destiny.

Vice of Domination

The world demands order. Chaos is a cancer, undermining civilization's advance, fomenting crimes, sowing discord, and encouraging upheaval. Understanding the world's crying need, you crusade for order at any cost. When necessary, you enforce your will harshly, making examples of the disobedient.

Good and evil are methods, not ends—they can both bring stability. You might attempt to serve the greater good even if your methods can be harsh. To channel your vice, you might seek out the basest threats to stability, such as demons, marauding monsters, and other chaotically minded evildoers. Only evil blackguards give in to true tyranny, destroying the hearts and minds of subjects to make certain they obey every command.

Within a group, you push for ideas that involve imposing order on the situation most efficiently. You might have little tolerance for disorganization, even if such a state encourages freedom. You support authority, acknowledging the most effective leader of a group you're in even if that individual is not you. However, you expect a leader to handle situations competently or to step down. Dominance is earned, not claimed.

Alignment: You must be unaligned or evil to focus on the vice of domination. Good can confuse the issue of order and authority, and chaos is unacceptable.

Level 1: Spirit of Vice (Domination)

You punish disobedience with overwhelming force. It might cost you battle resilience, but the reward of punishment for your enemies is compensation aplenty.

Benefit: Once per round while you have temporary hit points, you can take a free action to deal damage to yourself right before making an attack roll against a target. The damage equals your Charisma modifier. You then gain a bonus to the damage roll against the target. The bonus equals the damage you took.

Level 1: Vice At-Will Power (Domination)

You become stronger as you prove yourself better than your opponents.

Benefit: You gain the dominator's strike power.

Dominator's Strike — Paladin Attack 1

You are toughened as you prove your superiority.

At-Will ✦ Divine, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage. You gain temporary hit points equal to your Charisma modifier.
Level 21: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.

Level 7: Improved Shroud of Shadow (Domination)

When you draw on shadow for protection, your shroud becomes more substantial, forming a greater barrier against your enemies' attacks.

Benefit: When you use your shroud of shadow, you gain additional temporary hit points equal to 2 + your Charisma modifier. At 23rd level, the additional temporary hit points increase to 5 + your Charisma modifier.

Level 11: Blackguard's Action (Domination)

Grim blackguard paragon path feature
Your dictatorial presence creates a subtle coordination among your allies, aiding your attacks.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you gain a power bonus to attack rolls until the end of your next turn. The bonus equals the number of allies within 2 squares of you.

Level 11: Vice Encounter Power (Domination)

Grim blackguard paragon path feature
Little matters as long as order prospers. You invest your imperious nature into your weapon and release necrotic energy to take what you want by force.

Proof of Domination — Grim Blackguard Attack 11

You raise your weapon high and dark tendrils crawl forth, fetching crucial life and strength from those around you.

Encounter ✦ Divine, Necrotic, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Close burst 1
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Strength vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier necrotic damage, and the target is weakened until the end of your next turn.
Effect: You gain 3 temporary hit points for each creature you target with this attack.

Level 12: Vice Utility Power (Domination)

Grim blackguard paragon path feature
In raising an icon of your vice, you drive your allies to crush the weak. Your enemies know that any sign of difficulty opens the way to their punishment in the presence of your altar.

Altar of Domination — Grim Blackguard Utility 12

A glowing sigil burns on each side of the black stone altar you create, driving your allies to cut down the feeble.

Daily ✦ Conjuration, Shadow
Minor Action Ranged 5
Effect: You conjure an altar of domination on the ground of an unoccupied square within range. The altar lasts until the end of the encounter, and its square is difficult terrain. While within 5 squares of the altar, you and each ally gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls against bloodied creatures.

Level 20: Vice Daily Power (Domination)

Grim blackguard paragon path feature
You can awaken a killing dread in your opponent. This mortal fear magnifies apparent threats and confuses your enemy as it flails about looking for escape. If it cannot escape your presence, it is doomed to madness and possibly death.

Mortal Dread — Grim Blackguard Attack 20

Fear born from your wicked strike assails your target's mind and ruins its efforts to rally as long as you and your allies are near.

Daily ✦ Divine, Fear, Psychic, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and ongoing 15 psychic damage (save ends). If the target ends its next turn adjacent to you or any of your allies, it cannot make a saving throw to end this effect on that turn.
Miss: Half damage, and ongoing 10 psychic damage (save ends).

Level 22: Vice Utility Power (Domination)

The light created by this power encourages your allies to abide while protecting you. In truth, the shadow within you feeds from your companions to satisfy your insatiable appetite for power.

Dark Grace — Paladin Utility 22

You shine with a soft golden light, inspiring allies at your side and drawing their life force to you.

Daily ✦ Aura, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You activate an aura 1 that lasts until the end of the encounter. Whenever you or an ally in the aura hits an enemy, he or she gains 5 temporary hit points. Whenever an ally in the aura spends a healing surge, he or she regains only half the hit points, and you regain the rest.

Vice of Fury

Anger is a common emotion on the battlefield. It's perfectly natural to feel fury when enemies kill a friend or when a traitor betrays you and your companions. Frustration is bound to arise when a foe slips away or an objective remains out of reach. Such rage is hardly a vice.

Fury's dark side arises when it occludes thought, when it rules action, and when it harms without thought for the consequences. Blackguards who indulge in their fury run the risk of losing control and striking out at anyone in their path. Guilt and innocence become meaningless concepts to a warrior in fury's throes. Such paladins can work terrible acts when consumed by their passions.

When fury is your vice, you might be temperamental and violent. You could erupt at the slightest provocation, resorting to hostility to solve your problems. Or you might make every effort to maintain control when you need to, letting the hound of fury loose only when it is needed. Even then, if pushed too far, you risk exploding. If you aim to keep your fury under control, your biggest fear is hurting someone or something you value.

Alignment: You can embrace the vice of fury as long as you are not lawful good. Most heroic blackguards of fury are unaligned. Rage clouds philosophical positions and overshadows peaceable solutions.

Level 1: Spirit of Vice (Fury)

Your anger increases your strength in battle, giving you a decided edge when striking at your foes. To access this greater strength, you must give into the burgeoning hate.

Benefit: While you have combat advantage against an enemy, you gain a +2 bonus to damage rolls. The bonus increases to +4 while you are bloodied or adjacent to a bloodied creature.

Level 1: Vice At-Will Power (Fury)

The violence of combat fuels your fury. Your enemies pale before your battle-crazed visage.

Benefit: You gain the ferocious strike power.

Ferocious Strike — Paladin Attack 1

The pain you inflict promises more agony to come.

At-Will ✦ Divine, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Strength modifier damage. You gain combat advantage against the first enemy you attack before the end of your next turn.
Level 21: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage.

Level 7: Improved Shroud of Shadow (Fury)

When you draw directly on shadow magic, your fury infuses your attacks.

Benefit: When you use your shroud of shadow, you gain a bonus to your next damage roll before the end of your next turn. The bonus equals 2 + your Charisma modifier. At 23rd level, the bonus increases to 5 + your Charisma modifier.

Level 11: Blackguard's Action (Fury)

Grim blackguard paragon path feature

Your brutal advance menaces your enemies, filling them with dread.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you gain combat advantage against all enemies until the end of your turn.

Level 11: Vice Encounter Power (Fury)

Grim blackguard paragon path feature

Violence begets violence. In the right circumstances, it takes little to provoke you. When stirred to respond, you speed to the offending enemy and deliver a punishing strike with little regard for the consequences.

Slave to Fury — Grim Blackguard Attack 11

Reckless anger takes hold, instilling you with the preternatural speed necessary to respond to each new attack with one of your own.

Encounter ✦ Divine, Shadow
Minor Action Personal

Effect: You grant combat advantage until the end of your next turn. Until the start of your next turn, you can use the secondary power at will. If you don't use it at least once, your weapon attacks on your next turn deal 1[W] extra damage.

Secondary Power (Divine, Shadow, Weapon)
Opportunity Action Melee 1
Trigger: An adjacent enemy hits you with a melee attack or a close attack.
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength modifier damage, and the target is dazed until the end of its next turn.

Level 12: Vice Utility Power (Fury)

Grim blackguard paragon path feature

You can raise an icon of your vice for all to see, driving you and your allies to strike enemies with unbounded rage. Enemies understand that to be near this altar is to be the focus of unrelenting ire.

Altar of Fury — Grim Blackguard Utility 12

The image of a gore-splattered monolith breaks the ground, red runes crawling across its fury-inducing surface.

Daily ✦ Conjuration, Shadow
Minor Action Ranged 5

Effect: You conjure an altar of fury on the ground of an unoccupied square within range. The altar lasts until the end of the encounter, and its square is difficult terrain. While within 5 squares of the altar, you and your allies gain a power bonus to damage rolls equal to the number of enemies within 5 squares of the altar, with a maximum bonus equal to your Charisma modifier.

Level 20: Vice Daily Power (Fury)

Grim blackguard paragon path feature

You use your familiarity with your vice to turn an enemy's rage against it. Your strike leaves behind a psychic seed of unreasoning fury that tears at the mind and forces your foe into unreasonable acts of anger.

Uncontrolled Fury — Grim Blackguard Attack 20

When you smash your opponent, you transform it into a reckless, ravening killer bent on destroying anything in its path.

Daily ✦ Charm, Divine, Psychic, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The target is dazed (save ends). Until this condition ends, roll a d6 at the start of each of the target's turns.
1-2: The target takes 10 psychic damage.
3-4: The target charges or makes a basic attack as a free action against your enemy nearest to it. If the target cannot attack, it takes no action during this turn.
5-6: The target and each enemy of yours adjacent to it take 10 psychic damage. The target then makes a melee basic attack as a free action against a creature of your choice. If the target cannot attack, it takes no action during this turn.

Level 22: Vice Utility Power (Fury)

You warp your allies with uncontrollable bloodlust, erasing their self-control and making them ruthless warriors for as long as they remain under your influence.

Rampaging Bloodlust — Paladin Utility 22

Murderous howls tear free from your allies' throats, their thoughts consumed by bloodlust.

Daily ✦ Aura, Shadow
Minor Action Personal

Effect: You activate an aura 2 that lasts until the end of the encounter. Creatures other than you in the aura grant combat advantage. You and each ally in the aura gain a power bonus to damage rolls equal to twice the number of enemies in the aura.

Vampire

Shadow Striker: Infused with the power of darkness and having already experienced death, you are a lethal creature of the night. As your power increases, your supernatural nature comes to the fore—but will your humanity pay the price?

Key Abilities: Dexterity, Charisma

You are a monster, fated and infected by a vile curse that transformed you into a creature of nightmare. Normal emotions have become alien to you. Only cold, gnawing hunger remains.

Most of those who become vampires are victims of monstrous attacks, created by a callous hunter who drained them dry of blood and life force, then cast them aside. Others seek out this path from their own fear of infirmity and death, discovering the arcane rites and alchemical formulas that promise dark power. In some cases, a character finds his or her vampirism invoked by an ancient family curse, or that he or she is a member of an extended clan of vampires who pass their blood down to those they deem worthy—whether by choice or not.

Whatever their origins, vampire characters are not slaves to their creators. Even those beholden to an older vampire retain free will, and have a chance to avoid sinking into the bestial depravity so common among their kind. Vampire characters are the most exceptional examples of those who carry this dark curse, using their powers not solely for murder and personal gain. Some become the greatest of heroes, but even those vampires are aware that few among the common folk have the ability to see past the frightening reality of their dark nature. Avoiding the scrutiny of superstitious folk and disguising his or her needs and abilities serves a vampire best. Trusted companions, enemies to slay and feast upon, and reasons to avoid civilized areas for extended times make an adventuring life the perfect choice for such characters.

Vampire Traits

Hit Points: You start with hit points equal to 12 + your Constitution score. You gain 5 hit points each time you gain a level.

Bonuses to Defenses: +1 to Fortitude, +1 to Will

Healing Surges per Day: 2

Armor Proficiencies: Cloth

Weapon Proficiencies: Simple melee, simple ranged

Implement Proficiencies: Holy symbols, ki focuses

Class Skills: Acrobatics (Dex), Arcana (Int), Athletics (Str), Bluff (Cha), Diplomacy (Cha), History (Int), Intimidate (Cha), Perception (Wis), Religion (Int), Stealth (Dex), Thievery (Dex)

Trained Skills: Four from the list of class skills

Creating a Vampire

This section walks you through the steps of creating a vampire. As you make choices at each step, consider how those choices relate to your character's personality, backstory, and goals.

Consult the three class tables, one for each tier of play, for a summary of what you gain as you advance in level.

Race

Choose your race. Any race can potentially become a vampire, and each race's association with the dark legends of these creatures is unique.

Halfling Small, unassuming, and affable are the qualities most often ascribed to halflings by the folk of other races. However, many halflings are driven by their wanderlust and curiosity to explore the dark places of the world—and to encounter the cursed creatures that dwell there. Although halfling vampires are rare, the fact that their race is often underestimated is an asset to these undead predators.

Halfling vampires are typically loners and outcasts, but the halfling clans' loyalty to kin and family leads some to openly accept vampires among them. Legends tell of great halfling heroes who fell to the dark curse of vampirism in the course of saving their clans from some undead scourge. Such vampires depend on the strength of their clan bonds to prevent them from slipping into evil deeds, often acting as scouts and defenders with a special focus on fighting undead.

Halfling vampires retain their love for Avandra, but most also worship Sehanine for her shadowy nature. The god of trickery shows halfling vampires much favor.

Vryloka The vrylokas take secret pride in their undead origins, even as they live their lives among the mortal races. However, a significant number of the so-called living vampires come to covet the dark curse that is the source of their long life and power. Vrylokas take up the path of the vampire by undertaking a variant of the blood ritual given to their kind by the Red Witch long ago, modified with the help of Vistani mystics.

Vryloka vampires maintain a low profile among their people, revealing their secret only to close family and kin. The intrigues and machinations that drive the vrylokas' secret societies are built on power, and the power wielded by true vampires can make them a target for betrayal by other families. Among their own kin, vryloka vampires often become elders and leaders, guarding their family's most ancient wisdom and secret traditions. Such vampire elders can choose to pass their blood on to other vrylokas with the blessing of their family. However, some vryloka vampires spread the curse according to personal whim, in flights of passion, or in mad fits.

Eldas, human vampire

Vryloka vampires typically see themselves as important servants of the Red Witch and, by extension, the Raven Queen.

Ability Scores

Determine your ability scores. As creatures of the hunt, vampires require uncanny speed and agility. As such, make Dexterity your highest score.

Your next highest score should be Charisma. Your strength of character forges the essential connection between your undead body, mind, and soul, and many of your class features and powers depend on it.

You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1 each when you reach certain levels: 4th, 8th, 14th, 18th, 24th, and 28th. In addition, all your ability scores increase by 1 at 11th and 21st levels.

Your other ability scores can help define your character's personality and backstory. A good Constitution score helps to ensure your survival as an adventuring vampire. It also implies that you were a vigorous mortal before taking up your dark path—perhaps part of the reason you were chosen for that path in the first place. Intelligence can speak to an academic or studious background, perhaps indicating that you came to vampirism through ancient lore or forgotten rituals. Regardless of how you became a vampire, a high Wisdom manifests as the instincts of an observant and intuitive predator.

Skills

At 1st level, choose four trained skills from the following list of class skills: Acrobatics, Arcana, Athletics, Bluff, Diplomacy, History, Intimidate, Perception, Religion, Stealth, and Thievery.

Your choice of skills reflects your unique approach to your existence as a creature of the night. An emphasis on Acrobatics, Athletics, Stealth, or Intimidate suggests a consummate hunter. Focusing on Bluff, Diplomacy, Stealth, and Thievery, might make you a charmer, experienced at hiding your true nature from the world and acquiring what you need by subterfuge. Perception is valuable to any vampire.

Your choice of skills can also tell something about your past. Arcana suggests a familiarity with shadow magic and your dark curse, as does Religion. However, Religion also grants you a deeper understanding of the nature of the soul's journey and of undeath. Perhaps faith was important to you when you were alive. How has that changed now? If you are trained in History, did you live through great events? Were you a scholar, or did the vampire that granted you your power pass on its knowledge as well?

Class Features and Powers

Note which class features and powers you gain at 1st level, as specified on the Vampire Heroic Tier table on page 52.

Feats

Choose one feat at 1st level. You gain an additional feat at every even-numbered level, plus a feat at 11th and 21st levels.

As an undead creature, you have limited healing surges. Because a number of your powers improve with the expenditure of a healing surge, Durable is a good feat choice. So is the Unarmored Agility feat, which can represent either your uncanny quickness or supernaturally tough flesh. You will spend much of your time in close-quarters combat, so feats such as Defensive Mobility are a good choice. Likewise, feats from the quick reaction group can help emphasize your killer instincts. Holy Symbol Expertise or Ki Focus Expertise increase the accuracy of many of your powers and might also suggest a special bond between you and your implement. Finally, any of the shadow feats in this book can demonstrate your ties to the Shadowfell and the source of your power.

Equipment

You have proficiency with cloth armor. You have proficiency with the following weapon types: simple melee and simple ranged.

You have 100 gp to buy your starting equipment. Purchase an implement of your choice, making that implement a symbol of your mortal existence—a sentimental object that keeps you grounded when the darkness threatens to overwhelm you. A defaced symbol of Vecna, whom you hate for the curse placed on your bloodline, can be as powerful as a wedding ring that recalls your lost love and acts as a ki focus.

With your innate defensive strength and your ability to use vampire slam as a melee basic attack, you won't need armor or a melee weapon. You might want to purchase a ranged weapon that can shoot farther than your ranged powers, but you are primarily a melee warrior. Spend the rest of your money on adventuring gear.

Defenses and Hit Points

Calculate your defenses using your ability modifiers. In addition, you gain a +1 bonus to Fortitude and Will.

You start with hit points equal to 12 + your Constitution score. You gain 5 hit points each time you gain a level. You have 2 healing surges per day.

Alignment and Final Details

At this point, you should have all the mechanical details of your character determined. There are a few more decisions to make.

Pick an alignment that matches your character's outlook on the world. As a vampire, you must struggle with the supernatural forces that grant your power if you hope to be more than just a monster. Your hunger can drive you to dark acts, but by choosing your victims carefully, you can maintain your morality. How you became a vampire can also affect your moral outlook.

Finally, check with your DM to see where you are from in the campaign setting, the people you already know, and what your current situation is. It also helps to spend a few minutes working out how or if you know the other players' characters.

Heroic Vampire

Having crossed over the threshold of death—and perhaps only just broken free of the authority of the vampire who created you—you are a force of shadow and nature combined. The heroic tier is where you learn to master your innate powers, establishing who you are and how you balance your existence between the world of the living and the undead.

Level 1: Child of the Night

You have been reborn into darkness, claiming the ancient power that will mark you for all time. You gain strength in the night even as you curse the sun, for its unwavering radiance is a bitter fire that drains your strength and power.

Benefit: You gain the following benefits and weaknesses.

- You are an undead creature. You are unaffected by anything that affects only living creatures. You don't need to breathe, which means you are immune to suffocation. You also don't age. Unlike most undead, you do need to sleep.
- You have darkvision.
- You have resist 5 necrotic.
- You have vulnerable 5 radiant.
- If you end your turn in direct sunlight and lack a protective covering such as a cloak or other heavy clothing, you take 5 radiant damage (plus additional damage from your radiant vulnerability) from the sunlight, and you are weakened (save ends). If you drop below 1 hit point from this damage, you are instantly destroyed.

Level 1: Blood Is Life

As an undead creature, you gain power and strength when you drain the life essence of other creatures. A gnawing hunger thus burns within your body and spirit, tempting you to descend into feral madness. Some vampires embrace this impulse, becoming savage beasts with a thirst for blood. Others strive to control it, turning their hunger into a weapon they can unleash against their enemies.

Your undead nature and your dependence on blood force you to use healing surges in a different way than other characters. The few healing surges you have can be augmented by the life force you drain from your foes with many of your powers. In addition, you can draw on the life energy of a willing ally to fuel your own vitality.

Benefit: Once during a short rest, an ally adjacent to you can willingly lose one healing surge to allow you to regain hit points equal to your bloodied value. You regain hit points equal to your bloodied value.

If you end a short rest with more healing surges than your usual number of healing surges for the day, you lose any healing surges beyond that number but regain all your hit points.

Level 1: Enduring Soul

Your body is undead, but the lingering presence of your soul is infused into the shadow magic that grants you power. When you have taken grievous injuries, that soul energy heals and sustains you.

Benefit: While you are bloodied, you gain regeneration equal to your Charisma modifier. If you take radiant damage, your regeneration does not function until the end of your next turn.

Level 1: Hidden Might

Though you might show no outward sign of it, the curse that transformed you into an undead creature grants you physical power from the force of your personality alone.

Benefit: You gain a bonus to the damage rolls of your vampire powers and vampire paragon path powers. The bonus equals your Charisma modifier. The bonus increases to 2 + your Charisma modifier at 5th level, 4 + your Charisma modifier at 15th level, and 6 + your Charisma modifier at 25th level.

Level 1: Vampiric Reflexes

You move with an uncanny grace that makes it difficult for foes to strike you.

Benefit: You gain a +2 shield bonus to AC while you are wearing cloth armor or no armor and aren't using a shield.

Level 1: At-Will Attack Powers

Vampires are known for their mythic strength and legendary charm—attributes that you wield as weapons when you enter combat.

Benefit: You gain the dark beckoning, taste of life, and vampire slam powers.

Dark Beckoning

The steeliness of your gaze can sway the heart of even the most fearless foe. Like a coiled serpent, you transfix your enemies to leave them exactly where you want them.

Dark Beckoning — Vampire Attack 1

Your mesmerizing presence draws your enemies closer.

At-Will ✦ Charm, Implement, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 5
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma + 2 vs. Will
Hit: 1d6 + Charisma modifier psychic damage, and you pull the target up to 3 squares.
Level 21: 2d6 + Charisma modifier psychic damage.

Taste of Life

Your undead essence thrives on the life energy of other creatures. This power lets you gain strength while you inflict pain on your foe.

Taste of Life — Vampire Attack 1

Your dread touch burns your foe with dark power, even as your own energy is temporarily restored.

At-Will ✦ Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1d8 + Dexterity modifier necrotic damage, and you gain temporary hit points equal to 2 + your Charisma modifier.
Level 21: 2d8 + Dexterity modifier necrotic damage.

Vampire Slam

The power of shadow courses through you, transforming your unnatural quickness into a brute-force assault.

Vampire Slam — Vampire Attack 1

You use the full force of your undead strength to drive your foe back.

At-Will ✦ Implement, Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d10 + Dexterity modifier damage, and you can push the target 1 square.
Level 21: 2d10 + Dexterity modifier damage.
Special: You can use this power as a melee basic attack.

Level 1: Blood Drinker

Your curse demands that the life force of other creatures be sacrificed to maintain your undead form. Whether it consists of blood, ichor, or the unseen energy of life itself, only the essence of your foes can satisfy you.

Benefit: You gain the blood drinker power.

Blood Drinker — Vampire Attack

When your attack strikes true, you sweep past your foe's defenses to consume the essence of its life.

Encounter ✦ Shadow
No Action Personal
Trigger: You hit an enemy with a vampire melee at-will attack power.
Target: The triggering enemy
Effect: The target takes 1d10 extra damage from the triggering attack, and you gain a healing surge.
Level 17: 2d10 extra damage.
Level 27: 3d10 extra damage.

Level 1: Swarm of Shadows

Your mortal body is merely a vessel for the magic that sustains you in your state of undeath. You can manipulate your physical form with growing ease, transforming into a cluster of shadows that bite and slash at your foes, then let you secretly re-form in their midst to press the attack.

Benefit: You gain the swarm of shadows power.

Swarm of Shadows — Vampire Attack 1

Your body becomes a swarm of batlike shadows that let you harry your enemies, then fade from sight.

Daily ✦ Implement, Shadow, Teleportation
Standard Action Close blast 3
Target: Each enemy in the blast
Attack: Dexterity vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3d6 + Dexterity modifier damage, and ongoing 5 damage (save ends).
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: You teleport to a square in the blast and are invisible until the end of your next turn.

Level 2: Utility Powers

The same strength of character that keeps your desires in check can be used as a weapon against your foes, leaving them unable to react in the heat of combat.

Benefit: You gain a 2nd-level vampire utility power of your choice.

Charming Gaze

The force of your personality lets you channel the shadow magic that animates you, accentuating and sharpening your presence in combat.

Andragora, halfling vampire

Charming Gaze — Vampire Utility 2

Your compelling demeanor throws your prey off its guard, lulling it into a false sense of security.

Encounter ✦ Charm, Shadow
Minor Action Close blast 5
Target: One creature in the blast
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, the target cannot make opportunity attacks or take immediate actions. In addition, you gain a +4 bonus to the next Bluff check or Diplomacy check you make against the target before the end of the encounter.

Hunter's Gaze Although you must maintain strict control over the feral hunger that lurks within you, that hunger can also serve you in combat. Sensing your deadly instincts, your foe is left in a state of vulnerable distraction.

Hunter's Gaze — Vampire Utility 2

As you focus on a foe, your predatory presence leaves it open to attack.

Encounter ✦ Charm, Shadow
Minor Action Close blast 5
Target: One creature in the blast
Effect: Until the start of your next turn, the target grants combat advantage while you are adjacent to it. In addition, you gain a +4 bonus to the next Intimidate check you make against the target before the end of the encounter.

Level 3: Feral Assault

As you gain experience, you gain better control of your hunger—control that allows you to safely channel your feral impulses. When you unleash the beast within, no foe can stand against you for long.

Benefit: You gain the feral assault power.

Feral Assault — Vampire Attack 3

You howl like a beast as you strike, your hunger and fury driving you to make a brutal attack.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d12 + Dexterity modifier damage.
Special: You can lose a healing surge when you use this power to either target a second creature or deal 2d8 extra damage with the attack.

Level 4: Ability Score Increase

Shadow is becoming so ingrained within you that it infuses your essential nature and makes you more than you were before.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 4: Strength of Blood

When your dark curse first claimed you, you consumed the life force of other creatures simply to survive. Now, you reinvest that spirit energy into a surge of physical strength on the battlefield.

Benefit: You gain the strength of blood power.

Strength of Blood — Vampire Utility 4

You draw on the life force you have consumed to grant yourself a sudden burst of strength.

Encounter ✦ Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You gain a +5 power bonus to the next Athletics, Endurance, or Strength check you make before the end of your turn.
Special: You can lose a healing surge when you use this power to increase the bonus to +10.

Level 5: Unfettered Hunger

The feral impulses that surge through you threaten to overwhelm you at times. At the height of your fury, you slake your hunger with all the rage of the undead monster that others fear you to be.

Benefit: You gain the unfettered hunger power.

MAZIN KASSIS

Unfettered Hunger — Vampire Attack 5

Your eyes turn red with fury, your fangs lengthen, and you rage like a beast as you allow your hunger to seize control.

Daily ✦ Implement, Shadow
Standard Action Close burst 1
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d10 + Dexterity modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, you gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls and a +4 power bonus to damage rolls, you can shift up to your speed as a move action, and you cannot spend healing surges to regain hit points.

Level 6: Form of the Bat

Common folklore ascribes countless powers to vampires, including the ability to shift into the forms of frightening animals. You have learned to draw on shadow magic to become one of these creatures of the night.

Benefit: You gain the form of the bat power.

Form of the Bat — Vampire Utility 6

Your body becomes a cloud of pure shadow that shrinks and coalesces into the form of a fluttering bat.

Encounter ✦ Polymorph, Shadow
Standard Action Personal
Effect: You assume the form of a Tiny bat. While you are in this form, you have a speed of 2 and a fly speed of 8, and you cannot make attacks or hold or carry any object. Your equipment becomes part of this form. You use a move action to return to your normal form.

Level 7: Improved Blood Drinker

You have become a more efficient predator, seeking out additional opportunities to feed.

Benefit: You gain one more use of blood drinker per encounter, but you can use it only once per turn.

Level 8: Ability Score Increase

You are long accustomed now to the darkness within you, and your body and mind become more formidable.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 8: Night Crawler

A perfect killer must move in ways that its prey does not expect. Your otherworldly strength and shadow magic allow you to stalk your victims like a creature of living darkness.

Benefit: You gain a climb speed equal to your speed. You can climb across a ceiling or similar surface. However, if you end your turn on such a surface, you fall.

Level 9: Domineering Gaze

By focusing the power of your dark curse, you direct your mix of beastly and mortal emotions into an opponent's mind. Lost within those dark passions, your prey becomes a puppet under your control.

Benefit: You gain the domineering gaze power.

Domineering Gaze — Vampire Attack 9

With a glance, your foe falls under your control and will yield up its life force to strengthen you.

Daily ✦ Charm, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 5
Target: One enemy
Attack: Charisma + 2 vs. Will
Hit: The target is dominated (save ends). While the target is dominated by this power, you can use a minor action while adjacent to the target to gain a healing surge and to deal necrotic damage to the target equal to your healing surge value. Doing so ends the domination.
Miss: The power is not expended.

Level 10: Gaseous Form

The power of the Shadowfell flows through your undead form. By drawing on your connection to that power, you change yourself into a vague shape of swirling darkness.

Benefit: You gain the gaseous form power.

Gaseous Form — Vampire Utility 10

You transform into a shadowy mist that shreds and twists away from your enemy's grasp.

Daily ✦ Polymorph, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You assume a gaseous form. While in this form, you are insubstantial and phasing, gain a fly speed of 8, and gain a +10 power bonus to Stealth checks. You cannot attack in this form. The form lasts until the end of your next turn or until you use a minor action to end it.
Sustain Minor: The gaseous form persists until the end of your next turn.

Eldas slashes away at a pack of wererats that foolishly thought him to be easy prey

ALBERTO DEL LAGO

Paragon Vampire

You have feasted on innumerable foes and defeated them, all the while holding yourself in the middle ground between mortality and undeath. When you ascend into the paragon tier, your shadow powers grow stronger as you carve out your dark legend.

Paragon Path: Vampire Noble

At 11th level, your vampire takes on a paragon path, typically the vampire noble paragon path. A vampire noble concentrates on a particular set of vampiric traits to emphasize them, creating a suite of abilities that vampires refer to as a bloodline. Some vampires choose the cunning of the beguiler bloodline, while others prefer to cultivate their bestial nature by adopting the stalker bloodline. See pages 61 and 62 for the two bloodlines and the features they offer.

Prerequisite: Only a vampire can take this paragon path.

VAMPIRE PARAGON TIER

| 83,000 | 17 | — | Unleashed fury |
| 99,000 | 18 | +1 | Ability score increase |
| 119,000 | 19 | — | Vital Consumption |
| 143,000 | 20 | +1 | Bloodline daily power [vampire noble] |

Level 11: Ability Score Increase

As if to prepare you for the paragon tier, your body and mind gird themselves against future threats by making you more formidable in every way.

Benefit: Each of your ability scores increases by 1.

Level 11: Blood Lord

Vampire noble paragon path feature

Your hunger grows with your power, allowing you to channel the life energy of your foes to even deadlier effect.

Benefit: You gain one more use of blood drinker per encounter, but you can still use it only once per turn.

Level 11: Bloodline Feature

Vampire noble paragon path feature

The bloodline that defines you sharpens your predatory instincts and your thirst for the life energy that sustains you.

Benefit: You gain a paragon path feature associated with your bloodline (beguiler, page 61, or stalker, page 62).

Level 11: Vampiric Action

Vampire noble paragon path feature

When you push yourself beyond normal limits, you also spark the supernatural energy that animates your undead body, letting you strike with superior accuracy and speed.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to take an extra action, if you have temporary hit points or have more healing surges than your usual number of healing surges for the day, you gain a +4 power bonus to your next attack roll before the end of your turn.

Level 12: Bloodline Utility Power

Vampire noble paragon path feature

The power of shadow strengthens you, granting you additional resources to outlast your foes.

Benefit: You gain a utility power associated with your bloodline (beguiler, page 61, or stalker, page 62).

Level 13: Enduring Reserves

The life energy you have stolen from countless foes has permanently replenished your undead form's ability to heal.

Benefit: Your number of healing surges increases by one.

Level 14: Ability Score Increase

Your continued cultivation of the dark forces within you enhances your physical and mental resilience.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 15: Hungry Swarm

As your talent for manipulating the power of darkness grows, your swarm of shadows takes on an even deadlier edge. As your foes are harried and blinded by batlike shadows, you replenish your own vitality by drinking deep from their fear.

Benefit: You gain the hungry swarm power. This new power replaces swarm of shadows.

Hungry Swarm — Vampire Attack 15

Your body unravels into a swarm of batlike shadows whose claws and fangs steal sight and life from your foes.

Daily ✦ Implement, Shadow, Teleportation
Standard Action Close blast 3
Target: Each enemy in the blast
Attack: Dexterity vs. Fortitude
Hit: 5d6 + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is blinded (save ends).
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: You teleport to a square in the blast and are invisible until the end of your next turn. If you hit at least one living creature with this attack, you gain a healing surge.

Level 16: Bloodline Feature

Vampire noble paragon path feature

The dark traditions of your bloodline bestow additional benefit and help you shrug off the lingering weakness of your vampiric form.

Benefit: You gain a paragon path feature associated with your bloodline (beguiler, page 61, or stalker, page 62).

Level 16: Shared Blood

The energy of life that you reap from your enemies sustains your soul's connection to your undead body and powers your most potent attacks. Now you learn to transfer that power to your allies, gifting them with your own supernatural sustenance and strength in their hour of need.

Benefit: You gain the shared blood power.

Shared Blood — Vampire Utility 16

You bite yourself to let the life energy you have consumed seep onto your ally, transferring some of your undying vitality.

Daily ✦ Healing, Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Requirement: You must have at least one healing surge remaining.
Target: One ally
Effect: You lose a healing surge. The target regains 1 hit point, gains temporary hit points equal to his or her bloodied value, and can make a saving throw with a +2 power bonus.

Level 17: Unleashed Fury

When you first took up the vampire's path, you fought to suppress the dark rage of your maimed soul. Now you have learned to control that fury to your advantage—and to your enemies' peril.

Benefit: You gain the unleashed fury power. This new power replaces feral assault.

Unleashed Fury — Vampire Attack 17

You become a ravening beast, lashing out at your foe with the strength of all your dark rage.

Encounter ✦ Implement, Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d12 + Dexterity modifier damage.
Special: You can lose a healing surge when you use this power to either target each creature adjacent to you with the attack or deal 3d10 extra damage to a single target.

Level 18: Ability Score Increase

Seemingly, there is no end to how much you can hone your abilities by surrendering to, and taking control of, the power of the dark.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 19: Vital Consumption

The life force you expend to fuel your shadow magic now provides an additional boost to your vitality.

Benefit: Whenever you lose a healing surge as part of one of your vampire or paragon path attack powers, you gain temporary hit points equal to one-half your level.

Level 20: Bloodline Daily Power

Vampire noble paragon path feature

At the height of the paragon tier, your dark curse fuels your deadliest attack.

Benefit: You gain a paragon path power associated with your bloodline (beguiler, page 61, or stalker, page 62).

Epic Vampire

Through the power of undeath, you have grown beyond the limitations of mortals and monsters alike. Now it is time to use your power to challenge foes that can threaten all of existence.

When your vampire reaches 21st level, he or she takes on an epic destiny. The destiny you choose represents the apex of your shadow magic—and the final resolution of your attempts to control your dark fate. Like your paragon path, it grants a set of related features and powers.

VAMPIRE EPIC TIER

| Total XP | Level | Feats Known | Class Features and Powers |
|---|---|---|---|
| 175,000 | 21 | +1 | Ability score increaseEpic destiny feature |
| 210,000 | 22 | +1 | Utility power |
| 255,000 | 23 | — | Energized Blood Drinker |
| 310,000 | 24 | +1 | Ability score increaseEpic destiny feature |
| 375,000 | 25 | — | Irresistible gaze |

| 675,000 | 28 | +1 | Ability score increase |
| 825,000 | 29 | — | Consuming swarm |
| 1,000,000 | 30 | +1 | Epic destiny feature |

Level 21: Ability Score Increase

Your entrance into the epic tier is heralded by a rush of vitality and clarity. You are now stronger, wiser, and even more unassailable.

Benefit: Each of your ability scores increases by 1.

Level 21: Epic Destiny Feature

As you enter the epic tier, your final destiny comes into focus. Perhaps you are fated to save the world from some great evil, or maybe fate has dictated that you must fight against a god. The destiny you pursue shapes you just as your actions shape the cosmos.

Benefit: You gain a feature associated with your epic destiny.

Level 22: Utility Power

The power of blood and shadow permeates your being, granting you abilities that few of your kind have ever known.

Benefit: You gain a new vampire utility power of your level or lower.

Blood Drinker's Pounce

The energy you drain from your enemies with your blood drinker power has become a potent elixir. As your foe stumbles, you let its stolen life force drive you into a battle frenzy.

Blood Drinker's Pounce — Vampire Utility 22

Your successful attack inspires even greater fury, letting you leap through your foes like a snarling beast.

Encounter ✦ Shadow
Free Action — Personal
Trigger: The target of your blood drinker power is bloodied or reduced to 0 hit points by that power's triggering attack.
Effect: You shift up to your speed and can move through enemies' spaces during this shift. You then use vampire slam with a +2 bonus to the attack roll. If you hit, you also knock the target prone.

Culling Call

You balance your dark majesty and your deadly combat prowess with ease. The destruction of a foe should send other enemies scrambling in fear, but you can call those enemies forward to their doom.

Culling Call — Vampire Utility 22

As one foe falls, your dark presence pulls another enemy forward to become an offering for your hunger.

Encounter ✦ Shadow
Free Action — Personal
Trigger: You reduce an adjacent enemy to 0 hit points on your turn.
Effect: You use dark beckoning against an enemy within range. If you hit with that power, you also gain combat advantage against the target until the end of your next turn.

Level 23: Energized Blood Drinker

You are the most proficient of feeders, wringing every drop of vitality from the life force of the creatures you consume.

Benefit: When you use your blood drinker, you gain temporary hit points equal to 5 + your Charisma modifier. If blood drinker has been triggered by taste of life, you instead gain 5 + twice your Charisma modifier temporary hit points.

Level 24: Ability Score Increase

Yet again, the darkness in your soul works physical and mental changes within you.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 24: Epic Destiny Feature

Your place in the cosmic order becomes cemented as you gain still more power. At this point, fate seems to bend and weave to ensure your survival.

Benefit: You gain a feature associated with your epic destiny.

Level 25: Irresistible Gaze

Before the battle is done, even the mightiest creatures in the cosmos will succumb to your remorseless glare.

Benefit: You gain the irresistible gaze power. This new power replaces domineering gaze.

Irresistible Gaze — Vampire Attack 25

Your enemy gives up its will and its life force to you, stumbling through the battle under your command.

Daily ✦ Charm, Implement, Necrotic, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 5
Target: One enemy
Attack: Charisma + 2 vs. Will
Hit: The target is dominated (save ends). Once while the target is dominated by this power, you can use a minor action while adjacent to the target to gain a healing surge and to deal necrotic damage to the target equal to your healing surge value. Doing so ends the domination.
Aftereffect: The target takes ongoing 10 psychic damage and is dazed (save ends both).
Miss: The power is not expended.

Level 26: Epic Destiny Feature

Your foes' worst attacks cannot sway you from driving toward the great goal that lies before you. When all seems lost, you have the strength and determination to deny death and fight on.

Benefit: You gain a feature (typically a utility power) associated with your epic destiny.

Level 28: Ability Score Increase

Your destiny is not yet fulfilled, and you need to be stronger and sharper to stand up to the challenges that await.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 29: Consuming Swarm

When you dissolve into a storm of batlike shadows, you drain the life from every foe you touch. Protected from your enemies' sight, you move with the unseen grace of the night.

Benefit: You gain the consuming swarm power. This new power replaces hungry swarm.

Consuming Swarm — Vampire Attack 29

The swarm of shadows into which you transform drains the life from your foes, then wraps you in a shroud of invisibility that endures while you attack.

Daily ✦ Implement, Shadow, Teleportation, Zone
Standard Action Close blast 5
Target: Each enemy in the blast
Attack: Dexterity vs. Fortitude
Hit: 7d6 + Dexterity modifier damage, and the target is blinded (save ends).
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: You teleport to a square in the blast, and the blast creates a zone that lasts until you leave it. While in the zone, you are invisible, and you can use a free action at the start of each of your turns to teleport to a square in the zone. In addition, if you hit at least one living creature with this attack, you gain a healing surge.

Level 30: Epic Destiny Feature

You have achieved the absolute pinnacle of your abilities. On the verge of facing your final destiny, you gain one final edge that could spell the difference between ultimate victory or utter defeat.

Benefit: You gain a feature associated with your epic destiny.

"I once believed myself cursed, reviled by the gods, doomed to spend eternity in the shadows. But I realized it was a gift, albeit one that came at a high price. Yes, I may not be able to stand the sun's light, and I might flinch away from a brandished holy symbol, but so long as I cling to my humanity I can be more than the monster that others name me. This gift is my destiny, and my purpose is to fight darkness with its own power."

—Elena Morivoga

Beguiler Bloodline

Whether your curse of vampirism was inflicted by fate or by choice, you have come to wholly accept your power by the beginning of the paragon tier. However, though the common folk would call you a monster if they knew your true nature, you cannot simply forsake the memory of the person you once were.

You prefer the company of mortals and the benefits of being a part of society. Through the magic of blood and shadow, your mastery of your appearance and your subtle hunting methods have made you the most attractive of predators. Your enemies believe your lies even as they overlook your strangeness. When you reveal your true nature in all its dark glory, they are unable to look away—much less escape—as they fall to their knees before you.

"I am as a god among mortals, and with such power comes great responsibility. These mortals are mine to do with as I please, and I choose to protect them. Like a shepherd protecting his flock, I will let no wolves harm my herd, no harm befall them by any hand but my own."

—Baron Guy deFarr

Level 11: Beguiler Bloodline Feature

Vampire noble paragon path feature

Your cunning manner keeps your true nature and identity concealed from others, even as it helps you keep your foes off guard in combat.

Benefit: You gain a +2 bonus to Bluff checks. This bonus increases to +5 when you are trying to pass as a specific individual of your race. In addition, you can make a Bluff check to feint and gain combat advantage as a minor action. You also gain a +3 bonus to damage rolls against any creature granting combat advantage to you.

Level 12: Beguiler Bloodline Utility Power

Vampire noble paragon path feature

The beguiling power of your blood can be released to charm your foes even in the heat of combat. As your dread curse draws the attention of your enemies, you and your allies gain the advantage.

Aura of Grandeur — Vampire Noble Utility 12

You become a beacon that your foes cannot ignore, forcing them to become distracted like moths circling an open flame.

Daily ✦ Aura, Charm, Shadow
Minor Action Personal

Effect: You activate an aura 3 that lasts until the end of your next turn. Enemies in the aura cannot make opportunity attacks against you or your allies. Whenever an enemy ends its turn in the aura, you can use a free action to slide that enemy up to 2 squares to another square in the aura.

Sustain Minor: The aura persists until the end of your next turn.

Level 16: Beguiler Bloodline Feature

Vampire noble paragon path feature

In whetting the power of your deadly attraction, you have also learned to shroud that power, escaping notice when it suits you. When you do so, the strength of your mind and spirit can cloak you even against the deadly light of the sun.

Benefit: You gain a +2 bonus to Stealth checks. This bonus increases to +4 if you move 2 or fewer squares during the turn in which you make the check, or if you are not in combat.

In addition, sunlight no longer deals radiant damage to you, and when it weakens you, you gain a bonus to saving throws to end that effect. The bonus equals your Charisma modifier.

Level 20: Beguiler Bloodline Daily Power

Vampire noble paragon path feature

At the height of the paragon tier, you are a foe beyond compare. When you invoke the dark splendor of your hunter's instincts, your prey cannot hope to escape you.

Predatory Splendor — Vampire Noble Attack 20

Your overwhelming presence holds your foes fast, forcing them to face your wrath.

Daily ✦ Aura, Charm, Implement, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Close burst 2
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Charisma + 2 vs. Will

Hit: 3d10 + Charisma modifier psychic damage, and the target is immobilized and grants combat advantage (save ends both).

Miss: Half damage, and the target is slowed and grants combat advantage (save ends both).

Effect: You activate an aura 2 that lasts until the end of your next turn. If an enemy willingly leaves the aura, you can use a free action either to deal 10 psychic damage to it or to knock it prone.

Sustain Minor: The aura persists until the end of your next turn.

Stalker Bloodline

The dark curse that made you a vampire took little toll on your physical form. However, in your heart and soul, you have become a beast more terrifying than any monster you had known of in mortal life. As your power has grown, you have struggled at times to keep your feral side from taking over. Although you live for the chase and the kill, your hold on your humanity helps you glimpse the mindless savagery and wickedness that awaits you if you give in.

By controlling your bestial spirit, you can learn to take advantage of your predatory nature. The monster within is your connection between the world of mortals and the world of shadow, and it makes you strong.

Level 11: Stalker Bloodline Feature

Vampire noble paragon path feature

The power of your blood sets loose the predator inside you, letting you reveal your beastly countenance to overwhelm your foes.

Benefit: You gain a +2 bonus to Intimidate checks.

In addition, you gain a +2 bonus to the damage rolls of your vampire and stalker bloodline attacks.

Level 12: Stalker Bloodline Utility Power

Vampire noble paragon path feature

You are the consummate hunter, and each successful strike only increases your hunger for new prey. When one foe feels your wrath, you bring forth even greater savagery against your other enemies.

Hunter's Frenzy — Vampire Noble Utility 12

When your attack strikes true, it drives you into a fury that launches you into the midst of your foes.

Encounter ✦ Shadow
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You bloody an enemy or reduce it to 0 hit points with an attack.
Effect: Any effect that is subjecting you to the slowed or immobilized conditions ends on you, and you then shift up to your speed. You gain combat advantage until the end of your next turn against each enemy adjacent to you at the end of the shift.

Level 16: Stalker Bloodline Feature

Vampire noble paragon path feature

You have fully assimilated your animalistic side, connecting you to the beasts of the earth. You are a creature of the land in addition to a creature of the night, and the sun no longer burns you.

Benefit: You gain a +2 bonus to Nature checks. This bonus increases to +4 if you are trying to calm a beast.

In addition, sunlight no longer deals radiant damage to you, and when it weakens you, you gain a bonus to saving throws to end that effect. The bonus equals your Charisma modifier.

Level 20: Stalker Bloodline Daily Power

Vampire noble paragon path feature

As you nurture your predatory side, the gnawing hunger within you grows ever stronger. The power of your stalker bloodline gives you strength in battle, and lets you release its full fury in the form of a shadowy wolf whose bite can lay waste to the deadliest foes.

Darkwolf Form — Vampire Noble Attack 20

With a growl, you transform your body into an inky cloak of darkness in the semblance of a feral wolf that is the embodiment of your hunger.

Daily ✦ Fear, Polymorph, Shadow
Standard Action Close burst 2
Target: Each creature in the burst
Effect: You can push each target 1 square, and the target is immobilized until the end of your next turn. You assume the form of a wolflike beast of your size until the end of the encounter. While in this form, you gain a +2 power bonus to speed, you gain a +5 power bonus to Perception checks and Stealth checks, and the only attack you can make is the secondary power, which you can use at will. As a minor action once per round, you can change from your humanoid form to the wolflike form or vice versa.

Secondary Power (Implement, Shadow)
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Dexterity vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d8 + Dexterity modifier damage.
Special: You can use this secondary power as a melee basic attack.

Warlock

Warlocks manipulate arcane power, as wizards do, but their conduit to that power is vastly different. For a warlock, it's as much about who you know as what you know—and in effect, the two are the same.

All warlocks gain access to their power by entering into a pact with some force or entity in which that power rests. In return for their continuing loyalty and service to the source of their power, warlocks become more adept at their craft, and the abilities they bring to the battlefield grow more lethal.

The type of warlock you can create with this book is the binder.

Binder

Arcane Controller: The magical energy you channel enables you to bind your enemies with arcane power, turning their bodies and minds against them.
Key Abilities: Charisma; Dexterity or Intelligence

A binder is a warlock who bends the power of extraplanar entities to his or her will through the use of mystic words, true names, and powerful arcane symbols and talismans. Unlike warlocks who cleave to one master, a binder might call on several different creatures and entities as a means of channeling arcane power. Because they seek to master the magic of controlling other creatures, all binders fear having the power they channel turned against them in the end.

Like all warlocks, binders are typically distrusted by the common people, who know the tales of the dark bargains on which that class's power is built. Eschewing a single master might seem to offer a binder a level of freedom from direct, malign

Binder Traits

Hit Points: You start with hit points equal to 12 + your Constitution score. You gain 5 hit points each time you gain a level.

Bonuses to Defenses: +1 to Reflex, +1 to Will

Healing Surges per Day: 6 + your Constitution modifier

Armor Proficiencies: Cloth, leather

Weapon Proficiencies: Simple melee, simple ranged

Implement Proficiencies: Rods, wands

Class Skills: Arcana (Int), Bluff (Cha), Dungeoneering (Wis), History (Int), Insight (Wis), Intimidate (Cha), Religion (Int), Streetwise (Cha), Thievery (Dex)

Trained Skills: Four from the list of class skills

manipulation. However, binders have a reputation for unpredictability that makes them as feared as hexblades and other warlocks.

Warlocks channel arcane magic and the spiritual energy of their slain foes. A binder's spells are focused on twisting reality more than on single combat—manipulating enemies and putting them at a disadvantage that hastens their demise. Binders rely on their allies to dispatch foes, and for the protection that allows them to freely work their magic.

As a seeker of knowledge and power, as well as one who seldom wishes to endure the scrutiny of the common folk for long, a binder makes a good adventuring partner. Legends and rumors lead a binder onward into the unknown, as do the whispers of the entities that provide the binder's power.

Creating a Binder

This section walks you through the steps of creating a binder. As you make choices at each step, consider how those choices relate to your character's personality, backstory, and goals.

Consult the three class tables, one for each tier of play, for a summary of what you gain as you advance in level.

Pact

Like all warlocks, a binder forges a pact with a powerful planar entity, channeling the arcane power that entity bestows. Your choice of pact has an important effect on the powers and other abilities you gain.

Gloom Pact The dark realm of the Shadowfell is the lair of ancient and unseen powers that hunger for influence in the mortal realm, and for the spiritual energy that a warlock can channel from defeated foes. A binder who bargains with such forces must be careful, however, for the entities that bestow the power of binding are masters of that power themselves. This pact requires that you have a good Dexterity score, because its magic focuses on the quick manipulation of arcane energy. As a gloom pact binder, you use the power of shadow to ensure that a foe never gets close enough to become a threat.

See page 76 for the features and powers associated with the gloom pact.

Star Pact Those who forge a star pact seek obscure lore and the names of creatures known to few mortals—the eldritch beings that dwell in the darkness between the stars and in the Far Realm beyond. Such sinister creatures offer great power, but always at a price. A wise binder thus learns the names of many such entities, hoping to maintain a safe barrier between its masters and the mortal realm. A good Intelligence score is important to a star pact binder, letting you master the mystic sciences required to channel your powers of arcane binding—and to protect yourself from being enslaved in turn.

See page 79 for the features and powers associated with the star pact.

Race

Choose your race. Human and shade are particularly good choices for a binder.

Human Humans consistently demonstrate the diversity, moral latitude, and cleverness—as well as the mental, physical, and spiritual resilience—required to follow the binder's path. Human binders can come into their power in various ways, but most are loners who seek a quick route to power rather than enduring long and laborious study. Some tragedy or failing in the past might push such a character to embrace the darker side of arcane might. Curiosity coupled with a lack of caution sometimes leads humans to become binders, quick to believe they can stay one step ahead of their dark patrons. As a result, some human binders make pacts without fully considering the consequences.

If a human binder reveres any deity, it is likely to be Avandra or Sehanine. Both gods support the individualistic path that most binders follow, but neither advocates giving up one's secrets.

Shade Having once been human, shades are equally diverse in their reasons for becoming binders. A typically high Charisma serves a shade well in the binder class. Shade binders are often steeped in arcane lore. The act of becoming a shade requires hidden knowledge. As a result, the same texts or teachers that provided a human with the secrets of the Trail of Five Darknesses might also divulge the secrets of becoming a binder. Indeed, many shade binders forge a gloom pact with the Shadowfell entity to which they originally pledged a piece of their soul.

Piety is even more alien to shade binders than it is to most shades, though some worship Sehanine and Vecna. Most believe that the gods are simply not powerful enough to aid in their ultimate ambitions.

Ability Scores

Determine your ability scores. As a binder, your command of arcane power—and of the enemies you control with that power—relies on your force of personality. Make Charisma your highest score.

Your second-highest score depends on the pact you make. If you want to manipulate darkness and move quickly in the shadows by forging a gloom pact, choose Dexterity. For the star pact, you need an agile mind capable of comprehending hidden truths. In this case, opt for a good Intelligence score.

You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1 each when you reach certain levels: 4th, 8th, 14th, 18th, 24th, and 28th. In addition, all your ability scores increase by 1 at 11th and 21st levels.

Your other abilities allow you to shape your character's approach to adventuring. Binders avoid melee combat, but a hardy body is still important to a wielder of eldritch secrets. Consider keeping your Constitution high. Binders also rely on reason and knowledge, so you might have a respectable Intelligence score even if you follow the gloom pact. If a binder lacks anything, it is often Wisdom, reflecting the rash curiosity and the hunger for power that might inspire a warlock's pact in the first place.

Skills

At 1st level, choose four trained skills from the following list of class skills: Arcana, Bluff, Dungeoneering, History, Insight, Intimidate, Religion, Streetwise, and Thievery.

A binder knows firsthand that ignorance is a weakness, and Arcana is a common skill among those who follow this path. Binders most often focus only on those hidden truths related to their own pact and power, but a lack of familiarity with other facets of the arcane can be a hindrance to that power. History is also useful for learning about legends and past events that can reveal the existence of magical lore and long-lost relics. To help defray the suspicion that dogs a binder, Bluff is also a useful skill.

As much as the pact you choose, your skills say something about your past and your ambitions. If you have training in Streetwise, you might have grown up as part of the lower class, becoming a binder to escape that life and turn the tables on those who oppressed you. Training in Dungeoneering might mean you have fought aberrant creatures in the past, perhaps inspiring you to take up the star pact and confront such creatures with their own power. Your Intimidate skill might indicate that you enjoy cowing weaker characters with your dark powers—and might make you work harder to prevent that power from corrupting you.

Class Features and Powers

Note which class features and powers you gain at 1st level, as specified on the Binder Heroic Tier table on page 66. Also note the powers and class features you gain for the pact you chose for your character.

In addition, you need to choose a daily spell. Your choice of pact provides a good guide to picking which spell should fit your character best. If you chose the gloom pact, then web of shadows demonstrates your ability to manipulate the darkness. The star pact allows you to infuse shadow with the madness from beyond the stars with hateful shade.

Feats

Choose one feat at 1st level. You gain an additional feat at every even-numbered level, plus a feat at 11th and 21st levels.

Implements are important to your warlock powers, so implement training feats are often a good choice. Wand Expertise can make your attack powers more accurate, whereas Rod Expertise gives you a defensive edge that can keep you away from enemies in battle. Your defensive tactics can also be improved by Defensive Mobility or other feats from the vigilant reflexes category. Your ties to the power of shadow might be expressed through many of the feats in this book.

Equipment

You have proficiency with the following types of armor: cloth and leather. You have proficiency with the following types of weapons: simple melee and simple ranged. You also know how to use rods and wands as implements.

You have 100 gp to buy your starting equipment. Unless you have a good reason to wear cloth armor, buy a suit of leather armor. Then purchase an implement, particularly if you took an implement training feat. Your combat powers incorporate mainly ranged and area attacks, and your tactics will likely keep you away from your enemies. However, you might buy a simple weapon for those rare occasions when you need to make a melee basic attack or an opportunity attack. Spend the rest of your money on adventuring supplies.

Defenses and Hit Points

Calculate your defenses using your ability modifiers and the bonus for your character's armor. In addition, you gain a +1 bonus to Reflex and Will.

You start with hit points equal to 12 + your Constitution score. You gain 5 hit points each time you gain a level. You have a number of healing surges per day equal to 6 + your Constitution modifier.

Alignment and Final Details

At this point, you should have all the mechanical details of your character determined. There are a few more decisions to make.

Pick an alignment that matches your character's outlook on the world. Like most warlocks, you are probably unaligned. Although you are close to your allies and you do undertake heroic deeds, you need flexible ethics to tolerate the demands of your pact.

Finally, check with your DM to see where you are from in the campaign setting, the people you already know, and what your current situation is. It also helps to spend a few minutes working out how or if you know the other players' characters.

Eida, halfling binder

Heroic Binder

Fresh from having forged the pact that grants you your power, you are on the road to your ultimate destiny. Be on the lookout for opportunities to gain even greater arcane might as you expand your gifts.

Level 1: Shadow Claws

One of the first spells you master is one that can freeze any foe in place with the power of darkness.

Benefit: You gain the shadow claws power.

Shadow Claws — Warlock Attack 1

A cloud of freezing shadow wraps around your foe, turning into a snarling beast that lashes out when that enemy tries to move.

At-Will ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1d10 + Charisma modifier cold damage.
Level 21: 2d10 + Charisma modifier cold damage.
Effect: If the target moves during its next turn, it takes cold damage equal to 2 + your Dexterity or Intelligence modifier.

Level 1: Pact Boon

The entities with which your pact is forged care little for how their power is used. Their only demand is tribute in the form of the spiritual essence of your defeated foes, and they grant you the power to dispatch those foes with ease.

ERIC BELISLE

Benefit: You gain an at-will attack power and a utility power associated with your pact (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79).

Level 1: Shadow Twist

When a creature fights alone, the energy imbued in its shadow becomes more sharply defined. Your command of shadow magic allows you to channel your power through this shadow with added potency.

Benefit: You gain a +1 bonus to ranged attack rolls and area attack rolls against any enemy that has no other creature adjacent to it.

Level 1: Shadow Walk

As you move, your shadow flickers and shifts to obscure you from others' view.

Benefit: During your turn, if you move 3 or more squares away from where you started your turn, you gain partial concealment until the end of your next turn.

Level 1: Pact Encounter Power

The pact you have forged with otherworldly entities grants you a potent measure of their sinister power.

Benefit: You gain an encounter attack power associated with your pact (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79).

Level 1: Daily Power

Shadow courses across the battlefield under your direction, giving your foes a taste of your deadliest spells.

Benefit: You gain a 1st-level warlock daily attack power of your choice.

Hateful Shade

You grant an additional shadow to a foe, then infuse that shadow with madness as it attacks your enemy. As dark hands clutch the foe's throat, it experiences a taste of the Shadowfell's sinister touch.

Hateful Shade — Warlock Attack 1

With a gesture, you wrap your enemy with a dark shroud that threatens to choke the life out of it.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Force, Implement, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Will
Hit: 3d8 + Charisma modifier force damage, and ongoing 5 force damage (save ends). The target can also take a move action to make an opposed Acrobatics check or Athletics check against you. If it succeeds, the ongoing damage ends.

Web of Shadows

The shadow you summon becomes a solid weave of darkness, entangling creatures like a black net. Binders use this spell to secure an escape, leaving the web in place to capture their pursuers.

Web of Shadows — Warlock Attack 1

Strands of darkness shroud the battlefield around your foes, forming a dense web of black tendrils that can hold any creature fast.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d6 + Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is slowed (save ends).
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter. Any creature that willingly enters the zone is immobilized until the end of its next turn.

Level 2: Utility Power

As you uncover more of the arcane secrets of the binder, you learn to use your powers to connect yourself to or separate yourself from your foes.

Benefit: You gain a 2nd-level warlock utility power of your choice.

Shade Twin

You steal a sliver of an enemy's shadow, absorbing it into your own to mimic that foe's appearance. Your enemy suffers a psychic shock from any blow that strikes you, but each such attack strains the arcane link you have forged between the two of you.

Shade Twin — Warlock Utility 2

Darkness swirls around you. When it passes, you have taken on the guise of another creature.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Illusion, Psychic, Shadow
Minor Action Close burst 10
Target: One creature in the burst
Effect: You adopt the target's appearance until the end of your next turn. Creatures that observe you using this power are aware that you have done so. You gain a +5 power bonus to Bluff checks related to mimicking the target. Whenever you take damage while you have adopted the target's appearance, the target takes psychic damage equal to half the damage you take. Whenever the target takes damage from this effect, roll a d20. On a 10 or higher, the effect ends.
Sustain Minor: The effect persists until the end of your next turn.

Spectral Fade

Using this spell, you step into the space between the planes to render yourself invisible. You remain there for only a moment, because lurking too long beyond the world can have catastrophic consequences, but it buys you enough time to escape your enemies or land an attack.

Eida turns the shadow of an azer into a real creature that threatens her enemy from behind

ERIC BELISLE

Spectral Fade Warlock Utility 2

You become misty and transparent, fading from your enemies' view for a moment.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Illusion
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You become invisible until the end of your turn.

Level 3: Pact Encounter Power

The entities behind your pact guard their arcane might carefully, but you have learned to seize a greater measure of their power.

Benefit: You gain an encounter attack power associated with your pact (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79).

Level 4: Ability Score Increase

Shadow is becoming so ingrained within you that it infuses your essential nature and makes you more than you were before.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 4: Pact Lore

The mastery of your pact grants you a keen insight into the nature of magic and the realm from which your power is drawn.

Benefit: You gain a Pact Lore feature associated with your pact (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79).

Level 5: Daily Power

The power of shadow becomes a deadly weapon in your hands, letting you control your enemies' movement as you deliver them to their doom.

Benefit: You gain a new warlock daily attack power of your level or lower.

Shard of Darkness

The bitter cold of the Shadowfell leaves its mark on any creature it touches. With the power of shard of darkness at your command, you can slow even the most aggressive melee combatant, hurling the blade again and again until it strikes true.

Shard of Darkness Warlock Attack 5

A frozen blade of raw shadowstuff appears in your hand, then cripples a foe with cold when it strikes.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3d10 + Charisma modifier cold damage, and the target is slowed (save ends).
Miss: The power is not expended.

Well of Shadows

The raw essence of the Shadowfell forms a foul mire of darkness where it spills in from that realm at your command.

Well of Shadows Warlock Attack 5

A pool of darkness forms beneath your foes, clinging to them like something alive as they struggle to escape.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d10 + Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is slowed (save ends).
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter. Until the zone ends, you can use the secondary power at will.
Secondary Power (Implement, Necrotic, Shadow)
Opportunity Action Ranged 10
Trigger: An enemy enters the zone willingly or ends its turn there.
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 5 + Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is slowed (save ends). If the target is already slowed, it is instead immobilized and takes ongoing 10 necrotic damage (save ends both).

Level 6: Utility Power

Shadow infuses your body and spirit, allowing you to cross the boundary between light and darkness.

Benefit: You gain a new warlock utility power of your level or lower.

Shadow Ride

By transforming your body into shadow, you can slip inside the space occupied by a foe. All its best efforts to shake you off are in vain.

Shadow Ride Warlock Utility 6

Your body flows as liquid darkness, pooling around another creature like a second shadow.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Shadow
Move Action Personal
Effect: You shift up to 2 squares and can enter any enemy's space during this movement. You can end this movement in an enemy's space. If you do so, whenever the enemy moves before the start of your next turn, you move with it, remaining in its space. You do not provoke opportunity attacks for this movement. At the start of your next turn, you appear in the nearest unoccupied square.

Walk Through Darkness

By drawing on the power of darkness, you can slip out of phase with your present surroundings, flowing freely like a stream of shadow.

Walk Through Darkness Warlock Utility 6

As you move, your body becomes shadow, slipping through foes and barriers with equal ease.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Shadow
Move Action Personal

Effect: You shift up to 10 squares. You are phasing and insubstantial during this shift.

Level 7: Pact Encounter Power

As your devotion to otherworldly power increases, you reap the benefit of another deadly talent.

Benefit: You gain an encounter attack power associated with your pact (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79).

Level 8: Ability Score Increase

You are long accustomed now to the darkness within you, and your body and mind become more formidable.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 9: Summon Warlock's Ally

As you grow closer to the power behind your pact, your magic can summon a servant of that power into your service for a short time.

Benefit: You gain the summon warlock's ally power. The game statistics for the creature you summon with this power appear in your pact's entry (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79).

Summon Warlock's Ally Warlock Attack 9

A pulse of light and shadow heralds the arrival of a creature from the planes, pulled into your presence to serve you.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Summoning
Minor Action Ranged 5

Effect: You summon a creature associated with your pact in an unoccupied space within range. The creature is an ally to you and your allies.

The creature lacks actions of its own. Instead, you spend actions to command it mentally, choosing from the actions in the creature's description. You must have line of effect to the creature to command it. When you command the creature, you and the creature share knowledge but not senses.

When the creature makes a check, you make the roll using your game statistics, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties.

The creature lasts until it drops to 0 hit points, at which point you lose a healing surge (or hit points equal to your surge value if you have no surges left). Otherwise, it lasts until you dismiss it as a minor action or until the end of the encounter.

"You have good reason to fear, friend. There are things out there, among the stars, that no mortal mind was meant to know. Peer into the firmament and let your eyes unfocus until it all becomes a blur. Then you will see. You will see the darkness between, and thus glimpse the power I command."

—Raven

Level 10: Utility Power

Your heroic mastery of the power of shadow lets you shape darkness by the force of your will, creating objects and modes of transport beyond normal reckoning.

Benefit: You gain a new warlock utility power of your level or lower.

Bridge of Shades

The void of the Far Realm and the darkness of the Shadowfell are said to possess an internal geometry unworkable in the mortal realm. By manipulating shadow, you bend space to your will to create a shortcut across the battlefield.

Bridge of Shades Warlock Utility 10

Twin pools of darkness shimmer to life at your command, creating a shadowy bridge between them.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Shadow, Teleportation
Minor Action Ranged 5

Effect: Choose two squares in range. Until the end of your next turn, the two squares are considered to be adjacent to each other for the purpose of movement or making melee attacks. Moving from one square to the other is teleportation, although a creature doesn't need to be able to see the destination square.

Shadow Armor

The shadow you control can be shaped with the strength of steel, shrouding you from your enemies' sight even as you protect yourself against their attacks.

Shadow Armor Warlock Utility 10

Shadow coalesces around you to take the form of a macabre suit of plate armor.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Shadow, Teleportation
Minor Action Personal

Effect: You gain a +2 power bonus to Stealth checks and a +2 power bonus to all defenses until the end of the encounter. As a minor action, you can end this effect and then teleport up to 5 squares. You then become invisible until the end of your next turn, or until you hit or miss with an attack roll.

Paragon Binder

Your adventuring success demonstrates the wisdom of your having set out along a dark path. You have accomplished much with the help of your unseen allies. Now, even greater understanding and power are yours to seek and seize.

Paragon Path: Master Binder

At 11th level, your binder takes on a paragon path, typically the master binder paragon path. By focusing on the study and arcane practice of your pact, you uncover its greater mysteries and master increasingly powerful magic.

Prerequisite: Only a binder can take this paragon path.

BINDER PARAGON TIER

| Total XP | Level | Feats Known | Class Features and Powers |
|---|---|---|---|
| 26,000 | 11 | +1 | Ability score increaseBinder's Action [master binder]Binder's Favor [master binder]Pact encounter power [master binder] |
| 32,000 | 12 | +1 | Pact keeper's pledge [master binder] |
| 39,000 | 13 | – | Pact encounter power |
| 47,000 | 14 | +1 | Ability score increase |
| 57,000 | 15 | – | Daily power |
| 69,000 | 16 | +1 | Binder's Boon [master binder]Utility power |
| 83,000 | 17 | – | Pact encounter power |
| 99,000 | 18 | +1 | Ability score increase |
| 119,000 | 19 | – | Daily power |
| 143,000 | 20 | +1 | Offering of magic [master binder] |

Level 11: Ability Score Increase

As if to prepare you for the paragon tier, your body and mind gird themselves against future threats by making you more formidable in every way.

Benefit: Each of your ability scores increases by 1.

Level 11: Binder's Action

Master binder paragon path feature

Your mastery of the magic woven into your pact allows you to draw on additional power when you push yourself beyond your normal limits.

Benefit: You gain a paragon path feature associated with your pact (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79).

Level 11: Binder's Favor

Master binder paragon path feature

The entities to which you have bound yourself recognize your growing power and grant you a unique boon.

Benefit: You gain a paragon path feature associated with your pact (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79).

Level 11: Pact Encounter Power

Master binder paragon path feature

The gifts you gain from your pact hone your understanding and mastery of arcane power.

Benefit: You gain an encounter attack power associated with your pact (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79).

Level 12: Pact Keeper's Pledge

Master binder paragon path feature

You are an increasingly valuable partner in the pact that grants your power. Your diverse associations in the realms beyond the world grant you numerous options when you need help.

Benefit: You gain the pact keeper's pledge power.

Pact Keeper's Pledge — Master Binder Utility 12

You invoke the power of your pact, whispering a plea for aid to the entities that forged it with you.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Healing, Shadow, Teleportation
No Action — Personal

Effect: You gain one of the following benefits.

- ✦ You teleport up to 10 squares. You do not need to be able to see the destination square.
- ✦ You end one effect on you that a save can end.
- ✦ Until the end of your next turn, you reduce all damage you take to 0.

Special: You can use this power only during your turn.

Level 13: Pact Encounter Power

Your power increases by leaps and bounds, and the spells that once defined your approach to combat can no longer keep up with the threats you face.

Benefit: You gain an encounter attack power associated with your pact (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79). This new power replaces the encounter attack power you gained at 1st level from your pact.

Level 14: Ability Score Increase

Your continued cultivation of the dark forces within you enhances your physical and mental resilience.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 15: Daily Power

The power you channel through your pact is a living part of you now, helping to shape your most potent spells.

Benefit: You can gain a new warlock daily attack power of your level or lower. If you do so, this new power must replace one of the daily attack powers you already have from your class (usually your lowest-level daily attack power).

Menacing Shadow

You breathe life into shadow, conjuring a dark presence that fights under your command.

Menacing Shadow — Warlock Attack 15

A shadowy figure arises at your command, leaping around the battlefield to leave your foes senseless.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Conjuration, Shadow
Minor Action Ranged 5
Effect: You conjure a shadow in an unoccupied square within range. The shadow lasts until the end of the encounter. While the shadow persists, you can use the secondary power through the shadow once per round.
Move Action: You move the shadow to an unoccupied square within 5 squares of you.

Secondary Power (Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow)
Minor Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d6 + Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is dazed until the end of your next turn.

Oubliette of the Void

The bleakness of the Shadowfell and the darkness between the stars create equally horrific prisons. At your word, maddening shadows weave a dark cell that saps your foes' vitality and sanity, whispering of the profound oblivion against which no creature can stand.

"Do you fear the dark? You should, you know. The shadows hide the most delicious secrets, the dark the most terrible revelations. Listen! I can hear them. Can you?"

—Zora the Shadowwalker

Oubliette of the Void — Warlock Attack 15

Walls of twisted shadow arise to entrap your enemies and scour their minds.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Psychic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 10 squares
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Charisma vs. Will
Hit: 3d6 + Charisma modifier psychic damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. Any enemy that starts its turn in the zone and then willingly leaves the zone during its turn takes 10 psychic damage. While in the zone, enemies take a -2 penalty to attack rolls.
Move Action: You move the zone up to 3 squares.
Sustain Minor: The zone persists until the end of your next turn.

Level 16: Binder's Boon

Master binder paragon path feature

Your continued dedication to your pact grants you an increased understanding of the underlying mechanics of arcane power.

Benefit: You gain a paragon path feature associated with your pact (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79).

Level 16: Utility Power

As your soul becomes imbued with the dark magic you have mastered, you gain the power to reshape chance and fate.

Benefit: You gain a new warlock utility power of your level or lower.

Offering of Blood

The entities with which you forged your pact care only that you feed them, and you have learned to offer your own essence to appease their appetites. In exchange, you gain a measure of their strength.

Offering of Blood — Warlock Utility 16

You grimace in pain as your magic exacts the price for correcting your misfortune.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Shadow
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You make an attack roll, a damage roll, or a skill check and dislike the result.
Effect: You take damage equal to your level. You can then reroll the attack roll, damage roll, or skill check. You must use the new result.

Soul of the Void By merging your physical body with the raw stuff of shadow, you dwell in a place halfway between life and death for a time. Only the embrace of death can heal you in this form, but your enemies will feel the power of the darkness inside you.

Soul of the Void — Warlock Utility 16

A palpable feeling of death surrounds you as your soul seals its connection to the darkness.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Healing, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the end of the encounter or until you drop to 0 hit points or fewer, you gain a +5 power bonus to necrotic damage rolls, and you cannot regain hit points. In addition, the next time during this encounter that you start your turn at 0 hit points or fewer, you can spend a healing surge.

Level 17: Pact Encounter Power

As your connection to your dark allies deepens, the power you call upon strips away the lesser knowledge on which your pact was forged.

Benefit: You gain an encounter attack power associated with your pact (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79). This new power replaces the encounter attack power you gained at 3rd level.

Level 18: Ability Score Increase

Seemingly, there is no end to how much you can hone your abilities by surrendering to, and taking control of, the power of the dark.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 19: Daily Power

You feel the pull of epic power draw you on, granting you the ability to call down the darkness to hound your enemies.

Benefit: You can gain a new warlock daily attack power of your level or lower. If you do so, this new power must replace one of the daily attack powers you already have from your class (usually your lowest-level daily attack power).

Shadow Mire Shadow swirls at your command, becoming a deadly vortex of darkness. Like creatures caught in the dread necrotic bogs of the Shadowfell, your enemies are slowly drained of life and the will to escape.

Shadow Mire — Warlock Attack 19

Dense shadowstuff swirls across the battlefield, capturing your enemies in a mire of dark energy.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 20 squares
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d8 + Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is slowed (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is slowed (save ends).
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter. Any creature that tries to leave the zone must roll a d20. On a 10 or higher, it cannot leave the zone during its current turn and its movement ends. Any creature that ends its turn in the zone takes 10 necrotic damage.

Star of Death's Omen The darkest places of the void are filled with a cold that destroys all life it touches. This spell draws forth a deadly mote of that energy, which seethes to be unleashed.

Star of Death's Omen — Warlock Attack 19

A pulsing black star appears above your enemy, marking its doom.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 20
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 4d10 + Charisma modifier cold damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).
Miss: The power is not expended, and you gain a +2 power bonus to the next attack roll you make before the end of your next turn.

Level 20: Offering of Magic

Master binder paragon path feature

When you attempt to offer up the entire spirit of an enemy to your pact-forged masters, those masters channel more potent power through you.

Benefit: You gain the offering of magic power.

Offering of Magic — Master Binder Attack 20

Tendrils of arcane force slam into your foe. When it falls, it releases a storm of power that you can call on to assault a different enemy.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Force, Implement
Standard Action Ranged 20
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 5d8 + Charisma modifier force damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: You can use your Pact Boon power now, regardless of its trigger. Also, if you reduce the target to 0 hit points with this attack, you gain an additional standard action this turn.

A malformed shadow answers the call of the shadow legion power

Epic Binder

In the beginning, you sought immortal power in the heart of darkness. Now, you have mastered that power so well that you have become a creature beyond natural comprehension.

When your binder reaches 21st level, he or she takes on an epic destiny. This epic destiny represents the final destination at the end of your dark road. Like your paragon path, it grants a set of related features and powers.

BINDER EPIC TIER

| Total XP | Level | Feats Known | Class Features and Powers |
|---|---|---|---|
| 175,000 | 21 | +1 | Ability score increaseEpic destiny feature |
| 210,000 | 22 | +1 | Master of magic |
| 255,000 | 23 | – | Pact encounter power |
| 310,000 | 24 | +1 | Ability score increaseEpic destiny feature |
| 375,000 | 25 | – | Greater summon warlock's ally |
| 450,000 | 26 | +1 | Epic destiny feature |
| 550,000 | 27 | – | Pact encounter power |
| 675,000 | 28 | +1 | Ability score increase |
| 825,000 | 29 | – | Daily power |
| 1,000,000 | 30 | +1 | Epic destiny feature |

Level 21: Ability Score Increase

Your entrance into the epic tier is heralded by a rush of vitality and clarity. You are now stronger, wiser, and even more unassailable.

Benefit: Each of your ability scores increases by 1.

Level 21: Epic Destiny Feature

As you enter the epic tier, your final destiny comes into focus. Perhaps you are fated to save the world from great evil, or maybe fate has dictated that you must fight against a god. The destiny you pursue shapes you just as your actions shape the cosmos.

Benefit: You gain a feature associated with your epic destiny.

Level 22: Master of Magic

Your experience with the forces of darkness has shown you the true nature of magic as the quintessential building block of the cosmos. Armed with this knowledge, you transcend the mortal limits of arcane power.

Master of Magic — Warlock Utility 22

The secrets of the planes are revealed to you, allowing you to access any magic to suit your needs.

Daily ✦ Arcane
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: You or one ally in the burst
Effect: Choose one of the following effects.
- ✦ Arcane (Teleportation): You teleport the target up to 20 squares.
- ✦ Divine (Healing): The target can spend a healing surge. In addition, he or she can make a saving throw with a +5 power bonus.
- ✦ Shadow: The target is insubstantial and weakened until the end of the encounter. The target can end this effect as a minor action.

Level 23: Pact Encounter Power

As you move toward your epic destiny, the most potent aspects of your pact come to the fore.

Benefit: You gain an encounter attack power associated with your pact (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79). This new power replaces the encounter attack power you gained at 7th level.

Level 24: Ability Score Increase

Yet again, the darkness in your soul works physical and mental changes within you.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

DAARKEN

Level 24: Epic Destiny Feature

Your place in the cosmic order becomes cemented as you gain still more power. At this point, fate seems to bend and weave to ensure your survival.

Benefit: You gain a feature associated with your epic destiny.

Level 25: Greater Summon Warlock's Ally

Your ability to summon assistance from across the planes grows stronger, allowing you to summon a more powerful creature.

Benefit: You gain another creature that you can summon when you use summon warlock's ally. The specific creature depends on your pact (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79).

Level 26: Epic Destiny Feature

Your foes' worst attacks cannot sway you from the great goal that lies before you. When all seems lost, you have the strength and determination to deny death and fight on.

Benefit: You gain a feature (typically a utility power) associated with your epic destiny.

Level 27: Pact Encounter Power

As you near the apex of your power, you bring the most potent forces of your pact to bear with deadly frequency.

Benefit: You gain an encounter attack power associated with your pact (gloom, page 76, or star, page 79). This new power replaces the encounter attack power you gained at 13th level.

Level 28: Ability Score Increase

Your destiny is not yet fulfilled, and you need to be stronger and sharper to stand up to the challenges that await.

Benefit: You increase two ability scores of your choice by 1.

Level 29: Daily Power

The ultimate expression of your pact's power is now firmly in your grasp. The darkness you wield has become an extension of your will, and the ruin of any who dare stand against you.

Benefit: You can gain a new warlock daily attack power of your level or lower. If you do so, this new power must replace one of the daily attack powers you already have from your class (usually your lowest-level daily attack power).

Draining Void

This horrid spell floods the battlefield with the utter darkness of the void, cutting both friend and foe off from the fray. The seething despair found within that blackness scars any creature it touches.

Draining Void — Warlock Attack 29

A cloud of swirling darkness rises on the battlefield, utterly freezing any creature that lingers too long within it.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 20 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Charisma vs. Will
Hit: 8d6 + Charisma modifier cold and necrotic damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. The zone is heavily obscured and blocks line of sight, and creatures inside the zone cannot attack creatures outside the zone. A creature that enters the zone or ends its turn there takes 15 cold and necrotic damage.
Move Action: You move the zone up to 3 squares.
Sustain Minor: The zone persists until the end of your next turn.

Shadow Legion

As you near the height of the epic tier, your mastery over shadow allows you to call forth creatures of living darkness to do your bidding. Surrounded and cut off, your enemies must fight for their lives against spectral versions of themselves.

Shadow Legion — Warlock Attack 29

Shadow erupts from the ground at your command, becoming creatures of darkness that lunge at your foes.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Conjuration, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Area burst 3 within 20 squares
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Effect: You conjure a shadow of each target, and each shadow lasts until the end of the encounter. A target's shadow is the same size as the target and appears adjacent to the target. Each shadow has a melee basic attack identical to its target's, and makes that attack against the target when it appears, with a +4 power bonus to the attack roll and the damage roll. An enemy takes 5 necrotic damage for each shadow adjacent to it or in its space at the end of its turn.

Level 30: Epic Destiny Feature

You have achieved the absolute pinnacle of your abilities. On the verge of facing your final destiny, you gain one last edge that could spell the difference between ultimate victory and utter defeat.

Benefit: You gain a feature associated with your epic destiny.

Gloom Pact (Binder)

The gloom pact of the warlock draws on the power of creatures that dwell forever in gloom and shadow. Such arcane entities can be found in vast numbers in the Shadowfell. The masters of the gloom pact remain effectively unknown, even to those who serve them. However, many binders who forge this pact believe that they channel the power of the dark lords trapped in the Shadowfell. Locked in their prisons, these dark lords are beyond concern for how their power is used—making them perfect partners for the arcane might a binder seeks.

A good Dexterity score benefits a gloom pact warlock, since a subtle touch is necessary to properly command the power of void and shadow.

Any warlock can choose to take powers of the gloom pact that have levels, but the magic of the binder is specifically suited to the pact. A binder gains additional benefit from certain gloom pact powers, as noted in the power's description.

Level 1: Gloom Pact Boon (Binder)

You have an aptitude for the shaping of shadow. The darkness that eddies around you on the battlefield responds to your command, carrying allies and enemies like dead leaves on the wind.

Benefit: You gain the echoing dirge and shadow warp powers.

Echoing Dirge — Warlock Attack

Shadows swirl around your foes, drawing forth dark memories that cause them to recoil in fear.

At-Will ✦ Arcane, Fear, Implement, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Close blast 5
Target: One or two creatures in the blast
Attack: Charisma vs. Will
Hit: 1d8 + Charisma modifier psychic damage, and you push the target up to 2 squares.
Level 21: 2d10 + Charisma modifier psychic damage.

Shadow Warp — Warlock Utility

When a creature falls, you draw strength from its death to carry another creature across the battlefield.

At-Will ✦ Arcane, Shadow
Free Action Close burst 5
Trigger: You reduce a creature to 0 hit points, or an enemy adjacent to you drops to 0 hit points.
Target: You or one creature in the burst
Effect: You slide the target up to 3 squares.
Special: You can use this power only once per round.

Level 1: Gloom Pact Encounter Power

Legends tell of a shadowy beast that dwells in the mist that borders and encases the domains of dread. The magic of the gloom pact gives this hound form and substance at your command, driving your foes from you in terror.

Hound of Dark Omen — Warlock Attack 1

Shadows and mist swirl around the target, coalescing into the form of a snarling hound that emits a dreadful howl.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Fear, Implement, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Will
Hit: 2d8 + Charisma modifier psychic damage, and you push the target up to 2 squares.
Gloom Pact (Binder): The target takes psychic damage equal to 2 + your Dexterity modifier if it doesn't move before the end of its next turn.

Level 3: Gloom Pact Encounter Power

You call on the power of shadow to extend your reach across the battlefield, crafting a swarm of clawed hands that surround and tear into your foe.

Ebon Claws — Warlock Attack 3

At your command, clawed hands crafted from shadow wrap around your foe.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d8 + Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is slowed until the end of your next turn.
Gloom Pact (Binder): Until the end of your turn, you can use a minor action to deal necrotic damage equal to your Dexterity modifier to one creature adjacent to the target.

Level 4: Gloom Pact Lore

The secrets of shadow open your eyes and protect your body against the power of death.

Benefit: You gain darkvision and resist 5 necrotic. If you already have necrotic resistance of 5 or higher, that resistance instead increases by 5.

Level 7: Gloom Pact Encounter Power

The dark energy of the Shadowfell spreads easily from a point of darkness you create. As your foe is stricken by the power of your spell, your other enemies are quickly drawn to share its suffering.

Pall of Darkness — Warlock Attack 7

You encase your foe in a sphere of absolute darkness that steals away its life and sight.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d6 + Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is blinded until the end of your next turn.
Gloom Pact (Binder): Until the end of your next turn, enemies grant combat advantage and cannot make opportunity attacks while adjacent to the target.

Level 9: Binder's Ally (Gloom)

A shadow lurk is a creature born of a sliver of gloom and given the barest level of sentience. It flutters like a ghost, shrouding you as it lashes out through armor, flesh, and bone to claw at the spirit and soul within its target.

Benefit: You can use summon warlock's ally to summon a shadow lurk.

Shadow Lurk — Summoned Creature
Medium shadow humanoid

HP your bloodied value; Healing Surges none, but you can expend a healing surge for the shadow lurk if an effect allows it to spend one
Defenses your defenses + 2, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties
Speed 8

☼ Mist of Shadows ✦ Aura 2
You have partial concealment while you are in the aura.

ǂ Standard Action ✦ At-Will
Attack: Melee 1 (one creature); your level + 5 vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d10 + your Charisma modifier damage, and the target is immobilized until the end of your next turn.

Minor Action ✦ At-Will (1/round)
Effect: The shadow lurk either walks, shifts, runs, stands up, squeezes, or crawls.

Minor Action ✦ Encounter
Effect: Each ally adjacent to the shadow lurk becomes invisible until the end of your next turn.

Level 11: Binder's Action (Gloom)

Master binder paragon path feature
Your eyes become orbs of absolute darkness, allowing you to see the life energy flowing within your foes. With this sight, you can focus your attacks to increase your enemies' vulnerability.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to use an attack power, you have combat advantage against each target of that attack.

Level 11: Binder's Favor (Gloom)

Master binder paragon path feature
With a gesture, you can use the fleeting energy of echoing dirge to affect another enemy.

Benefit: When you hit with your echoing dirge, one additional creature in the blast takes psychic damage equal to your Dexterity modifier.

Level 11: Gloom Pact Encounter Power

Master binder paragon path feature
By leaching the light from the battlefield, you create an impenetrable cloud of darkness within which whispering shades and lurking shadows feast upon your foes.

Tide of Night — Master Binder Attack 11

A swirling cloud of darkness shrouds your enemies, concealing all but their shrieks of pain and terror.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Charisma vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3d6 + Charisma modifier necrotic damage.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the start of your next turn. The zone is heavily obscured and blocks line of sight. Any enemy that ends its turn in the zone takes necrotic damage equal to 5 + your Dexterity modifier.

Level 13: Gloom Pact Encounter Power

You turn a bit of coalesced shadow into a dread spectral beast that chills your foes to the bone.

Haunting Shadow — Warlock Attack 13

A second shadow clings to your foe, becoming a beast of chilling darkness that claws at any creatures in reach.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d8 + Charisma modifier cold damage, and you slide the target up to 2 squares.
Effect: Until the start of your next turn, any creature that ends its turn adjacent to the target takes 5 cold damage.
Gloom Pact (Binder): The target takes cold damage equal to 5 + your Dexterity modifier if it willingly moves on its next turn.

Level 16: Binder's Boon (Gloom)

Master binder paragon path feature
The shadows that dance around you in combat can render those who ride them capable of moving through solid objects.

Benefit: When you use your shadow warp, you can slide the target through enemies' spaces and through blocking terrain. The target must end in a space it could normally occupy.

Level 17: Gloom Pact Encounter Power

Many spells of shadow focus on animating and controlling a single shadow, but devouring tide takes the opposite approach. Uncountable shards of shadow-stuff are spawned at your command, each possessing the hunger of the void.

Devouring Tide — Warlock Attack 17

A stream of black motes erupts from your outstretched hand, rushing forward to swarm your foes like a cloud of ravenous insects.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Shadow
Standard Action Close blast 3
Target: Each creature in the blast
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d8 + Charisma modifier damage, and the target grants combat advantage until the end of your next turn.
Gloom Pact (Binder): You also slide each target up to 3 squares.

Level 23: Gloom Pact Encounter Power

Light and shadow destroy each other where they touch. By imbuing the power of darkness and radiance into your foe, you let the energy of that destruction consume it from the inside out.

Umbral Radiance — Warlock Attack 23

Shadow flows like liquid to smother and blind your foe, pulsing with a dead-black radiance.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Radiant, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Will
Hit: 2d12 + Charisma modifier necrotic and radiant damage, and the target is blinded until the end of your next turn.
Gloom Pact (Binder): Until the start of your next turn, you and your allies are invisible while within 3 squares of the target.

Level 25: Greater Binder's Ally (Gloom)

A gloom beast resembles an enormous hunting cat whose yellow eyes glare out from swirling, smoky darkness. Like a displacer beast, it has two whiplike tentacles emerging from its back, which attack with stinging cold that spreads numbness throughout the body.

Gloom Beast — Summoned Creature
Large shadow humanoid
HP your bloodied value; Healing Surges none, but you can expend a healing surge for the gloom beast if an effect allows it to spend one
Defenses your defenses, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties
Speed 8
☼ Disruptive Tentacles ✦ Aura 2
Enemies take a –2 penalty to attack rolls while in the aura.
ǂ Standard Action (necrotic) ✦ At-Will
Attack: Melee 3 (one creature); your level + 5 vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d12 + your Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is slowed (save ends).
Minor Action ✦ At-Will (1/round)
Effect: The gloom beast either walks, shifts, runs, stands up, squeezes, or crawls.
Minor Action (teleportation) ✦ Encounter
Effect: The gloom beast teleports adjacent to an enemy within 5 squares of you.
ǂ Immediate Reaction (necrotic) ✦ At-Will
Trigger: An enemy within 3 squares of the gloom beast attacks you.
Attack: Melee 3 (triggering enemy); your level + 5 vs. Fortitude
Hit: 10 necrotic damage, and the gloom beast pulls the target up to 2 squares.

Level 27: Gloom Pact Encounter Power

As your command of shadow magic reaches its heights, you create a portal into a distant region of the Shadowfell. Lashing out at an enemy, you banish it from the battle for a key moment, even as its shadowy afterimage flails in rage and pain.

Umbral Swap — Warlock Attack 27

A bolt of frigid shadow swallows your foe, then lashes out at creatures that linger too near.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d10 + Charisma modifier cold and necrotic damage, and the target is removed from play until the end of your next turn.
Gloom Pact (Binder): Choose a square in the target's space. Until the start of your next turn, any creature that ends its turn in that square or adjacent to it takes cold and necrotic damage equal to 10 + your Dexterity modifier.

Star Pact (Binder)

The night sky of the mortal realm is an unfathomable deep filled with uncountable stars. In the dark between those stars lies the Far Realm, where dread creatures creep just beyond the reach of mortal senses and sanity. Older than all other parts of creation, these entities can be observed only as celestial patterns and signs. A binder of the star pact learns to manipulate those fell patterns, and to channel power no mortal creature was meant to know.

Star pact warlocks depend on Intelligence to master the dangerous knowledge they pursue. Any warlock can choose to take powers of the star pact that have levels, but binders have a special affinity for the madness and magic it represents. A binder gains additional benefit from some star pact powers, as noted in the power's description.

Level 1: Star Pact Boon (Binder)

Your connection to the mysterious Far Realm allows you to thwart the sight and senses of your enemies. You shroud a foe's mind with a glimpse of the darkness beyond the stars.

Benefit: You gain the hidden lore and mind shadows powers.

Hidden Lore — Warlock Utility

You fade from the senses of your enemies, leaving them unaware of your presence.

At-Will ✦ Arcane, Shadow
Free Action — Personal
Trigger: You reduce a creature to 0 hit points, or an enemy adjacent to you drops to 0 hit points.
Effect: You become invisible until the end of your next turn.
Special: You can use this power only once per round.

Mind Shadows — Warlock Attack

Reality unravels into darkness around your enemy, breaking its grip on sanity.

At-Will ✦ Arcane, Implement, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action — Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Will
Hit: 1d10 + Charisma modifier psychic damage. Until the end of your next turn, the target cannot see any of your allies who are 3 or more squares away from it.
Level 21: 2d10 + Charisma modifier psychic damage.

Level 1: Star Pact Encounter Power

The power of the Far Realm lets you shape shadow in the likeness of the creatures that writhe beyond the void.

Shadow Tentacles — Warlock Attack 1

Darkness flares to produce a sphere of writhing tendrils that crush your foes in their icy grip.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action — Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d10 + Charisma modifier cold damage, and the target is slowed until the end of your next turn.
Star Pact (Binder): The burst also creates a zone of difficult terrain that lasts until the end of your next turn.

Level 3: Star Pact Encounter Power

By opening a small rent in the boundary between this world and the lightless void, you allow the horror of that darkness to wash across your enemies.

Void Blast — Warlock Attack 3

A mote of darkness appears before you, then explodes to envelop your foes in a field of shadow and madness.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Psychic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action — Close blast 3
Target: Each creature in the blast
Attack: Charisma vs. Will
Hit: 2d6 + Charisma modifier psychic damage.
Effect: The blast creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. The zone is heavily obscured and blocks line of sight.
Star Pact (Binder): Any creature other than you that ends its turn in the zone takes psychic damage equal to your Intelligence modifier.

Level 4: Star Pact Lore

Touched by knowledge that is not meant to be tasted by mortals, your mind opens to the power of the Far Realm.

Benefit: You gain resist 5 psychic and a +2 bonus to Arcana checks and Religion checks.

Level 7: Star Pact Encounter Power

The eternal darkness that spreads between the stars is charged with deadly cold. By manipulating your power to form a black cyst of this nothingness, you freeze your foe from the inside out.

Cyst of Darkness — Warlock Attack 7

With a whispered incantation, you plant a seed of chilling darkness within your enemy.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d6 + Charisma modifier cold and necrotic damage.
Star Pact (Binder): At the start of your next turn, you slide the target up to 3 squares. The target and each creature adjacent to it at the end of the slide take cold and necrotic damage equal to your Intelligence modifier.

Level 9: Binder's Ally (Star)

The soul eater is a strange creature spawned between the stars. It appears as an inky cloud of darkness from which emerge two gnarled claws. Feeding on the death energy of other creatures, the soul eater channels that energy to you in the heat of combat.

Benefit: You can use summon warlock's ally to summon a soul eater.

Soul Eater — Summoned Creature
Medium aberrant animate

HP your bloodied value; Healing Surges none, but you can expend a healing surge for the soul eater if an effect allows it to spend one
Defenses your defenses, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties
Speed 1, fly 8 (hover)

☼ Soul Devourer ✦ Aura 1
When any creature drops to 0 hit points or fewer while in the aura, you gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls until the end of your next turn.

ǂ Standard Action ✦ At-Will
Attack: Melee 1 (one creature); your level + 5 vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1d10 + your Charisma modifier damage, and you gain 5 temporary hit points. If you already have temporary hit points, you instead gain a +2 power bonus to your next damage roll.

Minor Action ✦ At-Will (1/round)
Effect: The soul eater either walks, shifts, runs, stands up, squeezes, or crawls.

Minor Action (teleportation) ✦ Encounter
Effect: You teleport to a square adjacent to the soul eater.

Level 11: Binder's Action (Star)

Master binder paragon path feature
Your mastery over the forces that dwell in the void makes your spontaneous attacks more potent.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you gain a +4 bonus to damage rolls that deal cold, necrotic, or psychic damage. The bonus lasts until the end of your turn.

Level 11: Binder's Favor (Star)

Master binder paragon path feature
You can cast your foe's mind into a darkness that renders it more vulnerable to the realities of the physical world.

Benefit: When you hit with your mind shadows, all attacks made with combat advantage against the target of that power gain a +2 power bonus to damage rolls until the end of your next turn.

Level 11: Star Pact Encounter Power

Master binder paragon path feature
As you enter the paragon tier, you gain a deeper understanding of the terrors that lurk within the void. This dreaded spell casts a foe into the darkness for a brief second to overwhelm its body and mind.

Banish to Darkness — Master Binder Attack 11

A globe of utter darkness surrounds your foe, exiling it momentarily to the frozen blackness of the Far Realm.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Cold, Fear, Implement, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Will
Hit: 3d10 + Charisma modifier cold damage, and the target is dazed until the end of your next turn.
Star Pact (Binder): Any attack the target makes on its next turn must include at least one creature that is nearest to it.

Level 13: Star Pact Encounter Power

The dark energy of the void has a hunger for all living things. When you summon that void to the battlefield, any creature that lingers too close pays the price.

Devouring Dark — Warlock Attack 13

Tentacles lash out from a sphere of darkness to harry any creatures in reach, crippling their ability to stand fast in combat.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d10 + Charisma modifier cold and necrotic damage.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. Creatures grant combat advantage while in the zone.
Star Pact (Binder): Any creature that ends its turn in the zone takes 5 cold and necrotic damage.

Level 16: Binder's Boon (Star)

Master binder paragon path feature
Your alliance with the entities beyond the stars allows you to fade from reality, slipping toward non-existence when you vanish from your foes' sight.

Benefit: When you use your hidden lore, you can also become insubstantial until the end of your next turn.

Level 17: Star Pact Encounter Power

You have spent your life strengthening your mind against the horrors of the Far Realm. Those who lack your discipline and training do not fare as well as you when the void presses in.

Greater Void Burst — Warlock Attack 17

You punch a hole in reality through which the void pours forth, tearing apart the minds of any creatures caught within it.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Psychic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 1 within 20 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Charisma vs. Will
Hit: 4d6 + Charisma modifier psychic damage.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. The zone is heavily obscured and blocks line of sight.
Star Pact (Binder): Any creature other than you that ends its turn in the zone takes psychic damage equal to 3 + your Intelligence modifier.

Level 23: Star Pact Encounter Power

This deadly spell can cripple even the strongest foe with searing pain, for no creature can withstand the power of the void for long.

Inner Void — Warlock Attack 23

Your foe's frenzied scream is the only sign of the portal you open to the Far Realm—a portal that tears your enemy apart from the inside out.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 20
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3d10 + Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target falls prone.
Star Pact (Binder): The target takes extra necrotic damage equal to 3 + your Intelligence modifier.

Level 25: Greater Binder's Ally (Star)

A doom hulk is a humanoid brute sculpted from the darkness between the stars, then bound by magic and granted limited sentience. It crushes its foes with its powerful fists, while those who remain too close to it quickly feel their life force drawn away.

Benefit: You can use summon warlock's ally to summon a doom hulk.

Doom Hulk — Summoned Creature
Large aberrant animate

HP your bloodied value; Healing Surges none, but you can expend a healing surge for the doom hulk if an effect allows it to spend one
Defenses your defenses, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties
Speed 6

☼ Child of the Void (necrotic) ✦ Aura 1
Any creature that willingly leaves the aura takes 10 necrotic damage.

ǂ Standard Action (necrotic) ✦ At-Will
Attack: Melee 2 (one creature); your level + 5 vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d10 + your Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and you gain 10 temporary hit points. If you already have temporary hit points, you gain a +5 power bonus to your next damage roll.

Minor Action ✦ At-Will (1/round)
Effect: The doom hulk either walks, shifts, runs, stands up, squeezes, or crawls.

Level 27: Star Pact Encounter Power

At the height of your pact's power, you call forth the lifeless maw of the void. This dark energy tears at all creatures with the hunger of the faceless horrors that dwell within it.

Hungry Void — Warlock Attack 27

A dull black sphere of nothingness appears in the midst of combat, drawing all creatures toward it with an unearthly hunger.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 10 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Charisma vs. Fortitude
Hit: 4d6 + Charisma modifier cold and necrotic damage, and the target falls prone.
Star Pact (Binder): You can pull each target 1 square toward the center of the burst. The square at the center of the burst becomes a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. Any creature that ends its turn in the zone takes 15 cold and necrotic damage.

Other Classes

The cleric, the warlock, and the wizard all bring their unique interpretations and talents to how the power of shadow is acquired and wielded. This section presents cleric powers, a new cleric domain, new powers and a new pact for the warlock, and a selection of wizard powers as well as two new schools of magic.

Cleric Options

The Shadowfell has always been the realm of the dead. The god of death is the Raven Queen, who left the Astral Sea to dwell in her palace of Letherna, and who watches over souls that make their way from the world to pass on to the unknown fate beyond life. Despite her locale, the Raven Queen's divine power is drawn from the Astral Sea as it is for all gods. Only rarely do clerics draw directly on shadow magic for their prayers, since the power of shadow has a sinister reputation. Among good and unaligned clerics, its use is viewed as a questionable moral choice. In the view of some faiths, drawing on the power of shadow is a heresy worthy of death.

The servants of the gods of death are typically the only clerics who openly embrace shadow magic. However, clerics of other deities sometimes employ shadow magic in support of their gods' teachings and portfolios. Bane's clerics use the power of shadow to spread terror among their enemies, breaking their collective will before battle is joined. Militant clerics of Erathis use the power of shadow to drive wild beasts and humanoids from territories that they seek to clear and civilize.

The use of shadow magic can sometimes lead to conflict within a faith. As pragmatic conquerors, Bane's clerics care little what power stands behind their prayers. In the case of Erathis, however, open hostility can arise between her militant clerics of conquest and the faith's other factions.

In most cases, a cleric's decision to take up shadow magic will be a contentious one. Depending on your deity and alignment, be prepared to face rebuke, banishment, or worse from the other members of your faith.

New Cleric Powers

The powers in this section expand on those found in Heroes of the Fallen Lands and other sources. They can be selected by any cleric of the appropriate level.

Level 1: Daily Power

When you choose 1st-level cleric daily attack powers, this power is among your options.

Inflict Wounds All clerics can command divine magic to mend wounds, banish disease, and even restore life to the dead. However, when suffused with the corrupting power of shadow, the capacity to heal can be twisted into a potent force of death and decay.

Inflict Wounds — Cleric Attack 1

With just a touch, your foe's body is rent by horrid wounds.

Daily ✦ Divine, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Effect: The target takes 3d6 + your Wisdom modifier necrotic damage.

Level 2: Utility Powers

When you choose 2nd-level cleric utility powers, these powers are among your options.

Blackened Soul You allow a shadow to temporarily control an ally's body, pulling that companion away from death's door—but at a price.

Blackened Soul — Cleric Utility 2

A pulse of shadow leaves your hands to seek your ally, granting vigor and strength but leaving a dark stain on that companion's soul.

Daily ✦ Divine, Healing, Shadow
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: One dying ally in the burst
Effect: The target can spend up to two healing surges. Until the end of the encounter or until the target is restored to full hit points, the target gains a +2 power bonus to attack rolls and damage rolls but grants combat advantage.

Veil of Darkness You call on the power of shadow to cloak you, forcing enemies out of position, ruining the accuracy of an enemy wizard or archer, or concealing the imminent attack of you and your allies. However, both your allies and your enemies are subject to the effect of your veil.

Veil of Darkness — Cleric Utility 2

You create a barrier of pure darkness that no light can enter.

Daily ✦ Divine, Shadow, Zone
Minor Action Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. The zone is heavily obscured and blocks line of sight.
Sustain Minor: The zone persists until the end of your next turn.

Level 5: Daily Power

When you choose 5th-level cleric daily attack powers, this power is among your options.

Servitude in Death

This prayer imbues its victims with deadly shadow magic, perverting their life force to your control when they are slain. Good clerics are circumspect in employing this prayer, since many faiths consider its use to be heresy.

Servitude in Death — Cleric Attack 5

A dark wave of necrotic energy washes over your foe, draining its life and planting within it a seed of shadow magic that will seal its fate.

Daily ✦ Divine, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 5
Target: One enemy
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 2d8 + Wisdom modifier necrotic damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The first time the target dies before the end of the encounter, it rises at the start of its next turn as an undead creature allied with you and your allies. Until it dies again, the creature is dominated by you. It has 1 hit point (the creature takes no damage from an attack that misses), cannot heal, and takes a –2 penalty to all defenses.

Level 6: Utility Powers

When you choose 6th-level cleric utility powers, these powers are among your options.

Gravesite

Because you are a cleric, your god takes particular notice of your victories. With this prayer, you dedicate your success in battle to your deity's great glory. Each foe you overcome earns a blessing for you and your allies.

Gravesite — Cleric Utility 6

You invoke the power of your god to claim the ground around you. Enemies that attempt to contest that ground pay for their temerity.

Daily ✦ Divine, Healing, Shadow, Zone
Minor Action Close burst 3
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter. You and your allies gain a +2 power bonus to damage rolls against enemies in the zone. Whenever an enemy drops to 0 hit points in the zone, you and each ally in the zone regain 5 hit points.

Soul Cage

With the power of the Shadowfell at your command, you confine a fallen foe's essence within its body for a time. Under your direction, you force your enemy to reveal its knowledge or the weaknesses of its comrades.

Soul Cage — Cleric Utility 6

As your enemy expires, you cast a web of divine shadow magic across it, creating a cage that binds it to your command.

Daily ✦ Divine, Shadow
Free Action Personal
Trigger: An enemy dies within 5 squares of you.
Effect: Once before the end of your next extended rest, you can use a minor action to gain one of the following benefits.
- ✦ You can ask the dead enemy one question that it must answer truthfully. Its answer is limited to one hundred words.
- ✦ You gain a +5 power bonus to your next attack roll against an enemy.
- ✦ View one room, one similarly sized outdoor location, or one object that the enemy has seen within the past week. The image you see is drawn from the enemy's memory, and so might not be entirely accurate.

Level 9: Daily Powers

When you choose 9th-level cleric daily attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Crushing Despair

When you are pressed by foes that thrive in close quarters fighting, you overwhelm those foes with hopelessness and terror. Your shadow magic turns doubt into a deadly weapon, forcing the enemy to flee or suffer the consequences.

Crushing Despair — Cleric Attack 9

Your weapon attack leaves a foe so terrified that your presence threatens to destroy it.

Daily ✦ Divine, Fear, Psychic, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Wisdom modifier psychic damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: At the end of each of the target's turns, it takes 5 psychic damage for each of your allies adjacent to it. This effect ends when the target ends its turn with none of your allies adjacent to it.

"You will kneel. That is not in question. What we must decide now is whether you will give obeisance willingly or if I must show you the fullness of my god's power."

—Tycho, zealot of Bane

Vengeful Ghosts
By melding shadow and divine magic, you create a beacon in the Shadowfell that calls forth the restless spirits of the angry dead. Heroes betrayed to their deaths, innocent folk executed for crimes they did not commit, and other vengeful ghosts respond to your command to vent their fury against your enemies.

Vengeful Ghosts — Cleric Attack 9

With a shout, you draw forth a howling horde of restless spirits to wreak havoc on your foes.

Daily ✦ Divine, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Close blast 3
Target: Each enemy in the blast
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 2d8 + Wisdom modifier necrotic damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The blast creates a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter. Enemies grant combat advantage while in the zone.

Level 10: Utility Powers
When you choose 10th-level cleric utility powers, these powers are among your options.

Phantom Vigor
The strength of the spirit energy twisting through the Shadowfell can grant your allies a potent boon. When strength and speed is all-important, you sacrifice your allies' vitality to see them through to the end of the fight.

Phantom Vigor — Cleric Utility 10

Tendrils of shadow unfurl around you to wrap your allies, drawing off their health to grant superior strength and speed.

Daily ✦ Divine, Shadow
Standard Action Close burst 5
Target: You and each ally in the burst
Effect: Each target loses a healing surge and gains temporary hit points equal to his or her healing surge value. In addition, until the end of the encounter, each target gains a +2 power bonus to speed and a +5 power bonus to Athletics checks and Acrobatics checks.

Umbral Soul
The fearsome creatures of the Shadowfell include the insubstantial undead such as ghosts, wraiths, and specters. With a touch of shadow, you bestow some of the defensive power of these dread predators, but that power comes at a cost.

Umbral Soul — Cleric Utility 10

With a thought, you transform yourself or an ally into a wispy creature of shadow.

Daily ✦ Divine, Shadow
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: You or one ally in the burst
Effect: The target is insubstantial and weakened until the end of your next turn.
Sustain Minor: The effect persists until the end of your next turn.

Level 15: Daily Power
When you choose 15th-level cleric daily attack powers, this power is among your options.

Drain Life
With this prayer, you wield the unstoppable power of the Shadowfell, but that power takes a toll on your own life force. Some sages believe that extended use of this prayer drains away the life energy of its wielder as well as its victims. Clerics who use it frequently acquire a pale, sunken look that lends credence to this theory.

Drain Life — Cleric Attack 15

As you touch your foe, it shrieks with a withering pain born from the life energy you sacrifice.

Daily ✦ Divine, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Effect: You take 10 damage, and the target takes 4d10 + Wisdom modifier necrotic damage.

Level 16: Utility Power
When you choose 16th-level cleric utility powers, this power is among your options.

Sphere of Shadows
By weaving the energy of shadow into your divine prayers, you create a protective force more powerful than either form of magic alone. When you and your allies withdraw into the sphere of shadows you draw forth around you, your enemies hunt you in vain.

Sphere of Shadows — Cleric Utility 16

A divine darkness flows around you, protecting you from harm and concealing you from sight.

Daily ✦ Divine, Shadow, Zone
Minor Action Close burst 5
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter. While in the zone, you and your allies have partial concealment and gain a +5 power bonus to Stealth checks. You and your allies can make Stealth checks to hide in the zone without needing to have superior cover or total concealment.

Level 19: Daily Power
When you choose 19th-level cleric daily attack powers, this power is among your options.

Shackles of the Grave
The Raven Queen claims dominion over death, but all clerics of shadow can exercise her power. In battle, this prayer allows you to demand atonement from every enemy that falls before you. With heresy washed away by death's cleansing hand, your former foe becomes a docile servant.

"I am the harbinger of endings, the angel of death. Make peace with your gods, fool, for your end is at hand."

—Anise,
Apostle of the Raven Queen

Shackles of the Grave Cleric Attack 19

A blast of black energy washes over nearby creatures, marking their souls as your divine property.

Daily ✦ Divine, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Close blast 5
Target: Each creature in the blast
Attack: Wisdom vs. Fortitude
Hit: 5d6 + Wisdom modifier necrotic damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The blast creates a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter. The first time any enemy dies in the zone before the end of the encounter, it rises at the start of its next turn as an undead creature allied with you and your allies. Until it dies again, the creature is dominated by you. It has 1 hit point (the creature takes no damage from an attack that misses), no healing surges, and a -2 penalty to all defenses.

Level 22: Utility Powers

When you choose 22nd-level cleric utility powers, this power is among your options.

Death Shield

By the strength of your own life, you ensure that your ally can stand against even the deadliest attack.

Death Shield Cleric Utility 22

Shimmering tendrils of energy extend from you to your ally, letting you weave a shield that binds her soul to your own.

Daily ✦ Divine, Shadow
Minor Action Close burst 10
Requirement: You must have at least one healing surge remaining.
Target: One ally in the burst
Effect: You lose one healing surge. The first time the target drops to 0 hit points or fewer before the end of your next extended rest, the target instead drops to 1 hit point.

Level 25: Daily Powers

When you choose 25th-level cleric daily attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Call the Hungry Ghosts

Those who fall to the power of shadow will always remember the feeling of its chill touch. This dark prayer reaches into the deepest parts of the Shadowfell to draw forth the power of death, taking the form of spectral creatures that feed on your foes.

Call the Hungry Ghosts Cleric Attack 25

A shroud of wraithlike shadow coalesces around your enemies, draining their strength and channeling it through you.

Daily ✦ Divine, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Close blast 5
Target: Each enemy in the blast
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 5d8 + Wisdom modifier necrotic damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The blast creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. When any enemy ends its turn in the zone, that enemy is weakened until the end of its next turn, and you and each ally in the zone gain 5 temporary hit points.
Sustain Minor: The zone persists until the end of your next turn.

Hope Killer

Your divine wrath lets you touch the secret fear that lingers in all creatures, sending waves of ultimate despair through an opponent's body and mind. Though it fights on feebly, it knows that its defeat is inevitable.

Hope Killer Cleric Attack 25

Your foe is left reeling from your weapon assault, shrouded by a tangible fear that draws your allies' attacks.

Daily ✦ Divine, Fear, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One enemy
Attack: Wisdom vs. AC
Hit: 5[W] + Wisdom modifier damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Whenever the target makes an attack before the end of the encounter, it provokes opportunity attacks from any of your allies who are not targets of the attack.

Level 29: Daily Power

When you choose 29th-level cleric daily attack powers, this power is among your options.

Ravage

Legend holds that the first deity to slay a living creature created this prayer the moment it struck the killing blow. Now, those who wield its power are said to gain a faint insight into the circumstances of their own deaths. Although this prayer's power is legendary, many clerics use ravage only as a last resort.

Ravage Cleric Attack 29

You become an instrument of death, capable of killing with a touch.

Daily ✦ Divine, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Requirement: You must have at least one healing surge remaining.
Target: One creature
Effect: You lose a healing surge, and the target takes necrotic damage equal to your bloodied value.

Warpriest Domain

A warpriest cleric can select the death domain, described below, instead of the storm or sun domains presented in Heroes of the Fallen Lands. When creating your character and when gaining levels, refer to the domain you select for powers, benefits, and other features.

If you're playing a cleric who is not a warpriest, the cleric powers in this section that have levels indicated are available to you when you select powers.

DEVOUT WARPRIEST BENEFITS

If you have the devout warpriest paragon path (see Heroes of the Fallen Lands) and you choose death as your domain, you gain any benefit noted below as a devout warpriest paragon path feature.

Death Domain

The living are allocated only a finite amount of time in the world, and creatures such as vampires, ghouls, and other undead violate this stricture and must be destroyed. The gods of death are the guardians of the balance between the living and the dead, marking the end of each life and seeing the fate that awaits all living creatures. The death domain grants you their power.

Clerics of the death domain are shunned as evil by mortals who fear death. However, the power of death is not evil in and of itself. By choosing to wield this power, you work to maintain the balance that death represents. You must hunt down undead creatures, oppose the evil of Orcus, and serve as an instrument of punishment for those that try to avoid death's hold over all living things. With the power of death at your disposal, your prayers mark your enemies for certain doom.

Level 1: Death Domain Features and Powers

You seek out specific enemies of your faith—including those who mock death by delving into the darkest secrets of necromancy. As an emissary of death, you are the sworn foe of undead. Your power defends you against their foul energy, even as it grants you a measure of additional vitality with which to finish the fight.

Unlike many warpriests, you rely on your holy symbol to deliver your deadliest attacks, rather than on a weapon.

Benefit: You gain resist 5 necrotic.

In addition, when you use your healing word, you gain 5 temporary hit points. The temporary hit points increase to 10 at 11th level and 15 at 21st level.

You also gain the following powers.

Domain At-Will Power

Your attacks carry the power of death, causing a subtle ripple in an enemy's fate that draws it closer to ruin.

Death's Shadow — Cleric Attack 1

Your attack identifies a creature as your enemy, leaving it vulnerable to further attack.

At-Will ✦ Cold, Divine, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d8 + Wisdom modifier cold and necrotic damage.
Level 21: 2d8 + Wisdom modifier cold and necrotic damage.
Effect: The target takes a -2 penalty to all defenses against the next attack made against it before the end of your next turn.

Domain At-Will Power

This simple blessing carries with it the promise of your foe's defeat, scouring the enemy with divine shadow.

Tenebrous Blessing — Cleric Attack 1

The symbol of your god flares upon the flesh of your enemies, inflicting a lingering anguish.

At-Will ✦ Divine, Implement, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom vs. Will
Hit: 1d8 + Wisdom modifier psychic damage.
Level 21: 2d8 + Wisdom modifier psychic damage.
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, the target takes a penalty to damage rolls equal to your Constitution modifier.

Domain Utility Power

The shadows of death shift and swirl around you, granting you the supernatural ability to assess a foe's health in relation to your own.

Eye of the Vulture — Cleric Utility 1

Unseen energy lances out from you to your foes, granting you perception of the balance between life and death.

Encounter ✦ Divine, Shadow
Minor Action Close burst 3
Target: Each bloodied enemy in the burst
Effect: You learn which targets have current hit point totals lower than your healing surge value.

Domain Encounter Power All creatures are fated to die. Your role as an emissary of death lets you twist together fate and chance to ensure that your enemies feel the sting of death at your whim.

Inevitable Doom Cleric Attack 1

You tap into the threads of fate that surround an enemy, so that the next assault against that foe will hasten it to the grave.

Encounter ✦ Divine, Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One enemy
Effect: The next attack made against the target before the end of your next turn deals 2d8 extra damage on a hit or a miss, even if the attack normally deals no damage on a miss. This extra damage cannot benefit from bonuses to damage rolls.

Level 1: Channel Divinity (Death)

Your ability to channel the power of death lets you stave off the effects of injury when the need arises.

Stay the Hand of Death Cleric Utility 1

When grievous wounds hinder you or an ally, your power bestows a temporary surge of vitality.

Encounter ✦ Channel Divinity, Divine, Shadow
Minor Action Close burst 2
Target: You or one ally in the burst; the target must be bloodied
Effect: The target gains 5 temporary hit points.
Level 11: 10 temporary hit points.
Level 21: 15 temporary hit points.
Special: You can use only one channel divinity power per encounter.

Level 3: Death Domain Encounter Power

Each time a creature falls in your presence, the energy of its death grants you a surge of power. When you invoke this prayer, your holy symbol flares to become a beacon of divine energy that you channel through friend and foe alike.

Death Surge Cleric Attack 3

The death of a nearby creature grants you the energy to scar the minds of your foes, and fuels your allies' grim determination.

Encounter ✦ Divine, Implement, Psychic, Shadow
Immediate Reaction Close burst 3
Trigger: A creature within 3 squares of you drops to 0 hit points.
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Wisdom vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1d8 + Wisdom modifier psychic damage.
Effect: You and each ally in the burst gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls until the end of your next turn, and gain 5 temporary hit points.

Akta, tiefling warpriest of the Raven Queen

Level 5: Death Domain Feature

As a servant of death, you can turn an enemy's pain into the power of healing for you and your allies.

Benefit: When an enemy within 5 squares of you drops to 0 hit points, you can use healing word as an immediate reaction.

JIM NELSON

Level 7: Death Domain Encounter Power

Death is a part of the natural order, but the power to subvert that order is in your hands. By using raven's talon against a grievously wounded foe, you hope to let that enemy's demise heal the hurts of you and your allies.

Raven's Talon — Cleric Attack 7

Your hand becomes a spectral talon that tears through an enemy, its death shriek invigorating a nearby ally.

Encounter ✦ Divine, Healing, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One bloodied enemy
Effect: The target takes 5 + your Wisdom modifier necrotic damage. If this damage reduces the target to 0 hit points, you or one ally within 5 squares of you can spend a healing surge.

Level 10: Death Domain Feature

The power of death flows around you like the swirling winds of an incoming storm. Those whose souls are only lightly tethered to their bodies can be swept away by your power, cast into the afterlife like leaves on the wind.

Benefit: At the start of each of your turns, you can use a free action to deal necrotic damage to one adjacent bloodied enemy. The necrotic damage equals your Constitution modifier.

Level 11: Devout Action (Death)

Devout warpriest paragon path feature
As a cleric of death, you are a gatekeeper charged with ensuring that those that seek to evade death cannot escape its clutches. To aid you in your task, the gods grant you the ability to find sustenance and strength in the pain you bring to your enemies.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to gain an extra action, choose one enemy within 5 squares of you. That enemy takes 5 necrotic damage, and you or an ally within 5 squares of you regains hit points equal to 5 + your Wisdom modifier.

Level 11: Transcendent Blessing (Death)

Devout warpriest paragon path feature
Just as your enemies cannot deny the power of death, they cannot hope to deflect the holy energy that fuels your attack.

Benefit: When you miss with death's shadow, you gain a +2 power bonus to your next attack roll made against the target of that power.

Level 12: Death Domain Utility Power

Devout warpriest paragon path feature
At times, you can catch a faint glimpse of the fate that awaits each creature, hazy in your mind like a half-remembered dream. The first mystery that your insight unlocks, this power allows you to see how death binds all living things, and how you can twist those bonds to your allies' advantage.

Bound by the Grave — Devout Warpriest Utility 12

Death links all living things, letting you join your companions' life forces into a mystical conduit to protect one ally from harm.

Encounter ✦ Divine, Shadow
Immediate Interrupt Close burst 5
Trigger: An ally within 5 squares of you takes damage from an attack.
Target: You or one other ally in the burst
Effect: The triggering ally takes no damage from the attack. The target takes damage equal to half the triggering damage. This damage ignores the target's immunities and resistances. Any other effect of the attack is applied to the triggering ally.

Level 13: Death Domain Encounter Power

The creature you single out with this prayer gains a dark glimpse of the fate that death has in store for it. Leaving your enemy reeling, you set up your allies' follow-up attacks with a surge of power that can destroy even the strongest foe.

Call to the Dark — Cleric Attack 13

As your allies close in, a black cloud surrounds your enemy to signify its inescapable doom.

Encounter ✦ Divine, Shadow
Standard Action Close burst 3
Target: One enemy in the burst
Effect: The target grants combat advantage until the end of your next turn. In addition, the next attack made against the target before the end of your next turn deals 3d8 extra damage on a hit or a miss, even if the attack normally deals no damage on a miss. This extra damage cannot benefit from bonuses to damage rolls.

Level 16: Death Domain Feature

Devout warpriest paragon path feature
Your familiarity with the afterlife weaves its way into your healing magic. As you ward death away from your allies, you direct its icy touch against your enemies.

Benefit: Whenever you use healing word, choose one enemy within 5 squares of you. Until the end of your next turn, your allies gain a power bonus to damage rolls against that enemy. The power bonus is equal to your Constitution modifier.

Level 17: Death Domain Encounter Power

The demise of a foe inspires a stirring shout of victory, while a fallen comrade summons a deadly song of revenge. Whatever its source, you draw even greater power from the death that surrounds you on the battlefield.

Death's Call — Cleric Attack 17

You summon up a burst of divine power, granting resilience to your allies as you drive your foes closer to their doom.

Encounter ✦ Divine, Implement, Psychic, Shadow
Immediate Reaction Close burst 5
Trigger: A creature within 5 squares of you drops to 0 hit points.
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Wisdom vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d8 + Wisdom modifier psychic damage.
Effect: You and each ally in the burst gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls until the end of your next turn, and gain 10 temporary hit points.

Level 20: Death Domain Daily Power

Devout warpriest paragon path feature
At the height of the paragon tier, the power of death shrouds you like a dark cloak. No foes can stand against you for long.

WARREN MAHY

A victim of death's touch

Mark of Death — Devout Warpriest Attack 20

With a single touch, you place the mark of death upon your foes, their doom spreading from one to the other as a plague of soul-numbing pain.

Daily ✦ Divine, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Effect: The target takes ongoing 20 necrotic damage (save ends). Whenever the target takes this ongoing damage, your enemies adjacent to the target take ongoing 5 necrotic damage (save ends). The target cannot attempt a saving throw against this effect if any creature adjacent to it is taking ongoing necrotic damage.

Level 23: Death Domain Encounter Power

As you enter the epic tier, you become an avatar of death. Your touch alone is enough to send a shrieking foe to the god of death's embrace.

Death's Touch — Cleric Attack 23

Your hand becomes a brand of black energy, letting you reach deep into an enemy's body and spirit as you claim its life as your own.

Encounter ✦ Divine, Healing, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Target: One bloodied enemy
Effect: The target takes 15 + your Wisdom modifier necrotic damage. If this damage reduces the target to 0 hit points, you and one ally within 10 squares of you can each spend a healing surge.

Level 27: Death Domain Encounter Power

The power of death cannot be denied for the foe that incites your wrath. As a herald of doom, you leave your enemy at the mercy of you and your allies, trapped by the knowledge that your next attack might be the last thing it ever sees.

Herald of Inevitable Doom — Cleric Attack 27

A nimbus of black energy surrounds your enemy, telling it that its demise is near.

Encounter ✦ Divine, Shadow
Standard Action Close burst 5
Target: One enemy in the burst
Effect: The target grants combat advantage until the end of your next turn. The next attack made against the target before the end of your next turn deals 4d8 extra damage on a hit or a miss, even if the attack normally deals no damage on a miss. This extra damage cannot benefit from bonuses to damage rolls.

Warlock Options

Warlocks typically lead lives well apart from other people, burdened by distrust and a reputation for wielding dangerous magic. Warlocks who engage in pacts with the fey are treated with suspicion by the common folk, while those who traffic with fiends through an infernal pact have even darker reputations. No warlocks, however, are more foreboding than those who forge a gloom pact, for not even they are certain what master bestows the power they wield.

The identities of the patrons of the gloom pact remain a matter of speculation. Many have posited that they are the lords who rule in the deepest regions of the Shadowfell, relying on mortal agents to extend their influence beyond their dark prisons. Others believe that sorrowsworn or nightwalkers, fallen gods, dark figures from time forgotten, or even the Raven Queen stand behind these pacts.

New Warlock Powers

The powers in this section can be selected by any warlock of the appropriate level, and are especially appropriate for warlocks who have forged a gloom pact.

Level 1: Daily Power

When you choose 1st-level warlock daily attack powers, this power is among your options.

Malicious Shadow It is said that the shadows cast by mortals create a dark link to the underworld that can be breached. This power infuses a shadow with malign intelligence, enabling it to hobble even the most dangerous foes.

"Such power! Wondrous magic! Had I known what could be possible with a simple offering, the mildest of sacrifices, I would have ceded my soul to the dark tower long ago. Oh, the devils still tax me, still dog my steps, desperate to reclaim what I stole from them, but now they do so from afar, frightened by what I have become."

—Azazel

Malicious Shadow — Warlock Attack 1

Your attack tears a shroud of shadow from your foe, wrapping it to hinder its movement.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Cold, Conjuration, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 5
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d8 + Charisma modifier cold and necrotic damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: You conjure a malicious shadow in an unoccupied square adjacent to the target. The shadow lasts until the end of your next turn. While adjacent to the shadow, enemies grant combat advantage to you. While the shadow persists, you can use the secondary power through the shadow at will.
Sustain Minor: The shadow persists until the end of your next turn.
Secondary Power (Arcane, Cold, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow)
Immediate Interrupt Melee 1
Trigger: An enemy willingly leaves a square adjacent to the shadow on its turn.
Target: The triggering enemy
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 10 cold and necrotic damage, and the target is immobilized until the end of its turn.

Level 2: Utility Power

When you choose 2nd-level warlock utility powers, this power is among your options.

Shadow Blend The energy of your gloom pact causes shadows to dance in your presence, shimmering and shifting under your control. The shadow blend spell calls these shadows to you, drawing them about you like a cloak to conceal you from your foes.

Shadow Blend — Warlock Utility 2

You draw forth shadow from the nearby darkness to conceal you from your foes.

At-Will ✦ Arcane, Shadow
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You end your turn within 2 squares of a square of dim light or darkness.
Effect: You gain partial concealment until the start of your next turn.

Level 5: Daily Power

When you choose 5th-level warlock daily attack powers, this power is among your options.

Deathly Conduit The Shadowfell's darklands are some of the most blighted places in that plane—regions where death holds no release for the creatures that fall there. This dread spell tears open twin portals to such a site, drawing you through it from one to the other as their noisome influence blinds and tears at your enemies.

Deathly Conduit Warlock Attack 5

Noxious black clouds roil around your foes both close and far, your power drawing you from one cloud to the other in the blink of an eye.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow, Teleportation
Standard Action Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Charisma vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d6 + Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is blinded (save ends).
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: Each creature adjacent to you takes 10 necrotic damage, and you can teleport to an unoccupied square in the burst.

Level 6: Utility Power

When you choose 6th-level warlock utility powers, this power is among your options.

Mirror Darkly

Those who carry the essence of the Shadowfell must often displace a fragment of their souls to do so. Your power lets you manifest this missing fragment, even as your own form grows hazy to thwart your enemies' attacks.

Mirror Darkly Warlock Utility 6

Your shadowy double appears at a distance, letting you split your essence between two points on the battlefield.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Conjuration, Shadow, Teleportation
Minor Action Ranged 5
Effect: You conjure a shade in an unoccupied square within range. The shade occupies its square and lasts until the end of your next turn. The shade can be attacked. It uses your defenses, and it is destroyed if it takes any damage. While the shade persists, you are insubstantial and you can use your space or the shade's space as the origin of your attacks.
Aftereffect: You can teleport to a square formerly occupied by the shade.

Level 10: Utility Power

When you choose 10th-level warlock utility powers, this power is among your options.

Shade Dance

Those who walk the shadowed paths find the darkness slow to leave them, staining their bodies as it does their souls. That shadowy touch lets you walk in two worlds at once, becoming ephemeral and ghostlike as you move.

ShadeA Dance Warlock Utility 10

As you maneuver across the battlefield, you take on the form of living shadow to frustrate your foes' attacks.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, whenever you complete a move of at least 3 squares on your turn, you can become insubstantial until the start of your next turn.

Level 15: Daily Power

When you choose 15th-level warlock daily attack powers, this power is among your options.

Darkening Fetch

This potent attack allows you to imbue the shadows of the battlefield with the malign awareness said to be present in the dark of the Shadowfell. Under your direction, shadow becomes a weapon and a servant, delivering even the strongest foes to face your wrath.

Darkening Fetch Warlock Attack 15

Shadows rise up to form monstrous shapes at your command, lashing a distant foe, then dragging it forward to face you.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow, Teleportation
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Fortitude
Hit: 4d8 + Charisma modifier cold and necrotic damage, and you teleport the target to a square adjacent to you. The target is immobilized (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and you pull the target up to 5 squares. The target is slowed (save ends).

Level 16: Utility Power

When you choose 16th-level warlock utility powers, this power is among your options.

Reaper's Vengeance

The power of shadow wraps you like a form of second sight, connecting you even to foes that attack from a distance. An enemy that focuses its wrath on you quickly comes to rue its temerity when you appear at its side.

Reaper's Vengeance Warlock Utility 16

You turn a foe's attack into opportunity, crossing the battlefield in a burst of shadow that conceals your deadly intent.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Shadow, Teleportation, Zone
Immediate Reaction Personal
Trigger: An enemy damages you with an attack.
Effect: You teleport to a square adjacent to the triggering enemy, then create a zone in a close burst 2 that lasts until the end of your next turn. The zone is heavily obscured to creatures other than you. In addition, you gain combat advantage against the triggering enemy until the end of your next turn.

Level 19: Daily Power

When you choose 19th-level warlock daily attack powers, this power is among your options.

Darklands Eclipse

The power of the noxious realms known as the darklands can be drawn forth into other worlds, creating a pool of shadow that swallows your foes whole. Creatures that perish in that darkness are reduced to little more than bleached bones gnawed clean by the power of shadow.

JIM NELSON

Blackness boils up from beneath as a warlock faces his foes

Darklands Eclipse Warlock Attack 19

A roiling black cloud erupts around your foes, creating a trap from which they struggle in vain to escape.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow, Teleportation, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 10 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Charisma vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3d6 + Charisma modifier cold and necrotic damage, and the target is slowed and takes ongoing 10 cold and necrotic damage (save ends both). Until this effect ends, whenever the target takes damage from an attack, you can teleport it as a free action to any square in the zone you create with this power.
Miss: Half damage, and ongoing 5 cold and necrotic damage (save ends).
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. The zone is heavily obscured and blocks line of sight for creatures other than you.
Sustain Minor: The zone persists until the end of your next turn.

Level 29: Daily Power

When you choose 29th-level warlock daily attack powers, this power is among your options.

Drawn to Darkness

At the height of the epic tier, you exert your full mastery over the power of shadow to wrench your foes into a dark netherworld for a timeless moment. Those that survive this exile are left scarred by the darkness they find there—a darkness you embrace.

Drawn to Darkness Warlock Attack 29

A veil of shadow swallows your foes, then spits them out scarred in body and mind.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Close burst 2
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 4d6 + Charisma modifier cold and necrotic damage, and the target is removed from play and takes ongoing 15 cold and necrotic damage (save ends both).
Aftereffect: The target returns to play in the space it occupied or in the nearest unoccupied space, and it is dazed until the start of its next turn.
Miss: Half damage, and the target is dazed and takes ongoing 10 cold and necrotic damage (save ends both).

WAYNE ENGLAND

Hexblade: Gloom Pact

You have made a bargain with the darkness, drawing on the power of the unseen masters of the Shadowfell and making that power your own. When you forged this pact, you sacrificed a portion of your own soul to whet your patron's appetite. From that point forward, each enemy that falls before you is drawn into the embrace of the dark power you serve.

The gloom pact grants you access to shadow power, which you weave into your arcane spells. Charisma is important to you, because your pact features and powers depend on it. Dexterity should be your second-highest score.

The gloom pact is a new pact for the hexblade, adding to the options presented in Heroes of the Forgotten Kingdoms. This section also has gloom pact options for the legendary hexblade paragon path, which appears in that book as well.

Level 1: Gloom Pact Reward

The darkness to which you pay homage grants you a surge of supernatural power that you can channel into your magical attacks.

Benefit: You gain a bonus to the damage rolls of your warlock and warlock paragon path attack powers. The bonus equals your Dexterity modifier. The bonus increases to 2 + your Dexterity modifier at 5th level, 4 + your Dexterity modifier at 15th level, and 6 + your Dexterity modifier at 25th level.

At 9th level, you also gain this bonus to the damage rolls of the creature you summon with summon warlock's ally.

Level 1: Gloom Pact Boon (Hexblade)

The spirits of those you slay congregate around you, warped by shadow energy into wretched shells that are hungry for the life denied them. When you harvest an enemy's life force, you let it carry it into the shadow for a time.

Benefit: You gain the convocation of shadows power.

Convocation of Shadows — Warlock Utility

Each time an enemy falls before you, you call on its departing shade to pull you partway to the realm of darkness.

At-Will ✦ Arcane, Shadow
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You reduce an enemy to 0 hit points, or an enemy adjacent to you drops to 0 hit points.
Effect: You are insubstantial and phasing until the end of your next turn.

Level 1: Gloom Pact Weapon

The scourge of exquisite agony is the vile weapon of a torturer, and it can channel the shadow power of your pact against those who refuse to yield to you. An iron handle wrapped in stained leather, the scourge is set with nine steel chains each ending in a barbed hook. These tails move of their own volition, writhing in their eagerness to taste the flesh of your foes.

When you gain this weapon, you also gain flesh rend and spirit flay, two powers that you can use whenever you wield it.

Scourge of Exquisite Agony — Warlock Item

The horrid tails hanging from this blackened flail writhe like steel serpents, their bite capable of rending armor, flesh, and bone.

Weapon Category: One-handed military melee weapon
Weapon Group: Flail
Proficiency Bonus: +2
Damage: 1d10
Weapon Property: Reach

Flesh Rend — Warlock Attack

The tails of your scourge wrap around your foe, directing its painful retreat.

At-Will ✦ Arcane, Necrotic, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must use this power with your scourge of exquisite agony.
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. AC
Hit: 1[W] + Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and you can slide the target 1 square. The target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls until the start of your next turn.
Level 21: 2[W] + Charisma modifier necrotic damage.
Special: You can use this power as a melee basic attack.

Spirit Flay — Warlock Attack

As you lash out at your foes, the pain produced by your scourge manifests as concealing shadow.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Necrotic, Psychic, Shadow, Weapon
Standard Action Melee weapon
Requirement: You must use this power with your scourge of exquisite agony.
Target: One or two creatures
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 1[W] + Charisma modifier necrotic and psychic damage, and the target is dazed until the end of your next turn.
Level 13: 2[W] + Charisma modifier necrotic and psychic damage.
Level 23: 3[W] + Charisma modifier necrotic and psychic damage.
Effect: You gain partial concealment until the end of your next turn.

Kava, dragonborn hexblade

Level 7: Gloom Pact Weapon Retribution

Any enemy that dares to strike at you discovers that you are never defenseless when armed with your deadly scourge.

Benefit: You gain the shadow scourge power.

Shadow Scourge — Warlock Attack

When a nearby foe lashes out, your counterattack cloaks it in bonds of shadow that leave it at your mercy.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Necrotic, Psychic, Shadow
Immediate Reaction Melee 1
Requirement: You must be holding your scourge of exquisite agony.
Trigger: An adjacent enemy attacks you.
Target: The triggering enemy
Effect: The target takes 5 + your Charisma modifier necrotic and psychic damage, and grants combat advantage until the end of your next turn.
Level 13: 10 + your Charisma modifier necrotic and psychic damage.
Level 23: 15 + your Charisma modifier necrotic and psychic damage.

Level 9: Summon Warlock's Ally (Gloom)

The mysterious dark ones are a furtive, murderous lot, wicked and unnerving in their zeal for murder. As your servant, a dark creeper eagerly answers your call for the chance to target distracted enemies, slinking across the battlefield to help conceal you from your foes and plant its blade in an enemy's back.

Dark Creeper — Summoned Creature
Small shadow humanoid

HP your bloodied value
Healing Surges none, but you can expend a healing surge for the dark creeper if an effect allows it to spend one
Defenses your defenses, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties
Speed 6

☼ Dancing Shadows ✦ Aura 2
You have partial concealment while you are in the aura.

ǂ Standard Action ✦ At-Will
Attack: Melee 1 (one creature); your level + 7 vs. AC
Hit: 1d6 + your Charisma modifier damage. The target takes 2d6 extra damage if the dark creeper has combat advantage against it.

Minor Action ✦ At-Will (1/round)
Effect: The dark creeper either walks, shifts, runs, stands up, squeezes, or crawls.

Minor Action ✦ At-Will (1/round)
Effect: The dark creeper shifts up to 2 squares. At the end of the shift, the dark creeper gains combat advantage against each enemy adjacent to it. The combat advantage lasts until the end of the current turn.

No Action ✦ Encounter
Trigger: The dark creeper drops to 0 hit points.
Effect: Each creature adjacent to the dark creeper is blinded (save ends).

WILLIAM O'CONNOR

Benefit: You can use summon warlock's ally to summon a dark creeper.

Level 11: Hexblade's Action (Gloom)

Legendary hexblade paragon path feature
The dark power behind your pact lends you the strength you need to push beyond your normal limits. By drinking deep of the power of shadow, you become something like a shadow yourself.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you can become insubstantial until the end of your next turn.

Level 11: Gloom Pact Aspect

Legendary hexblade paragon path feature
As the energy of the Shadowfell flows through you, the dark power of that realm grants you a measure of protection.

Benefit: You gain resist 10 necrotic and a +2 bonus to Stealth checks. If you already have necrotic resistance that is equal to or higher than the resistance granted by this feature, that resistance instead increases by 5.

Level 11: Gloom Pact Curse

Legendary hexblade paragon path feature
You maintain your pact through the destruction you wreak in battle. To aid in this harvest of souls, you master a dreadful spell that denies your enemy the ability to flee or fight back.

Curse of Age — Legendary Hexblade Attack 11

As your foe succumbs to your attack, its form briefly shows the ravages of age.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 5
Target: One enemy
Attack: Charisma vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d8 + Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is slowed and weakened until the end of your next turn.

Level 12: Gloom Pact Invocation

Legendary hexblade paragon path feature
You call on the power of shadow, but no one ever truly controls that power. The gloom that swirls around you can hide you from view. However, this same darkness can steal away your strength to leave you vulnerable to attack.

TYLER WALPOLE

Barwin, dwarf hexblade

Dark Invocation — Legendary Hexblade Utility 12

You call on the darkness to cloak you against your enemies' attacks, but that protection comes at a price.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Shadow
Minor Action Personal

Effect: Until the end of the encounter, when any enemy targets you with a melee or a ranged attack, roll a d20. On a 10 or higher, you gain total concealment against that attack. On a 1 or 2, the enemy gains a +10 power bonus to the attack's damage roll (if any) against you, and you are weakened until the end of your next turn. Otherwise, the attack is resolved as normal.

Level 16: Improved Gloom Pact Boon

The spirit energy of your fallen enemies is twisted and corrupted by your increased dark power. When the time is right, you channel the rage of all those foes into a concerted attack.

Benefit: When you use your convocation of shadows, you also gain combat advantage against a single target of your next attack before the end of your next turn.

Level 20: Gloom Pact Transformation

Legendary hexblade paragon path feature

By releasing the shadow that clouds your soul, you invest your physical form with dread magic. You become a creature of pure darkness—a malevolent wraith whose touch saps your enemies' strength and whose form is nearly impervious to attack.

Shadow Transformation — Legendary Hexblade Attack 20

With a thought, you transform into a creature of pure shadow, drifting like a harbinger of death across the battlefield.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Aura, Polymorph, Shadow
Minor Action Personal

Effect: Until the end of the encounter, you gain the following benefits.
- ✦ Aura 2: Bright light in the aura becomes dim light, and dim light becomes darkness.
- ✦ Darkvision.
- ✦ A fly speed of 3.
- ✦ Immunity to disease and fear.
- ✦ Insubstantial.
- ✦ You can use the secondary power once per round.

Secondary Power (Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow)
Minor Action Melee 1
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 5 necrotic damage, and the target is weakened until the end of your next turn.

"I knew what I wanted, and I was willing to pay the price to get it. There was no moralizing, no ethical quandary. In life, there are those with power and those without. What separates the one from the other is a willingness to do whatever it takes to rise above the mundane and become something more. The darkness offered me what I wanted, and so I took it with no regrets."

—Lara of Gloomwrought

Level 25: Greater Summon Warlock's Ally (Gloom)

The sorrowsworn owe allegiance to no master except perhaps the Raven Queen. Chasing after the misery and suffering on which they feast, these creatures act as dark emissaries of the Shadowfell, exacting vengeance on mortals that have circumvented the natural order, or battling the sinister forces at large in their native plane. Though you lack the power to truly master the sorrowsworn, you can draw on your gloom pact to give you temporary command of such a creature, which aids you until dismissed or destroyed to be re-formed in the darkness.

Benefit: You can use summon warlock's ally to summon a sorrowsworn.

Sorrowsworn — Summoned Creature
Medium shadow humanoid

HP your bloodied value; Healing Surges none, but you can expend a healing surge for the sorrowsworn if an effect allows it to spend one.
Defenses your defenses + 2, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties
Speed 8, fly 10; phasing

☼ Dancing Shadows ✦ Aura 2
You have partial concealment while you are in the aura.

ǂ Standard Action (necrotic, psychic) ✦ At-Will
Attack: Melee 1 (one creature); your level + 7 vs. AC
Hit: 2d12 + your Charisma modifier necrotic and psychic damage, and the target is weakened (save ends).

Minor Action (teleportation) ✦ Encounter
Effect: The sorrowsworn teleports up to 10 squares and becomes insubstantial until the start of your next turn.

Minor Action ✦ At-Will (1/round)
Effect: The sorrowsworn either crawls, flies, runs, stands up, shifts, squeezes, or walks.

ǂ Opportunity Action (psychic) ✦ At-Will
Trigger: An enemy ends its turn adjacent to the sorrowsworn.
Attack: Melee 1 (triggering enemy); your level + 5 vs. Will Hit: 15 psychic damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).

Wizard Options

Wizards often face apprehension and mistrust, and for good reason. They command power beyond the ken of mortals. They are gifted with the ability to seize another creature's mind, hurl fireballs, fly, vanish into thin air, and accomplish other wondrous and alarming feats. Such extraordinary power is more than sufficient reason for common people to fear wizards.

Deeper concerns about wizards arise from the vast potential of magic use. Wizards, by nature, are hungry for knowledge. More than a few study dark magic in an effort to increase their influence in the world. Although less impetuous wizards show restraint when presented with a dubious grimoire, others succumb to the temptation to look, to learn, and to master. Those who dabble in shadow magic are among the most feared in the world, and the darkest of villains are born from such study.

Fear of power and the unknown drives suspicion against wizards of any type. When it comes to forbidden magic, concern and doubt quickly turn into hatred and intolerance. Thus, necromancers and nethermancers often retreat to the fringes of civilization or beyond, where they can be free to pursue their arts without interference. Necromancers raise towers on old battlefields, graveyards, or in ruined cities, where materials for animation are abundant. A nethermancer might leave the world altogether to study the magical arts in the Shadowfell.

Shadow magic's apologists defend their art by claiming that the spells are no more evil than a fighter's sword or a ranger's bow. The spells are simply another form of weapon—it is their application that makes them evil. Even if this assertion is true, anyone who sees the blue pinpricks burning in a skeleton's eyes as it rises from the grave or who witnesses a nethermancer conjuring some tentacled horror from darkness has little sympathy for arguments comparing the virtues inherent in spells and weapons. Given the nature of their power, the few good or lawful good shadow magic-users can do little to erase the stain of the unaligned and evil practitioners. Shadow wizards face mistrust and hostility regardless of their inclination.

NEW SCHOOLS

Two new schools of magic, necromancy and nethermancy, join those presented in the Rules Compendium and Heroes of the Fallen Lands. Any wizard can choose spells from these schools. A mage can choose either school as the basis for his or her Apprentice Mage class feature.

School of Magic

Among the magical practices that raise the most concern are the dark, forbidden arts of necromancy and nethermancy. Both of these schools of magic entail wielding arcane energy influenced by shadow. Acquiring this knowledge is rarely as simple as tracking down a master or enrolling in an academy. Both schools are shunned among reputable wizards—few masters will admit to knowing a spell steeped in shadow, much less confess to being familiar with either school's more profound mysteries. The rare work of scholarship is tucked away inside an ugly manuscript, jotted down in the margin of a treatise on undead and the Shadowfell, or contained in the head of a reclusive master whose true nature is best left unexplored. A shadow magic practitioner is largely a product of self-taught trial and error.

Necromancers and nethermancers are not the only wizards who use shadow magic. Many wizards who specialize in other schools have dabbled in the dark arts, incorporating shadow to some degree. The results are often sinister, eliciting questions and accusations from those who witness the use of those spells. As a result, shadow-themed spells associated with other schools have the same reputation as those found within the dark schools.

Necromancy School

Necromancy is more widely practiced than nethermancy, but this recognition brings with it little in the way of acceptance. Necromancers and their magic are gist for terrible stories. Legends speak of mad wizards leading vast, rotting hordes, waging war against the living. These infamous figures are the rare few exceptions among necromancers, despite their prominence in the public attention. Most necromancers have little interest in conquest, instead using their art to examine the secrets of life, death, and the connections between them. It is true that necromancers can raise undead creatures, wield dread magic that rots flesh and sunders souls, and snuff out life with a whisper. Those who defend the art offer comparisons to other magic: How, they ask, can these abilities be considered more destructive than an evoker's fireball or more insidious than an enchanter's mass charm? Despite their logic, such thinkers find little sympathy among the masses.

Nethermancy School

The nethermancer's methods were devised when renegade wizards fled to the Shadowfell long ago and delved into the plane's secrets and the malign influence found there. These original nethermancers identified shadow magic as the impetus for the Shadowfell's creation. The strength of shadow magic derives from the dark stuff that the primordials rejected when they first gave form to substance. Nethermancers focus their efforts on extricating shadow from various environments, then blending it with arcane forces to create magical effects. Among other manifestations, such spells excite or dull the senses, spin creatures from raw shadow, and punch holes through reality to allow swift passage.

New Wizard Powers

The following spells were created in the shadowy laboratories and studies of necromancers and nethermancers. Nonetheless, they are available to wizards of any tradition.

Level 1: Cantrips

When you choose wizard cantrips, these powers are among your options.

Disrupt Undead

Necromancy makes extensive use of necrotic energy, a deathly power associated with the Shadowfell. Since undead creatures are often inured to this energy, necromancers learn to circumvent that resistance.

Disrupt Undead — Wizard Utility

A simple gesture causes the darkness powering and protecting an undead creature to unravel.

At-Will ✦ Arcane, Necromancy, Shadow
Minor Action Ranged 5
Target: One undead creature
Effect: The target's necrotic resistance, if any, is reduced by 5 until the end of your turn.

Spook

One does not peer into the darkness and emerge unscathed. When you use this spell, shadows flicker around you, giving your words sinister weight.

Spook — Wizard Utility

You gather the shadows to yourself, so that when you speak, your words drip with menace.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Nethermancy, Shadow
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You would make an Intimidate check.
Effect: You instead make an Arcana check and use that result to determine the outcome of the Intimidate check.

Level 1: At-Will Powers

When you choose 1st-level wizard at-will attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Restless Dead

Corpses are rarely still in the presence of a necromancer. Casting this spell animates bones already in the soil, tasking them to lash out at an enemy. Sometimes the bones are skeletal claws, but more often they are flailing bird skeletons, skittering mouse bones, or the remains of another woodland or field animal. On the rare occasion that an area is devoid of bones, spectral claws rise from the ground to do the necromancer's bidding.

Restless Dead — Wizard Attack 1

Agitated bones break free from the ground to scrabble and claw at your enemy.

At-Will ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necromancy, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One nonflying creature
Attack: Intelligence vs. Reflex
Hit: 1d8 + Intelligence modifier damage. The squares adjacent to the target become a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. The ground of the zone is difficult terrain for your enemies.
Level 21: 2d8 + Intelligence modifier damage.

Rotting Doom

The rotting doom spell weakens a creature's structural bindings, causing them to break down until its flesh sloughs away. Creatures killed by this spell are reduced to quivering, jellied masses.

Rotting Doom — Wizard Attack 1

You hold up your hand, palm out, and release pale wisps to infect your foes with horrid decay.

At-Will ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necromancy, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1d8 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage. If the target is undead, it also gains vulnerable 5 to all damage until the start of your next turn.
Level 21: 2d8 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage.
Effect: The target cannot regain hit points until the start of your next turn.

Scare

Fear is a powerful weapon in a nethermancer's arsenal. Scare drains away courage, leaving dread in its place. Those affected cannot bring themselves to attack you when you drop your guard, allowing you to pass by unscathed.

Scare — Wizard Attack 1

You blast an area, drawing resolve from your foes until they shrink back in abject terror.

At-Will ✦ Arcane, Fear, Implement, Nethermancy, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Close blast 3
Target: Each creature in the blast
Attack: Intelligence vs. Will
Hit: 1d8 + Intelligence modifier psychic damage, and the target cannot make opportunity attacks against you until the end of your next turn.
Level 21: 2d8 + Intelligence modifier psychic damage.

Unraveling Dart

Anyone who dabbles in shadow can sense a faint malevolent awareness in its magical currents. The unraveling dart spell demonstrates this malicious quality. Shadowy projectiles transform in mid-flight, becoming whatever type of energy the wizard's target tolerates least.

Unraveling Dart — Wizard Attack 1

Gray, smoky darts leap from your fingertips to strike at your foes where they are weakest.

At-Will ✦ Arcane, Implement, Nethermancy, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One or two creatures
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1d4 + Intelligence modifier damage. If the target has vulnerability to any damage types, the damage is of those types. If the target has no vulnerabilities, you gain a power bonus to the damage roll equal to your Wisdom modifier.
Level 21: 2d4 + Intelligence modifier damage.

Level 1: Encounter Powers

When you choose 1st-level wizard encounter attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Darkening Flame

Infusing a spell with shadow power threatens the target's body and soul. When you cast darkening flame, you hurl a ball of black fire that erupts in a flash when it strikes an enemy.

Darkening Flame — Wizard Attack 1

You toss a blazing sphere of shadow-infused fire against your enemies. Where it detonates, it blackens flesh and soul.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Fire, Implement, Necromancy, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Intelligence vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d8 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage.
Effect: Each creature adjacent to the target takes fire damage equal to your Intelligence modifier.

Twilight Falls

This spell blasts enemies' minds, leaving shadow-stained substance in the area. A wave of swirling shadows hinders your foes' attacks.

Twilight Falls — Wizard Attack 1

You weave draining shadow energy into an oppressive gloom that dims your enemies' senses.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Nethermancy, Psychic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Will
Hit: 1d6 + Intelligence modifier psychic damage. If the target is in the origin square, the target is also dazed until the end of your next turn.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. When any enemy in the zone attacks a creature, the creature has partial concealment against that enemy.

Level 1: Daily Powers

When you choose 1st-level wizard daily attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Ray of Fatigue

Nethermancers have little need for raw destructive magic, preferring instead to leach vitality and strength from their foes. The ray of fatigue spell concentrates raw shadow into a beam that overwhelms a target with weariness.

Ray of Fatigue — Wizard Attack 1

A pale gray beam leaps from your fingertip and drains strength from your foe.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Nethermancy, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 20
Target: One creature
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude. You have combat advantage against the target if it is bloodied.
Hit: 2d8 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage, and the target is weakened (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is weakened until the end of your next turn.

Spirit Rend

Necromancy studies both life and death, but many of its spells concern just one or the other. Spirit rend releases raw necrotic energy that scorches living creatures' animating spirits and drives back the undead.

Spirit Rend — Wizard Attack 1

You weave a dire spell that tears at your enemies' spirits and holds the undead at bay.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necromancy, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Will
Hit: 3d6 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends).
If the target is undead, it takes no damage and is not immobilized. Instead, the target must take a free action to move as far as its speed allows to a square farther away from you, and it is dazed (save ends).
Miss: Half damage.

Level 2: Utility Powers

When you choose 2nd-level wizard utility powers, these powers are among your options.

Lifetaker

This spell catches a departing soul or spirit and wrings the energy from it. Necromancers can use this energy to bolster themselves or an ally. Some sages believe the spell was created by Vecna when he was mortal; witnessing it in action does little to dispel such rumors.

Lifetaker — Wizard Utility 2

You crook your finger and snatch a soul as it struggles free from its body. It screams as you draw forth its energy.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Necromancy, Shadow
Immediate Reaction Ranged 5
Trigger: A nonminion living creature dies within 5 squares of you.
Target: You or one ally
Effect: The target gains temporary hit points equal to his or her healing surge value.

Summon Shadow Serpent

The summon shadow serpent spell gives a wizard the ability to assess the battlefield from the viewpoint of a small shadowy ally.

Summon Shadow Serpent — Wizard Utility 2

Shadows flicker at your feet, swirl before you, and coalesce into the form of a black serpent.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Shadow, Summoning
Minor Action Ranged 10
Effect: You summon a shadow serpent in an unoccupied square within range. The creature is an ally to you and your allies.

The serpent lacks actions of its own. Instead, you spend actions to command it mentally, choosing from the actions in its description. You don't need line of effect to the serpent to command it. When you command the serpent, the two of you share knowledge but not senses.

When the serpent makes a check, you make the roll using your game statistics, not including temporary bonuses or penalties.

The serpent lasts until it drops to 0 hit points, at which point you lose a healing surge (or hit points equal to your healing surge value if you have no surges left). Otherwise, it lasts until you dismiss it as a minor action or until the end of the encounter.

Shadow Serpent — Summoned Creature
Small shadow beast

HP your healing surge value; Healing Surges none, but you can lose a healing surge for the serpent if an effect allows it to spend one
Defenses your defenses, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties
Speed 6
Stealthy
The serpent gains a +5 bonus to Stealth checks, and it takes no penalty to the checks for moving more than 2 squares.
Minor Action ✦ At-Will
Effect: Until the end of your turn, you can see through the serpent's eyes. You cannot gain line of sight or line of effect for your powers from the serpent's space, but you can make Perception checks from it.
Minor Action ✦ At-Will (1/round)
Effect: The serpent either crawls, runs, stands up, shifts, squeezes, or walks.

Level 3: Encounter Powers

When you choose 3rd-level wizard encounter attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Cordon of Bones

You wrench bones from your foes and from the ground to erect a jagged barricade. The shards catch and tear at the flesh of anyone trying to pass through the cordon.

Cordon of Bones — Wizard Attack 3

Bones tear from your enemies and spring up from the ground to form a jagged cordon.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necromancy, Shadow
Standard Action Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d8 + Intelligence modifier damage.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. Creatures take a -2 penalty to attack rolls while in the zone, and any creature that enters the zone takes 5 damage. The damage increases by 2 for each creature reduced to 0 hit points by the attack.

Ebony Razors

By spinning shadows into psychic daggers, you discourage enemies from pressing their attacks.

Ebony Razors — Wizard Attack 3

You hurl blinding shadows, then solidify them into warding shards of psychic energy.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Nethermancy, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Close blast 5
Target: Each creature in the blast
Attack: Intelligence vs. Will
Hit: 2d8 + Intelligence modifier psychic damage.
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, you have partial concealment, and when an adjacent enemy hits you with an attack, that enemy takes 5 psychic damage.

Level 5: Daily Powers

When you choose 5th-level wizard daily attack powers, this power is among your options. If you choose the summon shadow servant power, the creature you can summon is associated with your Expert Mage school, either necromancy or nethermancy.

Summon Shadow Servant

Using this spell, necromancers and nethermancers summon servants from the realm of the dead, creatures that can accompany their masters until dismissed or destroyed. Because of this fact, such a wizard is rarely seen without a shadowy creature at his or her side.

Summon Shadow Servant — Wizard Attack 5

The shadows swirl and coalesce into a dark creature that awaits your command.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Shadow, Summoning
Minor Action Ranged 5
Prerequisite: You must have the Expert Mage benefit associated with necromancy or nethermancy.
Effect: You summon a creature associated with your necromancy or nethermancy Expert Mage benefit. The creature appears in an unoccupied space within range, and it is an ally to you and your allies.

The creature lacks actions of its own. Instead, you spend actions to command it mentally, choosing from the actions in the creature's description. You must have line of effect to the creature to command it. When you command the creature, the two of you share knowledge but not senses.

When the creature makes an attack roll or a check, you make the roll using your game statistics, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties.

The creature lasts until it drops to 0 hit points, at which point you lose a healing surge (or hit points equal to your surge value if you have no surges left). Otherwise, it lasts until you use a minor action to dismiss it or until you use this power again.

Necromancy: Shadow Skeleton

A shadow skeleton, formed from shadows and the bones of the dead, is adept at hitting enemies that don't take it as a serious threat.

Shadow Skeleton — Summoned Creature
Medium shadow animate (undead)

HP your bloodied value; Healing Surges none, but you can lose a healing surge for the skeleton if an effect allows it to spend one
Defenses your defenses, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties
Speed 6
Immune disease, poison

Standard Action ✦ At-Will
Attack: Melee 1 (one creature); your level + 6 vs. AC
Hit: 2d8 + your Intelligence modifier damage, and the target cannot shift until the end of its next turn.

Minor Action ✦ At-Will (1/round)
Effect: The skeleton either crawls, runs, stands up, shifts, squeezes, or walks.

Opportunity Action ✦ At-Will
Trigger: An enemy adjacent to the skeleton takes an action that provokes opportunity attacks.
Effect: The skeleton makes its standard action attack against the triggering enemy, with a +2 bonus to the attack roll and the damage roll.

Nethermancy: Shadow Beast

A quasi-real monstrosity bearing the features of various creatures, a shadow beast is a dependable ally in combat, and it throws off a burst of gloom whenever it takes damage.

Shadow Beast — Summoned Creature
Medium shadow beast

HP your healing surge value; Healing Surges none, but you can lose a healing surge for the beast if an effect allows it to spend one
Defenses your defenses, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties
Speed 6 (8 while charging); phasing

Standard Action (fear, necrotic) ✦ At-Will
Attack: Melee 2 (one creature); your level + 4 vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d8 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage, and the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls until the end of its next turn.

Minor Action ✦ At-Will (1/round)
Effect: The beast either crawls, runs, stands up, shifts, squeezes, or walks.

Immediate Reaction (zone) ✦ At-Will
Trigger: The beast takes damage from an attack.
Effect: The beast creates a zone in a close burst 1. The zone is heavily obscured and lasts until the start of your next turn.

Level 6: Utility Powers

When you choose 6th-level utility powers, these powers are among your options.

Darklight

The darklight power calls forth shadow substance and ignites it. In the amethyst glimmer, you can see clearly. Still, darklight does not spoil the darkness, because it sheds no illumination.

Darklight — Wizard Utility 6

Purple flame appears over your head, though only you and your companions can see it. By its guidance, you can find your way.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Shadow, Zone
Minor Action Close burst 2
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter. You and your allies have darkvision while in the zone.

Shadow Investiture

Creatures affected by shadow investiture undergo a pronounced transformation. Their pallor becomes ashen, their eyes darken to glossy black, and menace radiates from them as darkness suffuses their being.

Shadow Investiture — Wizard Utility 6

You draw energy from the shadow staining your soul to help others navigate the darkness.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Shadow
Standard Action Close burst 1
Target: You and each ally in the burst
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, each target has darkvision and necrotic resistance equal to 5 + your Wisdom modifier.

This nethermancer's best friend is her shadow beast

Level 7: Encounter Powers

When you choose 7th-level wizard encounter attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Ghoul Strike

Necromancers sometimes mold arcane magic to replicate an undead creature's capabilities. Ghoul strike offers a means to bind an enemy as if it had felt a ghoul's caress. Most living creatures find the stench rising from an afflicted creature too odious to endure.

Ghoul Strike Wizard Attack 7

You make a slashing motion against an enemy, causing darkness to bind it and filling the air around it with a charnel stench.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necromancy, Necrotic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Melee 1 or Ranged 5
Target: One creature
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d6 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage, and the target is immobilized until the end of your next turn. The attack creates a zone in a burst 2 centered on the target. The zone lasts for as long as the target is immobilized by this power. Any creature (except you) that ends its turn in the zone takes 5 necrotic damage, and it grants combat advantage while in the zone.
Miss: The power is not expended. If you use it during your next turn against the same target, you gain a +2 bonus to the attack roll.

Murderous Twin

The Shadowfell is often described as the natural world's dark reflection. Its locations resemble those found in the world, but of a twisted and unseemly variety. If locations can be reflections, so too can people. This spell conjures a dark reflection of your foe.

Murderous Twin Wizard Attack 7

You create a shadowy twin of your enemy, a murderous vestige that wreaks havoc on itself and its allies.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Conjuration, Implement, Nethermancy, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One enemy
Attack: Intelligence vs. Will
Hit: 1d10 + Intelligence modifier psychic damage.
Effect: You conjure a murderous twin of the target in an unoccupied space adjacent to the target. The twin is the same size as the target. The twin remains until the end of your next turn and occupies its space. The target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls while adjacent to its twin. You can use the secondary power against the target once before the twin vanishes.
Secondary Power (Arcane, Implement, Nethermancy, Psychic, Shadow)
Immediate Reaction Melee 1
Trigger: The target leaves a square adjacent to the twin or makes an attack.
Effect: The twin vanishes and reappears in a square adjacent to the target and then makes the following attack against it.
Attack: Intelligence vs. Will
Hit: 5 + Intelligence modifier psychic damage, and the target is dazed until the end of its next turn.

Level 9: Daily Powers

When you choose 9th-level wizard daily attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Circle of Death

With a simple command, a wizard lays waste to great swaths of creatures. The circle of death spell is not selective about who dies, claiming innocents with the guilty.

Circle of Death — Wizard Attack 9

You wave your hand and snuff out the lives of your enemies.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necromancy, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 10 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude
Hit: The target takes necrotic damage equal to your level. It is also dazed, slowed, and weakened (save ends all).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is slowed until the end of your next turn.

Mirage Arcana

The mirage arcana spell overlays terrain with images that make the area appear twisted and grotesque. In the gathering shadows, dark things chitter, ephemeral ghosts flit from place to place, and whispering pollutes the air. Creatures caught in the mirage are overcome with despair.

Mirage Arcana — Wizard Attack 9

The terrain writhes and warps, reshaped into a sinister realm born from darkest nightmare.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Illusion, Implement, Nethermancy, Psychic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 10 squares
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter. The zone is difficult terrain, and creatures grant combat advantage while in it. You then make the following attack.
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Will
Hit: 2d6 + Intelligence modifier psychic damage, and the target is dazed, cannot leave the zone willingly, and cannot see creatures outside the zone (save ends all). If the target is already dazed, it takes 5 extra psychic damage.

Level 10: Utility Powers

When you choose 10th-level wizard utility powers, these powers are among your options.

Umbral Leap

Some wizards believe that all shadows touch the Shadowfell and that they can bridge the distance between the worlds through the use of the proper spell. Umbral leap allows a wizard to slip through shadow, vanishing and reappearing some distance away. Although capable of covering a great distance, the spell requires a darkened destination square, limiting its utility in certain environments.

Umbral Leap — Wizard Utility 10

You vault the distance between one shadow and another.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Shadow, Teleportation
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You must be in a square of dim light or darkness.
Effect: You teleport up to 10 squares to a square of dim light or darkness. You don't need to see the destination space to teleport, but if you can't occupy that space, the teleportation is negated.

Wall of Gloom

The wall of gloom spell cloaks a region of the battlefield in darkness. It's believed the spell was first created by drow to cover their movements when raiding unsuspecting villages on the surface. The spell is a useful tool for either defense or skulduggery.

Wall of Gloom — Wizard Utility 10

Darkness billows where you gesture, forming an opaque curtain.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Nethermancy, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area wall 8 within 10 squares
Effect: The wall creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. The zone can be up to 4 squares high. The zone is heavily obscured, and squares adjacent to it are lightly obscured. The zone is difficult terrain, and creatures (except you) are blinded while they are entirely in the zone.
Sustain Minor: The zone persists until the end of your next turn.

Level 13: Encounter Powers

When you choose 13th-level wizard encounter attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Blackening Pyre

This fearsome spell calls down a column of flaming souls. The fiery entities shriek and wail as they whirl around your enemies, their flames burning more than flesh. In a moment, the souls are gone, but lingering fire recalls their horrid fury.

Blackening Pyre — Wizard Attack 13

A blazing wind swirls through your foes, carrying with it the screams of the damned.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Fire, Implement, Necromancy, Necrotic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3d8 + Intelligence modifier fire and necrotic damage, and you can slide the target 1 square.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. Any creature that enters the zone or ends its turn there takes 5 fire and necrotic damage.

Dark Gathering The singularity that this spell creates is raw, concentrated shadow energy. Unstable, it detonates and spreads a darkening wave. Foes in its path are subjected to the nightmarish influence of the Shadowfell.

Dark Gathering — Wizard Attack 13

A black mote appears in your enemies' midst and explodes outward, projecting a wave of shadow to fog your foes' senses.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Nethermancy, Psychic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 10 squares
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Will
Hit: 1d10 + Intelligence modifier psychic damage, and the target is dazed until the end of your next turn. If the target is in the origin square of the burst, the target is also blinded until the end of your next turn.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. The zone is heavily obscured to your enemies.

Level 15: Daily Powers

When you choose 15th-level wizard daily attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Enervation Epitomizing the insidious nature of nethermancy, this spell infects a creature with spirit-draining energy and transfers that energy to the wizard. A creature touched by the beam experiences numbing fatigue as its spirit swiftly decays.

Enervation — Wizard Attack 15

Crackling black energy leaps from your fingertip to leach life from a creature.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Nethermancy, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 20
Target: One creature
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude. If the target is bloodied, you have combat advantage for this attack.
Hit: 3d8 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage. In addition, the target is slowed, is weakened, and takes a -1 penalty to attack rolls, all defenses, skill checks, and ability checks (save ends all).
Each Failed Saving Throw: The penalty worsens by 1 (maximum -4 penalty).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is weakened until the end of your next turn.
Effect: You gain temporary hit points equal to your healing surge value.

Soul Puppets One of the more malevolent necromancer spells, soul puppets wrenches creatures' spirits horrifically. A wizard can also use the spell to exert influence over the undead, compelling their obedience.

Soul Puppets — Wizard Attack 15

You reach out and crush your foes' animating spirits, manipulating their limbs like a puppeteer.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Charm, Implement, Necromancy, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 20 squares
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Will
Hit: 4d8 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends). If the target is undead, it takes no damage, and it is dominated instead of immobilized (save ends).
Miss: Half damage.

Level 16: Utility Powers

When you choose 16th-level wizard utility powers, these powers are among your options.

Dancing Shadows Darkness leaps from one ally to another when you cast the dancing shadows spell. The gloom might be enough to turn a strike into a miss.

Dancing Shadows — Wizard Utility 16

You gather darkness and fling it at an ally in need. Once the shadows have done their job, they leap again to hide another ally.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Nethermancy, Shadow
Immediate Interrupt Ranged 10
Trigger: You or an ally within 10 squares of you is hit by a melee or a ranged attack.
Target: The character who was hit
Effect: The target gains partial concealment until the end of his or her next turn.
Aftereffect: One ally within 5 squares of the target gains partial concealment until the end of his or her next turn.

Soul Harvest This spell harvests a remnant of life from a dying enemy to give your ally a second chance.

Soul Harvest — Wizard Utility 16

You catch a bit of vitality from a dying creature and twist it to your own purposes.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Healing, Necromancy, Shadow
Free Action Close burst 5
Trigger: You reduce a living enemy to 0 hit points with necrotic damage.
Target: You or one ally in the burst
Effect: The target regains hit points equal to your level and can make a saving throw against one effect that a save can end.

Level 17: Encounter Powers

When you choose 17th-level wizard encounter attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Horrific Shadow

With this spell, you draw shadows together and animate them to form a horned nightmare.

Horrific Shadow — Wizard Attack 17

You gather shadow into a monstrous horror that obscures you and bites at the minds of any creature within reach.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Illusion, Implement, Nethermancy, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Close burst 2
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Will
Hit: 3d6 + Intelligence modifier psychic damage.
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, you are invisible, and any creature that ends its turn adjacent to you takes psychic damage equal to 5 + your Intelligence modifier.

Soul Blight

Vile black flames leap from you to scourge your enemies with necromantic power. Once the pain has passed, the spell lingers, burdening enemies with dread.

Soul Blight — Wizard Attack 17

A chiming sound presages a ring of black, roiling flames that leaves death in its wake.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Fire, Implement, Necromancy, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3d8 + Intelligence modifier fire and necrotic damage. If the creature is undead, it takes no damage. It is instead dominated until the end of your next turn.
Effect: Each target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls and grants combat advantage until the end of your next turn.

Level 19: Daily Powers

Necromancers and nethermancers know how to pull the very stuff of shadow from the Shadowfell and give it a semblance of life.

Benefit: You normally add two wizard daily attack powers to your spellbook at this level. If you have the summon shadow servant power, you can gain a new creature option to summon, instead of gaining one of those two powers. The creature is associated with one of your Expert Mage schools, necromancy or nethermancy.

Necromancy: Shadow Wraith

Necromancers consort with malevolent spirits of the shadow realm and can call them forth to serve them. You can now use summon shadow servant to summon a shadow wraith.

Shadow Wraith — Summoned Creature
Medium shadow humanoid (undead)

HP your healing surge value; Healing Surges none, but you can lose a healing surge forthe wraith if an effect allows it to spend one
Defenses your defenses, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties
Speed 6, fly 6; phasing
Immune disease, poison

Fateful Death ✦ Aura 2
Bloodied enemies grant combat advantage while in the aura. If a creature drops to 0 hit points while in the aura, the wraith gains temporary hit points equal to your Intelligence modifier.

Standard Action (necrotic) ✦ At-Will
Attack: Melee 1 (one creature); your level + 6 vs. AC
Hit: 2d10 + your Intelligence modifier necrotic damage, and the target is weakened until the end of its next turn.

Minor Action ✦ At-Will (1/round)
Effect: The wraith either crawls, runs, stands up, shifts, squeezes, or walks.

Opportunity Action (necrotic) ✦ At-Will
Trigger: An enemy ends its turn adjacent to you and in the wraith's aura.
Effect: The target takes 10 necrotic damage.

Nethermancy: Shadow Brute

The tentacled form of the shadow brute lashes your enemies and holds them in place. You can now use summon shadow servant to summon a shadow brute.

Shadow Brute — Summoned Creature
Large shadow beast

HP your bloodied value; Healing Surges none, but you can lose a healing surge for the brute if an effect allows it to spend one
Defenses your defenses, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties
Speed 6

Standard Action ✦ At-Will
Attack: Melee 2 (one or two creatures); your level + 4 vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d8 + Intelligence modifier damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends). The immobilization ends if the target ends any turn more than 2 squares away from the brute.

Minor Action ✦ At-Will (1/round)
Effect: The brute either crawls, runs, stands up, shifts, squeezes, or walks.

Immediate Reaction (necrotic) ✦ At-Will
Trigger: The brute takes damage from an attack.
Attack: Melee 2 (one enemy); your level + 4 vs. Fortitude
Hit: 10 necrotic damage, and the brute pushes the target up to 5 squares and knocks it prone.

Level 22: Utility Powers

When you choose 22nd-level wizard utility powers, these powers are among your options.

Acererak's Apotheosis

Acererak is the most famous of those wizards whose long focus on death culminated in immortality as a lich. Few wizards have the courage to complete similar unholy rituals, but necromancers have learned the value that such a transformation provides, even if it lasts only minutes at a time.

Acererak's Apotheosis — Wizard Utility 22

You become a vision of death as you infuse your body with shadow—your flesh draws back to the bone, and fiery blue pinpricks burn in your now-empty eye sockets.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Necromancy, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: You must have at least one healing surge.
Effect: You lose a healing surge and gain temporary hit points equal to your healing surge value. Until the end of the encounter, you are undead, and you gain the following benefits.
✦ Darkvision
✦ Immunity to disease and poison
✦ Necrotic resistance equal to 10 + one-half your level

Wraithform

Wizards who dabble in shadow magic do so at great risk to their souls; they bargain away part of themselves to acquire dark magic. True masters, however, take this liability and turn it into an advantage. A wizard under the effect of wraithform becomes a creature of pure shadow, little more than billowing darkness held in a vague humanoid shape.

Wraithform — Wizard Utility 22

Your body darkens and dissolves into shadowy substance, transforming you into living shadow.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Nethermancy, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, you have a fly speed of 6 (hover) and are insubstantial and phasing.
Sustain Minor: The effect persists until the end of your next turn.

Level 23: Encounter Powers

When you choose 23rd-level wizard encounter attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Animate Shadows

This spell infuses your enemies' shadows with a semblance of independence. The awakened shades loathe the living and turn their anger against the creatures they reflect.

A wizard who displays mastery of shadow earns the respect of lesser creatures

SLAWOMIR MANIAK

Animate Shadows Wizard Attack 23

Your enemies' shadows writhe and dance, awakened by a dread compulsion to torment your foes.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Nethermancy, Shadow
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 10 squares
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Will
Hit: 3d6 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage. Until the end of your next turn, the first time the target moves without shifting on its turn, it takes necrotic damage equal to your Intelligence modifier, and you can slide it 1 square as a free action.
Effect: Each target grants combat advantage until the end of your next turn.

Vampiric Strike

When you cast vampiric strike, you create a malignant link with an enemy. As the enemy's life force flows out, you capture it to nourish yourself or an ally.

Vampiric Strike Wizard Attack 23

You sink psychic fangs into your foe so that when it suffers, you and your allies benefit.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Healing, Implement, Necromancy, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Melee touch or Ranged 5
Target: One creature
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude
Hit: 3d6 + Intelligence modifier psychic damage, and you regain hit points equal to half the damage dealt.
Effect: The next time the target takes damage from an attack before the end of your next turn, you or one ally within 5 squares of you gains 10 temporary hit points.

Level 25: Daily Powers

When you choose 25th-level wizard daily attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Dooming Darkness

The Shadowfell's bleakest reaches are inimical to life. Living beings lost in these lightless lands find their souls crippled by melancholy and their bodies plagued with rampant decay. The dooming darkness spell lets a wizard draw forth this horrid influence and use it to entrap enemies.

Dooming Darkness Wizard Attack 25

You pierce reality's veil to let loose the dark lands' dread influence, spilling noisome shadow among your enemies and imprisoning them in impenetrable night.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Nethermancy, Psychic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 3 within 10 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude
Hit: 4d6 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. The zone is difficult terrain and is totally obscured. Any creature that ends its turn in the zone takes 15 necrotic and psychic damage. While the zone persists, you can use the secondary power at will.
Sustain Minor: The zone persists until the end of your next turn.
Secondary Power (Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Nethermancy, Psychic, Shadow)
Opportunity Action Close burst 3 centered on the zone's origin square
Trigger: An enemy leaves the zone on its turn.
Target: The triggering enemy in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude
Hit: 10 necrotic and psychic damage, and the target is pulled up to 2 squares toward the zone's origin square.

Finger of Death

The dreaded finger of death spell is the ultimate expression of a necromancer's power. The wizard merely has to point, and a target dies—or, at the very least, wishes it had.

Finger of Death Wizard Attack 25

You point your finger and command your foe to die.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necromancy, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude
Hit: 10d6 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage. If this damage bloodies the target, it takes 20 extra necrotic damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: If the power reduces the target to 20 hit points or fewer, the target drops to 0 hit points.

Level 27: Encounter Powers

When you choose 27th-level wizard encounter attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Blazing Death Storm

You use arcane magic to channel an elemental firestorm, infusing it with necrotic energy. Your foes burn and decay as the maelstrom of dark fire devours them.

Blazing Death Storm — Wizard Attack 27

At your gesture, flame and death erupt in a storm.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Fire, Implement, Necromancy, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 20 squares
Target: Each creature in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude
Hit: 4d6 + Intelligence modifier fire and necrotic damage.
Miss: Half damage.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. Any creature that enters the zone or ends its turn there takes 10 fire and necrotic damage.

Impenetrable Gloom

Although light does shine in the Shadowfell, certain areas of that dread realm shun illumination entirely. The impenetrable gloom spell calls on the darkness found in these places and traps your enemies in its insidious shadow.

Impenetrable Gloom — Wizard Attack 27

Your enemies are assaulted by fright and pain as billowing darkness erupts among them.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Nethermancy, Psychic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 10 squares
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Will
Hit: 4d6 + Intelligence modifier psychic damage, and the target is dazed until the end of your next turn. If the target is in the burst's origin square, the target is also stunned until the end of your next turn.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. The zone is totally obscured to your enemies.

Level 29: Daily Powers

When you choose 29th-level wizard daily attack powers, these powers are among your options.

Energy Drain

One of the darkest nethermancy spells in existence, energy drain captures a creature's spirit and saps it of all animating energy, giving the wizard the stolen strength and vitality. A creature struck by this spell reels as its spirit is pillaged; even when the spell ends, recovery is a long time in coming.

Energy Drain — Wizard Attack 29

An unwholesome beam of darkness impales your enemy and drains vital life from its spirit.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Nethermancy, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 20
Target: One creature
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude. If the target is bloodied, it grants combat advantage to you for this attack.
Hit: The target is stunned (save ends).
Aftereffect: The target is slowed and weakened and takes a -1 penalty to attack rolls, all defenses, skill checks, and ability checks (save ends all).
Each Failed Saving Throw: The penalty worsens by 1 (maximum -4 penalty).
Miss: 3d10 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage.
Effect: You gain temporary hit points equal to your healing surge value.

Moilian Flames

With its crumbling towers teetering on the brink of oblivion, Moil is one of the most terrifying places in the Shadowfell's depths. According to legend, Orcus flung the accursed city from the world to shadow's edge, trapping its people in ice and death for all time. The Moilian people were said to be masters of shadow magic and had bargained away their souls for its power. Many of their advances have been lost, but a few spells of terrible power have managed to escape the city's frozen grasp.

Moilian Flames — Wizard Attack 29

You gather shadowstuff in your hands and hurl it at a foe. As it travels, it ignites with cold blue flames that greedily devour anything they touch.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Necromancy, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Intelligence vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d8 + Intelligence modifier cold and necrotic damage, and the target takes ongoing 20 cold and necrotic damage (save ends). The target takes a -2 penalty to saving throws against this ongoing damage.
Miss: Half damage, and the target takes ongoing 15 cold and necrotic damage (save ends).
Effect: At the end of each of your turns, each enemy adjacent to at least one creature taking ongoing damage from this power takes ongoing 15 cold and necrotic damage (save ends).

Mage Schools

A mage wizard can select from two new schools, necromancy and nethermancy, in addition to the schools presented in Heroes of the Fallen Lands. When creating your character and when gaining levels, refer to the school you select for powers, benefits, and other features.

A mage who chooses to specialize in one of these schools gains the Apprentice Mage, Expert Mage, and Master Mage class features associated with that school, as described below. Mages who specialize in these schools tend to have high Wisdom scores.

ENIGMATIC MAGE BENEFITS

If you have the enigmatic mage paragon path (see Heroes of the Fallen Lands) and you choose necromancy or nethermancy as your school, you gain any benefit noted in the appropriate section below as an enigmatic mage paragon path feature.

NECROMANCY SCHOOL

An ancient and reviled art, necromancy focuses on the ties between the body, soul, and animating spirit. Your spells can animate the dead, creating thralls to fight on your behalf; despoil an enemy's flesh with rot; or snuff out life with a whisper. Necromancy is a fearsome and grotesque pursuit, and only those of strong will and unwavering commitment can master its magic.

Level 1: Necromancy Apprentice

Apprentice Mage feature

Death stalks your enemies and grants false life to you. You gain a short-lived resilience when you strike.

Benefit: When you hit at least one target with an arcane necromancy attack power, you gain 2 temporary hit points.

Level 5: Necromancy Expert

Expert Mage feature

Extensive study into necromantic lore rewards you with unnatural vitality. You boast strength and endurance odd for someone of such sickly pallor or gaunt frame.

Benefit: You gain a +2 bonus to Athletics checks and Endurance checks.

Level 10: Necromancy Master

Master Mage feature

Your concentration on necromantic power increases the potency of your necrotic attacks. They bite deeply, ignoring attempts to blunt them.

Benefit: Your arcane necromancy attack powers ignore necrotic resistance.

Level 11: Necromancy Action

Enigmatic mage paragon path feature

Your focus on necromancy spells lets you loose necrotic energy that unravels your foes' defenses.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to take an extra action, each enemy adjacent to you gains vulnerability to necrotic damage until the end of your turn. The vulnerability equals your Wisdom modifier. If the enemy has necrotic resistance, it is instead pushed up to a number of squares equal to your Wisdom modifier.

Level 11: Necromancy Encounter Power

Enigmatic mage paragon path feature

Author of many sinister necromantic tomes, Nulathoe had no compunctions against using corpses as undead thralls and then annihilating them in an arcane burst when they fell.

Nulathoe's Concussive Demise — Enigmatic Mage Attack 11

A dying creature explodes with sudden destructive power.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necromancy, Necrotic, Shadow
Immediate Reaction Area burst 2 within 10 squares
Trigger: A creature dies within 10 squares of you.
Target: Each creature in the burst centered on the triggering creature
Attack: Intelligence vs. Reflex
Hit: 3d6 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage.
Effect: You push each target up to 3 squares away from the burst's origin square.

Level 12: Necromancy Utility Power

Enigmatic mage paragon path feature

A famed spell noted for preserving the dead from decay, Nulathoe's death ward girds creatures against eternity's cruel caress.

Nulathoe's Death Ward Enigmatic Mage Utility 12

You weave a potent ward that thwarts death's cold touch.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Necromancy, Shadow
Minor Action Close burst 1
Target: You and each ally in the burst
Effect: Each target gains the following benefits until the end of the encounter.
✦ Resist 10 necrotic
✦ +2 power bonus to death saving throws and saving throws against effects that slow or weaken
✦ Immunity to being turned into an undead creature

Level 20: Necromancy Daily Power

Enigmatic mage paragon path feature
With a single command, Nulathoe could draw forth the dead to swell the ranks of his vile army.

Nulathoe's Undead Army Enigmatic Mage Attack 20

A motley host of animated flesh, bone, and teeth claw their way free from the earth, rising up in answer to your summons.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Necromancy, Shadow, Summoning
Minor Action Area burst 5 within 20 squares
Requirement: You must have at least one healing surge.
Effect: You lose a healing surge. You then summon up to five undead soldier minions in unoccupied squares in the burst. They are allies to you and your allies.

The soldiers lack actions of their own. Instead, you spend actions to command them mentally, choosing from the actions in their description. You must have line of effect to a particular soldier for it to respond to your commands. When you command a soldier, you and the soldier share knowledge but not senses.

When a soldier makes an attack roll or a check, you make the roll using your game statistics, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties.

Each soldier remains until you take an extended rest, until you dismiss it as a minor action, or until it drops to 0 hit points (which does not cause you to lose a healing surge).

Undead Soldier Summoned Creature (Minion)
Medium natural animate (undead)

HP 1; a minion never takes damage from a miss.
Defenses your defenses with a +2 bonus to AC, not including any temporary bonuses or penalties
Speed 6
Immune disease, poison; Resist 10 necrotic

✝ Standard Action ✦ At-Will
Attack: Melee 1 (one creature); your level + 5 vs. AC
Hit: 11 damage, and the target is immobilized until the end of your next turn.
Effect: Any of your other undead soldiers that are within line of effect of you make the attack against the same creature or different ones.

Opportunity Action ✦ At-Will
Trigger: An enemy that you can see and that is adjacent to an undead soldier of yours takes an action that provokes opportunity attacks.
Effect: The undead soldier makes the following attack.
Attack: Melee 1 (the triggering enemy); your level + 5 vs. AC
Hit: 11 damage.

MARK WINTERS

Nethermancy School

Originating from the work of renegade wizards who were exiled to the Shadowfell, nethermancy spells extract shadow magic from the environment and blend it with arcane energy. They can create impenetrable darkness, spark terror in your enemies, and form horrific monsters from shadowstuff.

Level 1: Nethermancy Apprentice

Apprentice Mage feature
Darkness serves at your command. Your spells fog your enemies' senses with shadow.

Benefit: Creatures hit by your arcane nethermancy attack powers treat enemies more than 2 squares away from them as having partial concealment until the end of your next turn.

Level 5: Nethermancy Expert

Expert Mage feature
Shadows crawl and writhe around you, forming a shifting tapestry of grotesque shapes. These shadows mask your presence and give you an edge when facing down a foe.

Benefit: You gain a +2 bonus to Intimidate checks and Stealth checks.

Level 10: Nethermancy Master

Master Mage feature
Darkness sustains you, granting your spells greater potency when you are in shadows.

Benefit: While you have any concealment against a creature, you have combat advantage against it.

Level 11: Nethermancy Action

Enigmatic mage paragon path feature
Your aspect changes to something monstrous, a transformation made possible through your extensive familiarity with nethermancy's secrets.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to take an extra action, your space and each square adjacent to you become a zone of darkness that lasts until the start of your next turn. The zone is totally obscured to creatures other than you.

Level 11: Nethermancy Encounter Power

Enigmatic mage paragon path feature
The archmage Evard mastered the Shadowfell's secrets, drawing forth its rich magic and bending it to his will. His preoccupation with such dark pursuits affected him profoundly, as is evident from the spells he left for those who would follow his path.

Evard's Wrenching Darkness — Enigmatic Mage Attack 11

Darkness envelops an enemy and whisks it away, spreading bitter fear among your other foes.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Fear, Implement, Nethermancy, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Intelligence vs. Fortitude
Hit: 1d10 + Intelligence modifier psychic damage. You slide the target up to 5 squares, and the target is immobilized until the end of your next turn.
Effect: After the attack, each enemy within 2 squares of the target is pushed up to 2 squares away from it and grants combat advantage until the start of your next turn.

Level 12: Nethermancy Utility Power

Enigmatic mage paragon path feature
Evard had few friends, largely because he regarded others as inferior. Evard's all-seeing worm is but one example of how he exploited his companions.

Evard's All-Seeing Worm — Enigmatic Mage Utility 12

The writhing worm you hurl at your ally burrows into his or her flesh to create a tiny opening through which you can see.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Necrotic, Nethermancy, Shadow
Minor Action Ranged 5
Target: One ally
Effect: The target takes necrotic damage equal to your Intelligence modifier. Until the end of the encounter, while you have line of effect to the target, you can see as if you are in both your space and the target's, and when you use a wizard attack power or a wizard paragon path attack power, you can do so as if you were in either space, although you physically remain in yours.

"Nethermancy is my greatest gift to the arcane arts. It remains the closest magic can come to wielding shadow in its purest form. Despite my best efforts, I was never able to rid myself of the arcane formulae to use shadow energy alone. The darkness always slipped from my grasp unless I first constructed a framework to contain its energy. Arcane magic, then, provides the needed framework. Although shadow cannot be harnessed without such a contrivance, it is still there. I have seen it with my eyes, and yet it ever stays out of reach."

—Evard

Level 20: Nethermancy Daily Power

Enigmatic mage paragon path feature
Evard is best known for drawing twisted monsters infused with dark energy from the Shadowfell. Spells such as Evard's black tentacles and Evard's dreadful mist suggest what the dark wizard was after. Evard's black gate comes nearest to realizing the secrets that Evard sought, for it creates a portal to the Shadowdark's depths, where aberrant mutants mingle with shadow-born abominations. Those who pass through the gate rarely emerge intact or sane.

Evard's Black Gate — Enigmatic Mage Attack 20

A black disk yawns wide, expanding like an eye's pupil in the dark. From its dull surface emerge writhing black tentacles, which ensnare your foes and drag them into oblivion.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Conjuration, Nethermancy, Shadow
Minor Action Area wall 2 within 10 squares
Effect: You conjure a wall that lasts until the end of your next turn. The wall can be up to 2 squares high, and its squares are totally obscured. While in the wall, a creature is dazed and can attack only creatures adjacent to it. While the wall persists, you can use the secondary power at will.
Sustain Minor: The wall persists until the end of your next turn.
Secondary Power (Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Nethermancy, Shadow)
Standard Action Close burst 5 centered on a square of the wall
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d8 + Intelligence modifier necrotic damage, and the target is pulled up to 2 squares toward the wall and into it, if possible. The target is restrained (save ends).

CHAPTER 3

Races of Shadow

SHADOW MAGIC has an understandably sinister reputation, and those who study and master its power bear a stain on their souls that can never be clean. There are great risks to dabbling in darkness, and no one knows those risks more intimately than the races of shadow. These peoples stand apart from other denizens of the planes because shadow magic is an intrinsic part of their souls, a darkness within that shapes their identities and also eases the processes by which they call upon shadow to scourge their foes.

This chapter presents three races particularly suited to players who want to build characters infused with shadow's power. The shadow darkening their souls might drive these people toward wicked ends, turning them into nocturnal predators or unhinged deviants who indulge in every heinous impulse. Others resist the evil pull of shadow and might become heroes even though their dark heritage and clear connection to shadow magic makes them outcasts and pariahs. These lonely souls often wander the world, doing what good they can in the hope of redeeming their tainted souls.

Revenant: Everything a character accomplished in life serves as a mere precursor of his or her true purpose—a purpose that becomes apparent only after he or she returns from death as a revenant to inhabit the world once more.

Shade: Shades are mortals who have willingly embraced the darkness by engaging in secret rituals that infuse their souls with shadow.

Vryloka: The vampirism that infects the ancient human race of the vryloka is a fell curse that darkens their ancient bloodline.

In addition to the races of shadow introduced here, this chapter also explores the legends of shadow that appear in the cultures of other races such as dwarves, eladrin, halflings, and humans in the DUNGEONS & DRAGONS world.

"You come with questions, seeking forbidden power, but what do you know of shadow's price? How can you understand what only I have endured, I who was born into darkness and must bear its weight for the rest of my days. You see, I remember what it was like before I become what you see before you. I remember life, living, vigor, and vitality. And I mourn their loss."

—Loss, revenant blackguard

CHANGING YOUR RACE

Shade, vryloka, or revenant characters can start a campaign at 1st level like any other character, but these races can also be used to transform an existing character. Your fallen eladrin knight might rise from the dead as a revenant, or your human rogue might succumb to the vampiric curse of the vryloka.

If you change both your race and your class (for example, if your eladrin knight returns from the dead as a revenant assassin), then you are best off creating a new character from scratch. But if all you want to change is your character's race, then making changes to the character's mechanics is straightforward. When you change your race, you lose any features, traits, and powers of your original race. You also lose any ability score modifications your original race provided. Then apply the ability score modifications, traits, powers, and racial features of your new race. You also need to swap out any feats or other such mechanics for which you no longer meet the prerequisites.

It's up to you to make sure that choices you make in revising your character still support your character's story. For example, the revenant of your eladrin knight should probably have eladrin as his chosen race for the revenant's Past Life racial trait.

A revenant straddles the worlds of the living and the dead

Revenant

Resilient souls returned from death to do the work of Fate

Racial Traits

Average Height: 5′ 5″–6′ 2″
Average Weight: 100–200 lb.

Ability Scores: +2 Dexterity; +2 Charisma or +2 Constitution
Size: Medium
Speed: 6 squares
Vision: Low-light vision
Languages: Common, choice of one other
Skill Bonuses: +2 Endurance, +2 Intimidate

Undead: You are considered an undead creature for the purpose of effects that relate to the undead keyword. You are also considered a living creature.

Past Life: Select a race other than revenant. You are also considered a member of that race for the purpose of meeting prerequisites, such as feat or paragon path prerequisites.

Unnatural Vitality: When you drop to 0 hit points or fewer and are subjected to the dying condition, you can choose to be dazed, instead of falling unconscious. You make death saving throws as normal, and if you fail one, you fall unconscious instead of being dazed.

Dark Reaping: You have the dark reaping power.

Dark Reaping — Revenant Racial Utility

You use one death as the seed to sow more destruction.

Encounter ✦ Necrotic
Free Action
Trigger: A creature within 5 squares of you drops to 0 hit points.
Effect: One creature of your choice that you hit with an attack before the end of your next turn takes extra necrotic damage equal to 1d8 + your Constitution modifier.

Death usually represents the gateway to the afterlife or the end of a natural existence. Sometimes, however, death can be just the beginning. For some select individuals, the Raven Queen or another agency of death bars passage to the next stage of existence, turning a soul back toward the natural world. In such instances, fate has other plans.

A revenant arises not as an aimless corpse but as the embodiment of a lost soul given new purpose. Such a creature walks in two worlds. While the revenant moves among the living, it also exists in the shadows, haunted by the vague memories of a life it no longer possesses.

PATRICK MCEVOY

Revenants do not build settlements or share a common culture as is customary of the other races. The only attributes that connect these living undead are a set of common physical characteristics and a similar origin and destiny. In all cases, a revenant is purposefully returned to the natural world after succumbing to a cessation of life. Dead, but unable to find its way to whatever waits beyond death's dark gates, the once-living soul is reconstituted as a revenant.

The gods of death and fate often require agents in the natural world, and they don't always have enough exarchs or aspects to deal with all the work they seek to accomplish. For this reason, revenants are called into existence. However, the rules governing the gods and how they can intrude upon the natural world are often mysterious and seemingly contradictory to mere mortals. For this reason, it seems that revenants enter the world without clear directions or even full memories of the life they once lived.

Revenants often appear in adult form, fully grown and instinctively capable of dealing with the world around them. Most awaken in a place of the dead, such as a graveyard or a crypt, with only vague memories of whatever went before and usually with a driving compulsion to accomplish some partially remembered task or vaguely defined quest.

Most revenants remember only fragments of the life they lived before, as well as snatches of a peaceful darkness that immediately preceded their return to the world. Some need time to come to grips with the fragmented memories and driving compulsions. Others take to their new existence easily and without too much analysis and soul-searching. Many recall a woman's voice, soft and melodious, not unlike the gentle flutter of black-feathered wings, that follows them out of the shadows and back to the wakefulness of the natural world. The words are gentle but insistent, and often the source of any compulsion that a revenant experiences upon returning to life. Although each revenant returns to the world in a different way, most recall words that drifted out of the darkness with them. "Arise, my champion," the voice demands of them. "There is work to do."

Physical Qualities

Revenants are souls of the dead returned to a semblance of life by the Raven Queen or some other agency of the afterlife. Revenants do not appear as undead horrors or even anything like their former selves. When the Raven Queen reincarnates souls, they exist as her special creations, and they have the bodies of her choosing and creation. In this way, such souls are always marked as representatives of the Raven Queen's power. They emerge from the shadow of death fully formed and fully grown, set to handle whatever tasks they have been returned to deal with.

A revenant has a body that is slender for his or her height, but this form possesses an uncanny toughness that contradicts the apparent build. Revenants have the same range of complexions as humans, but a revenant's skin is ashen and the features are sunken. Eyes are most commonly solid black with a single point of red light burning within them, but other eerie eye colors—including yellow, white, silver, and gold—are

Its masklike face in no way conceals a revenant's deadly resolve

TOM BAXA

The Hells hath no fury like a revenant scorned

TOM BAXA

not uncommon. In some cases, the eyes glow with a ghostly light. Revenants' hair typically ranges from black through shades of gray to white. Revenants can grow facial hair, and males often have beards or mustaches that accentuate their ashen countenances.

A revenant's face and skin clearly set a member of this race apart from other humanoids. A revenant's visage has a masklike quality that can be disturbing to mortal beings. Rough, dark scales appear on the flesh near the ends of a revenant's limbs, marking the revenant as one of those the Raven Queen has allowed back into the world of the living. A revenant's extremities end in strong, black fingernails and toenails that resemble claws.

Attitudes and Beliefs

Every revenant approaches the return to life from a different angle. Some relish it and long to find a way back to the life they have lost and forgotten. Others embrace their new existence with a fervor and passion that obliterates the fragments of the past that still haunt them, and they strive to remain alive in the natural world.

Some revenants can't abide the fleeting glimpses into a past that is no longer available to them, and they long to find a way back to the darkness they were expelled from. These revenants know that the fastest way to return to the comfort of the shadows is to complete whatever tasks have been set before them as quickly and efficiently as possible. They do not seek an end to existence, but a return to the peace of the grave—a peace they earned the first time they passed through life.

Many revenants might appear to be distant and uncaring, but they can experience the full range of emotions seen in other races. They just need time to reconcile the contradictions they are confronted with, from new and alien bodies to shattered memories and half-understood quests undertaken at the behest of a powerful being that might or might not be willing to explain what is happening to them.

Revenant Communities

Revenants don't form communities or build societies. They do form attachments, however, usually with other adventurers who can help them achieve their goals. Some even settle down in communities of other races, usually because the location reminds them of something from their half-remembered past or because of its proximity to something related to the tasks they seek to complete. For example, the community might be near a portal to the Shadowfell, or within an area where enemies of the Raven Queen are active.

Each revenant is unique, but ties to the Shadowfell draw most to prefer dark colors and clothing that can help them escape notice. Whether because of dark humor or as a warning to others, their clothing and gear bear symbols that are reminders of death or duty. Revenants use raven feathers, bones, chains, grave markers, and skulls for decoration.

Revenant Adventurers

By definition, all revenants are adventurers. They have been returned to life and set upon a quest to advance the needs of the Raven Queen or some other

AWAKENING

You gasp a breath of cold air like it's your first. Your eyes snap open. Colors seem dim, and every sound is foreign and filled with newness. Rather than warmth, a chill emanates from within you, making your chest feel heavy and your extremities blaze with heat. You are in a graveyard, surrounded by stones that mark the location of dead bodies—all engaged in the sleep that has been denied you.

The world appears strange, and as you struggle to rise, you have the sense that you control a body that is not your own.

And nothing is your own. You know that. You remember that. That's when other memories come flooding back. Before this place, you struggled somewhere cold. The sky was dark, but it was also somehow alight with flowing color—as if the wind glowed instead of the stars. Snow buried everything, veiling the landscape into funereal forms. And before that, other memories—scenes, faces, feelings—all a jumble, all confused like a half-forgotten dream.

You know one thing for certain. You were dead.

Judging from how you look and feel, you might be a little dead still. You pick a direction and start walking, noting all you can about what you see and hear as you go. You might not remember everything about who you were, but you can make new memories while you try to find out.

Something else hounds your thoughts as you strike out into an eerily familiar world: The dead don't come back to life by accident. Someone did this to you, and whoever that was had a reason. And with that thought, you remember the voice. A woman's voice. Cold, yet gentle. Demanding, yet understanding. A voice like the flutter of soft wings.

"Arise, my champion," the voice whispered to you as you drifted out of the darkness. "There is work to do."

agency of death in the natural world. A revenant wanders the world, often in the company of other adventurers, dealing with anything that comes along. In general, a revenant always tries to advance his or her own agenda, but he or she is not above taking on quests and challenges that are only peripherally tied to the tasks that returned the revenant to life.

Revenant adventurers have access to racial feats that are described in Chapter 4.

Assassin Perhaps the profession most associated with the revenant, the assassin uses skills and powers connected to both martial training and the things of shadow to accomplish his or her goals—and those goals are almost always related to striking a killing blow. Many of the tasks set before revenants include taking down powerful enemies or eliminating influential leaders, and the path of the assassin works perfectly with these goals.

Fighter A revenant fighter often follows the path of a slayer, utilizing Dexterity and Constitution to create a powerful destroyer. Few revenants opt for this approach, however, since they are more inclined toward other avenues of training and proficiency.

Paladin While not ideally suited to be paladins, some revenants nonetheless take up the mantle of the divine defender to best honor and serve the Raven Queen or whatever agency of death set them on their current path. As a paladin of a god of death, a revenant strives to destroy the enemies of natural death wherever they may be, including all forms of undead and especially those who adhere to the tenets of Orcus, Demon Prince of Undeath.

Ranger At first glance, the choice of ranger might seem odd for a revenant. These defenders of life, however, include the rare revenant who has become protective of the natural world upon his or her return from death. What better way to serve the Raven Queen and accomplish the tasks before oneself than to embrace the path of the wilderness avenger?

Rogue Being a creature of stealth and shadow, a revenant gravitates toward the rogue profession and often embraces the path of thievery in order to accomplish the mission at hand. Using the shadows to launch attacks from, to hide, and to otherwise move unnoticed make a revenant a natural at rogue activities.

Warlock When a revenant turns to arcane power to supplement his or her other natural abilities, the path that opens up is usually that of the warlock. Utilizing more talent than training but still interested in drawing upon as much power as possible, the revenant is drawn to the promise and potent punch of the warlock's repertoire.

Roleplaying a Revenant

When creating a revenant character, consider these points.

You aren't like other mortals. Revenants do not live and reproduce as mortal races do. Indeed, they are not a true race at all. Each revenant arises in the world only by the will of the Raven Queen (or some other agency of death). She—or someone she has made a bargain with—has a specific purpose in mind for each soul returned to the world.

You have a purpose. This purpose might be obvious to a revenant, or it might be a mystery the revenant has to unravel before it can rest. A revenant might doggedly pursue this end or rebel against that fate and try to avoid destiny. The purpose could even change, revealing greater goals as steps toward the ultimate end are achieved. Much depends on who brought the revenant back.

If the Raven Queen commanded the soul's return, the revenant might play an important part in the future the Raven Queen foresees. The Raven Queen might send a soul to bring someone or something to the death it has avoided, and the revenant might have been chosen because of past ties to the target.

Your memories are fragmented. Revenants usually remember only snippets of their former lives—just enough to push them toward the purpose for which some power raised them. Many don't even remember their names and thus take on new ones fitting their disposition. Memories come in dreams and flashes of insight, often provoked by the revenant's experiences. Brushing shoulders accidentally in the market could call to mind the touched person as a lifelong friend. The sight of a pale hand moving through lustrous hair could remind the revenant's heart of a lost love. Each remembrance has its purpose: reward, punishment, bait, or aid. All are true, but the power that raised the revenant can sometimes control which truths the revenant recalls.

You are recognizable, but unknown. The rarity of revenants results in few having much knowledge about them. Experts in religion or those who encountered revenants in the past might know more about them, but for most people revenants are strange and alien, spoken of in whispered rumors around low-burning fires in the deepest hours of the night.

Revenant Characteristics: Agile, cold, determined, fearsome, hard-bitten, noble, pragmatic, tragic

Male Names: Bane, Carver, Dredge, Erak, Riven, Rook, Scourge, Sever, Snipe, Wrath

Female Names: Blessed, Charm, Fable, Ire, Lash, Nihil, Raven, Sunder, Vengeance

SHADE

Seekers of power willing to trade their souls to the darkness

Racial Traits

Average Height: 5′ 6″-6′ 2″
Average Weight: 100-160 lb.

Ability Scores: +2 Charisma; +2 Dexterity or +2 Intelligence

Size: Medium
Speed: 6 squares
Vision: Darkvision

Languages: Common, choice of one other

Skill Bonuses: +2 Arcana, +2 Stealth

Fragile Mortality: You have one fewer healing surge than normal.

Master of Shadows: When your class grants you a utility power after 1st level, you can forgo taking that power. Instead, you can take a shade utility power of the same level or lower.

Practiced Sneak: You have training in Stealth.

Shadow Origin: The Shadowfell has left its mark on you, so you are considered a shadow creature for the purpose of effects that relate to creature origin.

One with Shadow: You have the one with shadow power.

One with Shadow — Shade Racial Utility

You fade into the darkness, becoming a part of the shadow that swirls around you.

At-Will ✦ Shadow
Standard Action Personal

Effect: Until the end of your next turn, you can make Stealth checks to become hidden when you have any cover or concealment. In addition, you can use cover from your allies to become hidden or to remain hidden.

Ambitious, ruthless, and paranoid, shades are humans who trade part of their souls for a sliver of the Shadowfell's dark essence. Even more so than the shadowborn—natives of the Shadowfell descended from the common races—shades are gloom incarnate. No matter what nations or land one was first born into, each shade undergoes a dark rebirth that transforms him or her into a creature of stealth and secrecy who is caught between life and death. In exchange for the twilight powers granted to shades, the Shadowfell taints their souls with dark thoughts and a darker disposition.

A human who chooses to become a shade is reborn into shadow through a transformative ritual that draws on the ambient magic present at shadow crossings—places where the veil between the world and its dark echo is thinnest. Known in scholarly circles as the Trail of Five Darknesses, this arduous ritual is as likely to slay its practitioner outright—obliterating body and soul—as it is to grant the ability to wield shadow magic.

BEN WOOTTEN

A shade assassin takes to the rooftops to evade pursuit

Unbridled ambition and utter desperation are common reasons for a human to undertake the Trail of Five Darknesses, since the taint of the Shadowfell marks a shade as an outcast forever. Shades maintain a determined self-reliance when among their own kind, because they know all too well the greed and duplicity their race is capable of. However, shades also believe in strength in numbers, and as such they congregate in settlements close to shadow crossings, both in the world and the Shadowfell.

A few shades deny the self-serving nature of their kind, striving to ensure that the true nature of their souls overcomes the shadowy nature of their chosen path. Rejecting their own kind, these shades seek the company of the common races. Drawn to the life of an adventurer, such shades try to earn the trust of a close circle of friends, defending those comrades with the ruthlessness for which their kind is known. However, some decry this behavior as just another facet of the shades' characteristic avarice—treating friends as personal possessions that must be kept safe at all costs.

Physical Qualities

Shades resemble their original human selves, though they sacrifice their native vitality to the ritual that turns them into slender creatures of shadow. Their darkness-piercing eyes become orbs of dull black, dark gray, or purple. Their coloring takes on subdued hues, with most shades having pale skin and lank, black hair. Shades prefer dark, somber clothing of silk, suede, or supple leather, decorated with brass and iron. Their metal weapons and tools are coated with special oils that dull any sheen or reflection.

The Trail of Five Darknesses has a dramatic effect on longevity, doubling a shade's normal life span. Rumors abound of shades who eventually attain a level of power that allows them to stop aging altogether.

Attitudes and Beliefs

Shades exist among all cultures, but the transformation they undergo creates a consistent sense of ambition for which their kind is known. No matter what justification inspires an individual to undertake the Trail of Five Darknesses, the conscious act of embracing the power of shadow changes that person. For many shades, having given up a portion of their own soul in the name of power means that no sacrifice is too great.

Shades value restraint, poise, and patience. They bide their time in all things, keeping a low profile as they manipulate events to their advantage. Just as the Shadowfell's malaise can smother the spirits of mortal adventurers who venture into that dread plane, the sliver of shadow within each shade subdues emotion. A shade still feels love, hate, pride, despair, and the like, but he or she buries these feelings deep inside. A shade's smirk or frown carries as much weight as a halfling's laughter or an orc's frenzied roar.

Shades hold little love for the gods. Having made the ultimate sacrifice for power, they have no patience for those who beg deities for their favor. Those few shades who dedicate themselves to a faith worship Sehanine, god of trickery, or Vecna, god of secrets.

For all their fierce independence and self-reliance, some shades feel a hunger for companionship driven by the emptiness of their fractured souls. Although such shades rarely become social creatures, they gravitate to strong allies alongside whom they can prove themselves in battle. Such long-term companions are typically the only ones who ever see a shade's true emotions, even as the shade demonstrates the full strength of his or her driven ruthlessness in those allies' defense.

The shades' independence puts them in direct opposition to the intense shadar-kai and their devotion to the Raven Queen. These two races of shadow demonstrate an animosity that rivals that of elves and drow, or dwarves and orcs. However, shades are civil to the vampiric vryloka, understanding too well the effect of living under the weight of shadow.

Shade Communities

The dark nature of their transformation places shades firmly outside the societies they arise from. The most social of their kind distrust all except their closest companions. Truly misanthropic shades embrace their darkness fully, seeing others as pawns to be exploited in the quest for power.

In the mortal realm, a shade often takes up a life of wandering or lives as a social outcast on the fringes of humanoid society. It is common for shades to mask their true nature with magic or clever disguises, using their shadow powers as a screen against watchful eyes. In many cases, shades reject family or clan names from their past lives to take on the name of the shadow crossing where they undertook the Trail of Five Darknesses ritual.

In the Shadowfell, and around shadow crossings, shades form communities that reflect the avaricious and brutal nature of their residents. Shades who settle in the Shadowfell are typically those who have strongly embraced the darkness in their souls. Their enclaves are built on a rigid caste structure in which shade nobles plot against each other in bloodthirsty political machinations that would tear other societies apart. In such communities, shades unattached to a noble house are treated as outcasts or used as pawns in attacks against rival nobles.

Shade Adventurers

The hunger for power is a constant among shades. However, a shade's moral bent determines the manner in which that power is pursued—and what he or she will do with it in the end.

Assassin Shades have a natural bent for the assassin's talents, since the mixture of shadow magic and martial talent can serve as the first step toward becoming a shade. Such assassins are typically lone wolves who, after learning a guild's secrets, vanish to serve only themselves. Such shades are hunted by their former guildmates. The conflict between them can end only in either the shade's death or the guildmaster's defeat and replacement by the renegade shade.

Rogue Shade rogues are consummate spies, clinging to the shadows with a competence matched by few members of the common races. No matter how else they choose to ply their trade, shade rogues uniformly seek to steal information they can use to their advantage.

Warlock The warlock's path is a tempting one for shades, who take up the gloom pact as a means of augmenting their own intrinsic power. Such warlocks see their pact as an extension of the Trail of Five Darknesses, refusing to acknowledge their subservience to an otherworldly master.

Warlord Shade warlords follow that path for the control and leadership it promises, though most are wise enough to respect the independence of their own close companions. A shade warlord becomes an adventurer to gain personal power, though he or she can undertake any number of lesser goals in pursuit of that power.

Wizard Shade wizards favor nethermancy and necromancy, the schools of magic closely associated with the power of shadow. Shade wizards create sanctums in the Shadowfell once they master the ways of planar travel, using that plane as a base for their acquisition of more powerful arcane magic.

Roleplaying a Shade

When creating a shade adventurer, here are a few points to consider.

You chose to be a shade. Other characters might be defined by the circumstances of birth or fate, but you chose to trade part of your soul for a sliver of shadow's power. Some shades seek the Trail of Five Darknesses out of pure ambition, seeing that path as a means of gaining power. Others sacrifice their souls to the shadow only under duress—perhaps to protect or rescue a loved one. Was this path one you chose to follow freely? Or do you see the shadow as a curse and a burden you must bear?

You stand between life and death. A part of your soul has already moved on to the Shadowfell, taking the path all souls must take after death. Although you still live, the shadow that fills you leaves your mortal emotions subdued and held in check. You fear death no more or less than you once did, but only your closest allies might ever see any sign of that fear.

Wait and watch. As a shade, you do not rush into any situation where you have the option to first analyze the dangers you might face. The strength of shadow is its ability to conceal, and you take advantage of your opponents' lack of awareness to read their weaknesses. Then you strike when the time is right.

Protect what is yours. The things you call your own—your possessions, your knowledge, even your friends—are precious to you, and those who attempt to harm what is yours suffer your harsh retribution. You defend your goals and your allies with the same extreme prejudice, and woe to any creature that underestimates your wrath.

Shade Characteristics: Ambitious, brooding, manipulative, paranoid, pragmatic, reserved

Shade Names: Shades usually keep their original names, while some adopt aliases to cloak their origins.

Crossing Names: Blackwood, Dubhtyn, Eboncross, Gloomhollow, Hematiton

Shade Utility Powers

When your shade character gains a class utility power after 1st level, you can forgo taking a power granted to you by your class. Instead, you gain a shade utility power of the same level or lower.

Fleeting Shade

The power of the Shadowfell lets you shroud yourself from your foes, granting you a few precious moments to set up an attack or move to a place of safety. Even as the shadow that cloaks you dissipates, it continues to obscure you from your enemies' sight.

Fleeting Shade — Shade Utility 2

You cloak yourself with strands of shadow that allow you to fight unseen.

Encounter ✦ Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You become invisible until the end of your turn. In addition, you gain a +5 power bonus to Stealth checks until the end of your next turn.

Twilight Torch

The soul of a shade holds the essence of the Shadowfell, but it also retains the light that emanated from the Astral Sea when the first mortals were created. This balance between light and darkness allows you to coalesce shadows around yourself at will.

Twilight Torch — Shade Utility 6

The light of your soul commingles with the dark shard embedded within it, surrounding you with the concealing power of shadow.

At-Will ✦ Shadow, Zone
Minor Action Close burst 1
Effect: The burst creates a zone of dim light that lasts until the end of your next turn or until you use this power again.

Shadow Monsters

Your connection to the Shadowfell lets you reach deep within yourself, calling forth monsters composed of the dark essence of that realm. Shapeless shadow congeals around your foes in the form of ravening hounds, soaring shapes on dark wings, twisting black tentacles, or even fouler things.

Shadow Monsters — Shade Utility 10

You call forth nightmare shadow monsters to strike at your foes' bodies and minds.

Daily ✦ Conjuration, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Close burst 3
Effect: You conjure four shadow monsters in four different unoccupied squares in the burst. The shadow monsters last until the end of the encounter. Once per round as a minor action, you can move the shadow monsters up to 4 squares each.

Enemies take a -2 penalty to attack rolls while adjacent to a shadow monster. Any enemy that ends its turn in the square of or adjacent to one or more shadow monsters takes 10 necrotic damage.

Shadow Jump

As your own power grows, so too does the power of the shadow bound to your soul. With enough training and focus, you can use that dark essence to tap the planar energy of the Shadowfell and slip the bonds of space. When you use this power, a writhing cloud of black mist shrouds you as you shift from place to place.

Shadow Jump — Shade Utility 16

The planar energy of the Shadowfell lets you slip away from danger, then step back into the world a safe distance away.

Encounter ✦ Shadow, Teleportation
Move Action Personal
Effect: You teleport up to your speed.

Five Darknesses

The Trail of Five Darknesses that you used to become a shade did not end with your rebirth. As you strengthen your bond with the Shadowfell, you unlock the secrets known only to your kind.

Five Darknesses — Shade Utility 22

The essence of the Shadowfell flows freely within you, transforming you into living shadow that strikes fear into the hearts of nearby creatures.

Encounter ✦ Fear, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You gain 10 temporary hit points. Until the end of your next turn, you gain a fly speed equal to your speed, you are insubstantial and phasing, and creatures take a -2 penalty to attack rolls while adjacent to you.

"The Trail of Five Darknesses is no easy path to follow. You say you are ready to make your own journey, to see where the trail ends? I can tell you this—the passage to immortality is unique to the individual. My experiences are my own, as are my fears and memories of that awful time. And if you emerge, clinging to the fragile thread that is life, expect no comfort and no kinship, for by embarking on this quest you sever ties with anyone you have ever loved. Are you ready? Are you truly prepared?"

Racial Traits

Average Height: 5′ 4″-6′ 2″
Average Weight: 110-200 lb.

Ability Scores: +2 Charisma; +2 Strength or +2 Dexterity
Size: Medium
Speed: 7 squares
Vision: Low-light

Languages: Common, choice of one other
Skill Bonuses: +2 Perception, +2 Stealth
Blood Dependency: When you are bloodied, your healing surge value drops by 2.
Human Heritage: You gain a +5 racial bonus to Bluff checks made to pass as a human.
Living Dead: Because your soul is tainted by undeath, you are both living and undead. If a power has different effects on living creatures and undead creatures, you choose which effect applies to you.
Necrotic Resistance: You have necrotic resistance equal to 5 + one-half your level.
Vampiric Heritage: When your class grants you a utility power after 1st level, you can forgo taking that power. Instead, you gain a vryloka utility power of the same level or lower.
Lifeblood: You have the lifeblood power.

Lifeblood — Vryloka Racial Utility

An enemy's ebbing life grants you a surge of vitality.

Encounter
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You kill or bloody an enemy.
Effect: You gain one of the following benefits.
- ✦ You shift up to your speed.
- ✦ You gain temporary hit points equal to 5 + one-half your level.
- ✦ You gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls until the end of your next turn.

Uncounted centuries ago, in a land of mists and dark forests, the noble families of a now-forgotten kingdom sought a way to increase their life span beyond the meager years allotted to them by their human heritage. One evening, their elders were approached by a mysterious entity known only as the Red Witch—a scarlet-clad figure who held the key to their dreams. She offered to them a powerful blood-bonding ritual that would grant them the vitality of vampires without subjecting them to the taint of undeath. These human nobles became the first living vampires—blessed with great power gained at the price of their own vitality. In later centuries, these creatures became known by the name of the noble family that first forged the pact, the Vrylokas.

By carefully concealing their true nature, the first vrylokas quickly rose to power, becoming the rulers of their realm. In time, others learned of the dark accord that was the source of their power. An uprising of the vrylokas' human subjects soon followed, and their former kingdom was cast down and lost to the mists of time. However, the living vampires endured.

Over long generations, these deposed nobles managed to insinuate themselves into the upper classes of other nations, reestablishing their power and prestige. Paying attention to the lessons of their history, vrylokas go to great lengths to keep their true nature secret, living elaborately crafted double lives.

To the world at large, vrylokas are known as human nobles who were displaced from distant ancestral homelands. But even as they are welcomed into the upper circles of their adopted cultures, the vrylokas maintain their true society in the shadows—a dark court of living vampires constantly plotting for power against each other and the mortal races.

Physical Qualities

Vrylokas were originally human, though the bloodbond ritual subtly changes their appearance. Vrylokas have dark gray or blue eyes that turn red when they are angered or excited. Their skin is uniformly pale, ranging from pinkish flesh to chalky white. Most vrylokas have hair in shades of red, from deep scarlet to strawberry blond. However, jet-black hair is found in rare individuals. A vryloka's upper canine teeth might appear slightly more pronounced than the human norm. However, unlike true vampires, vrylokas have no fangs.

Vrylokas favor clothing and weapons that reflect their ancient origin, from layered robes and tall headdresses to long jackets and trousers, or bodices and skirts. Vryloka garb is often subtly embroidered with bloodred roses and thorns—the symbols of the Red Witch. Vrylokas favor red accentuated with brass and black, and they regard rubies as the most precious of gems.

Vrylokas' armor is uniformly ornate, with their warriors favoring heavy plate. Their weapons are equally flamboyant, spiked and flourished with rubies and rose motifs.

The bloodbond ritual causes vrylokas to live to be three hundred years old or more, and they retain their energy and vitality to their dying days. The most powerful vrylokas are said to be immune to the effects of age, though they can be killed like any other mortal creature.

Attitudes and Beliefs

The essence of the bloodbond ritual is the pursuit of eternal life, and the ritual's effects shape every vryloka's personality. Vrylokas are passionate creatures, capable of being overcome by blissful love or seething rage with equal ease. The grudges and affections of a vryloka can endure for centuries, sometimes passing from generation to generation.

The intensity of the vrylokas' passion often leads them to feelings of ennui and unrest. Their once-human minds cause them to appreciate the advance of years more than dwarves, elves, and other long-lived races do. As such, vrylokas spend their time searching for ways to entertain themselves. Some turn to intellectual endeavors, becoming renowned as artists or poets. Others seek gratification by pushing themselves to their physical limits through military service or adventuring. Most turn their distaste for world-weariness against each other, engaging in elaborate power games in which the common races are treated as possessions and pawns.

This culture of conflict is strengthened by the vrylokas' dedication to keeping their bloodlines sacred. A vryloka's duty is to family first, and even as rivalries tear competing families apart, there is no room for doubt or betrayal with regard to lineage. Like every other emotion, loyalty is all-consuming to a vryloka.

In rare cases, a vryloka develops this same degree of loyalty to outsiders—most often fellow adventurers with whom he or she has fallen in. Initially, such characters typically ensure that their outside loyalties do not impact their dedication to their kin. However, many vryloka adventurers eventually find themselves forced to make a choice between the bonds of friendship and those of family.

The vrylokas universally pay fealty to the Red Witch, whose actions created their race. That faith is built on a strong sense that the Red Witch and the Raven Queen are connected, though argument persists over whether the Red Witch existed as an exarch, an avatar, or even an aspect of the god of death. Whatever the truth, vrylokas of a religious bent treat the Red Witch and the Raven Queen as one and the same, and few adopt the faith of any other deity.

Vryloka Communities

The nature of their race compels vrylokas to hide in plain sight within other cultures, typically by passing themselves off as human nobles from distant lands. Endearing themselves to local rulers, vrylokas strive to attain a measure of power and wealth that reflects the status their ancestors first enjoyed. At the same time, however, vrylokas maintain a shadow society of their own, engaging in vicious games of influence and power against their vryloka peers—and oblivious

TYLER WALPOLE

A horde of orcs begins to break and run as a vryloka paladin cleaves through their ranks

A vryloka wizard brings forth shadowy skeletons to join the fight against a savage ettin of the harm they might cause to the mortal folk caught in the crossfire.

In their veiled society, vrylokas value the bond of blood above all other laws. Those who break this bond are typically exiled—shunned by vryloka society and forced to live in isolation among the common races. Some such vrylokas take up lives of wandering that lead them to join adventuring groups. Others undergo a dark breakdown as a result of their solitude, turning into bloodthirsty killers that prey on the folk around them.

Vryloka Adventurers

Vrylokas are drawn to adventuring as a temporary means of battling the ennui that is the product of their long lives. However, having forged new bonds with those they fight alongside, vryloka adventurers make a choice to continue that life, even at the risk of turning their back on their blood and kin.

Paladin The path of the good or unaligned paladin would seem at odds with the dark history of the vrylokas. However, this class is relatively common among the living vampires, who dedicate their blades to the service of the Red Witch. Vryloka blackguards start out as enforcers serving the will of their family elders. Once on their own in the world, they augment their dark powers with a single-minded devotion to excel as adventuring warriors.

Rogue Vryloka adventurers commonly choose the path of the rogue, favoring daggers and other weapons designed for stealthy attacks. Information is power in the vrylokas' secret society, and vryloka rogues steal secrets as often as they acquire more traditional loot.

Vampire Despite their ties to vampirism, vrylokas maintain a strong taboo against the complete embrace of an undead existence. They seek eternal life, not the empty shell of an undead existence. A vryloka who becomes undead is an outcast, a pariah hunted for his or her corruption of the vryloka bloodlines. However, rumors abound of powerful vryloka nobles who have successfully hidden their vampiric nature for decades.

Warlord Vrylokas who become warlords seek to maximize the power they wield among their kin. That thirst for power makes them a target of retribution by other nobles, with exile being the most common result. Vryloka warlords at large in the world look for the opportunity to lead new allies, even as they try to prove themselves to their estranged kin.

Roleplaying a Vryloka

When creating a vryloka adventurer, here are a few points to consider.

What you feel, you feel completely. Vrylokas commit themselves entirely to every endeavor they undertake. As a vryloka, you take no half measures, and you freely abandon any goal for which you cannot feel true passion. By the same token, when you do commit to a task or a quest, you do whatever is necessary to see it through to the end—or die trying.

The bonds of blood are strongest. You were raised to believe that your devotion to family is stronger than any other bond. However, as you make your way in the wider world, you forge new bonds to compete with the old. If your family calls for your help, you will do everything possible to comply—except for turning on the friends who bleed beside you in battle, becoming your kin by bravery and deed. At some point, you might be called on to make a choice between old ties and new. If so, you will have to choose which family to follow.

Experience is everything. The dark ennui that threatens your race is a fate you intend to avoid. If you are presented with the opportunity of a new experience, you take it without hesitation, typically before worrying about what reward or payment you hope to gain. The world is full of exotic places to visit and deadly monsters to fight. The constant flow of experience—and the emotion that such experience brings—is what makes your life worth living.

Vryloka Characteristics: Ardent, daring, grudging, jaded, impulsive, passionate

Vryloka Male Names: Aurel, Bogdan, Claudiu, Grigore, Mircea, Stelian

Vryloka Female Names: Adela, Crina, Elzeny, Iulia, Mirela, Sanda

Vryloka Family Names: Dorgumir, Gavril, Ghenadie, Ionel, Loredana, Vasili

Vryloka Utility Powers

When your vryloka character gains a class utility power after 1st level, you can forgo taking a power granted to you by your class. Instead, you gain a vryloka utility power of the same level or lower.

Unnatural Vitality

The trait that gives your race its greatness is built on the power of life and blood. Like the true vampires you resemble, you can channel the life force of your enemies, stealing their vitality to grant yourself inhuman resilience.

Unnatural Vitality — Vryloka Utility 2

You draw forth the life force of a fallen foe to gain sustenance and power.

Daily ✦ Shadow
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You kill a nonminion enemy with a melee attack.
Effect: You gain a +2 power bonus to death saving throws and to saving throws against ongoing damage. In addition, you don't need to eat, drink, or breathe, making you immune to starvation and suffocation. These effects last until the end of your next extended rest.

Bloodwolf Form

The bloodwolf, a rare beast native to the forests of your ancestral homeland, embodies the strength and power that is your birthright. This fell creature possesses magic that you can draw on through your bloodbond, channeling the bloodwolves' mastery of the hunt.

Bloodwolf Form — Vryloka Utility 6

As you are cloaked in shadow, you take on the form of a wolf with glowing red eyes.

Daily ✦ Polymorph, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You assume the form of a bloodwolf until the end of the encounter. While in this form, you cannot attack, but you have darkvision, you ignore difficult terrain, and you gain a +5 power bonus to Athletics checks, Perception checks, and Stealth checks. As a minor action, you can switch between your normal form and your bloodwolf form.

Crimson Wings

Vrylokas who master the crimson wings power learn to match the speed and resilience of flying hunters such as the red owl and the bloodhawk. Those who take the form of a bat are wary of that creature's mythical association with true vampires, yet sometimes strive to establish that connection in the minds of the common folk.

Crimson Wings — Vryloka Utility 10

Your body fades into a haze of red and black shadow, re-forming as you take to the air.

Encounter ✦ Polymorph, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You assume the form of a Tiny flying creature, such as a bat, an owl, or a hawk. While in this form, you can't attack, but you gain a fly speed equal to your speed and a +2 power bonus to all defenses. You return to your normal form at the end of your next turn, or you can do so beforehand as a minor action. If you are flying when you return to your normal form, you descend to the ground without taking falling damage.

Vryloka adventurers in bloodwolf form

Vryloka Bloodbond

The secret ritual taught to your ancestors by the Red Witch is part of you now. When one of your allies dies, you can invoke the ritual yourself to restore his or her life—but at what price?

Vryloka Bloodbond — Vryloka Utility 16

A shimmering red glow moves from you to a dead ally, who suddenly shudders to life.

Daily ✦ Shadow
Standard Action Melee 1
Requirement: You must have at least one healing surge remaining.
Target: One ally who died during this encounter as a result of failing three death saving throws.
Effect: You lose a healing surge, and the target comes back to life with hit points equal to his or her bloodied value. You are then weakened until the end of your next short rest or extended rest.
Special: If the target is human, the target's race can change to vryloka when he or she comes back to life, causing you to be weakened until the end of your next extended rest. Both you and the target must agree to the transformation, which can take place only with the DM's approval.

Crimson Death

You have focused and honed your vampiric nature in combat, feeding off the life force of your fallen foes. Among your kind, you are known as Crimson Death, capable of entering a murderous ecstasy when an enemy expires.

Crimson Death — Vryloka Utility 22

Your enemy's downfall awakens your thirst for blood and grants you a preternatural awareness of nearby foes.

Daily ✦ Shadow
Free Action Personal
Trigger: You use your lifeblood racial power.
Effect: Instead of the lifeblood power's normal effect, you gain the following benefits until the end of the encounter.
- ✦ You gain a +2 power bonus to speed.
- ✦ You gain darkvision.
- ✦ Whenever you hit an enemy with a basic attack, the enemy also takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends).
- ✦ You have combat advantage against enemies taking ongoing damage.
- ✦ You gain 15 temporary hit points if you start your turn adjacent to an enemy taking ongoing damage.

RICHARD SARDINHA

Dwarves

Most dwarves spend at least a part of their lives underground. Some toil in ancient mines. Others guard the endless tunnels that extend down into the Underdark, ready to warn of approaching enemies. The folk of the isolated dwarven realms consider sun, sea, and sky the stuff of legend. Even when they dwell among the other races, dwarves feel more comfortable within their living quarters and treasure vaults in the cellars of their workshops and businesses.

One might expect that those accustomed to living underground would have little to fear from the darkness. Familiarity with shadow, however, has only made dwarves more wary of it. Dwarven mythology abounds with tales of caverns that devour all light, strange creatures that leap from shadow to shadow, and skeletal dwarf lords whose greed keeps them forever bound to the darkness.

The Lure of Shadow

The pursuit of shadow magic among the dwarves arises by need, not choice. The Citadel of the Rock was a mighty dwarven fortress that crumbled before a surprise invasion of drow. The citadel's lord, Arkad, led a valiant defense in the mines before his soldiers were cut down by the dark elves. Hoping to lure the drow away from the citadel, Arkad fled to a sealed mine shaft that led down into unquenchable darkness. The drow, all too familiar with the danger of shadow magic, refused to give chase and wrote the prince off for dead.

The drow forced the dwarves they captured into slavery, growing rich and decadent on the slaves' labor and the citadel's wealth. So it was that few noticed when drow patrols began to disappear. A few weeks later, the high priestess of Lolth was found murdered and stuffed into a cistern. Whispered rumors quickly spread among the slaves of a dwarf clad in black, with ashen skin and dull white hair. The drow sought out this rebel, but the patrols they sent to the citadel's lowest reaches never returned.

One morning, the dwarf slaves awoke to find their cells unlocked and dead drow scattered about the citadel. The drow matriarch's corpse sat slumped upon her throne, her face frozen in terror and a magic dagger driven into her heart—a weapon thought lost when Arkad disappeared into the darkness.

The Obsidian Cave

In dwarf mythology, caves and passages under the influence of shadow magic are referred to as "black wells." In addition to their latent power, many feature portals or other links to the Shadowfell. Dwarves who seek out the power of a black well are typically desperate, mad, or both.

NICO PHOTOS

Dwarf communities banish or even execute clan members who turn to shadow magic, which they fear as a corrupting, evil force. Shadow magic's promises of power can spread through a stronghold like a disease, but are said to yield only weakness and ruin. For this reason, dwarves who embrace shadow magic turn their backs on their people, living among humans and other races.

Although a few dwarves learn to channel shadow magic on their own, those who master the power of the Shadowfell do so as members of an order known as the Obsidian Cave. Those in the order are typically outcasts, accused of heinous crimes and banished from dwarven society. Nonetheless, they wage a hidden war against the enemies of their people in the darkness of the world below.

Would-be members of the cabal must venture into the Shadowfell to the borders of the realm of the dead. There, they seek an isolated crag of black rock where the masters of the order dwell. This mountain, known as the Ebon Spire, is said to appear and disappear according to the strange currents of shadow magic that surround it. Legends say that only an exiled dwarf bereft of hope and determined to die in the service of the dwarven people can find this place.

A newcomer to the Ebon Spire faces a series of tests designed to ensure loyalty to the order and to the dwarven race. Such acolytes might be forced to endure days of unremitting hardship and torment. Other tests might send the initiate out into the world, tasked with slaying or spying on a known enemy of the dwarves. Only after surviving such tests is a dwarf initiated into the order—and given the full secrets of shadow magic.

Dwarves of the Obsidian Cave rarely deal with other dwarves, preferring instead to wage a singular war against orcs, drow, and other threats to their people. When dwarves of the order die, their souls return to the Ebon Spire, where they linger as spiteful undead spirits. For initiates of the Obsidian Cave, destroying the spirit of a fallen master serves as a final test of one's dedication.

"Indeed, the Pale Court is a cursed lot, an assembly as vile any to darken the legacy of the eladrin people. Their crime, however, was not in their aesthetic obsession, but in their pride."

—Allomar,
knight of Mithrendain

Eladrin

The eladrin have long held a fascination with shadow magic. Their mastery of arcane forces stokes their curiosity when it comes to exploring new sources of power. To the eladrin, shadow magic is just another means of channeling arcane power, and they ignore the tales of horror and corruption that other races ascribe to it. As a result, individual eladrin sometimes fail to see the threat implicit in shadow magic until it is too late.

The Pale Court

The Pale Court was once a gathering of the most beautiful and wondrous eladrin artisans and nobles. Through the use of illusions and similar magic, they clad themselves in unearthly wonder. Tales abound of worldly explorers who stumbled across the Pale Court's fey realm and starved to death, transfixed by its beauty and unable to look away.

In time, the Pale Court's arrogance grew so overwhelming that its members refused to associate with any but the most beautiful creatures. Other eladrin were allowed into the glades of the Pale Court only if they were deemed to be of acceptable aesthetic value. The court's hunters tracked down malformed creatures such as trolls and fomorians not out of any desire to drive back evil, but because such creatures offended their sight.

In time, however, the Pale Court began to lose its luster. Even the graceful aging that eladrin exhibit became a source of unrest among its members, for whom the illusion of youth was not enough. Marred by the ravages of time, the eladrin of the Pale Court soon fell to infighting and teetered on the brink of destruction.

Even as anger and hatred threatened to undo the Pale Court, an eladrin of unmatched grace and beauty appeared among its members. With his pale skin and raven-black hair, he was the envy of even the most arrogant nobles. Dazzled by this wondrous creature, many of the eladrin quickly embraced his offer of the secret of eternal youth. However, that gift carried a dark price.

Those eladrin who rejected the newcomer fought bravely against their fellows, but to no avail. When the battle was done, those who accepted the newcomer's boon were undone by treachery—given the gift of eternal life and youth, but as vampires. After slaking their newly awakened hunger on their defeated kin, the surviving eladrin traveled to the Shadowfell. There, the Pale Court persists, still clinging to its obsession with beauty and its hatred of imperfection.

Across all eladrin lands, rumors tell of how particularly beautiful eladrin sometimes disappear from their chambers in the dead of night without a trace.

MARK WINTERS

The orb of an eladrin nethermancer keeps her safe from shadowy predators, which turn on a hapless goblin instead

In this manner, it is said, the reputation of the Pale Court continually grows.

The Twilight Phantoms

The Twilight Phantoms are a secretive guild of eladrin killers for hire. Its members are trained as practitioners of various professions, but they all specialize in secretly wielding shadow magic.

The Twilight Phantoms are forbidden by their guild's edicts from operating in the Feywild. Instead, they act as the hidden blade of the eladrin nobility, striking against threats from the mortal realm. Rumors abound of eladrin nobles, alarmed at the rise of a human or dwarf kingdom perilously close to a Feywild gate, who have dispatched the Twilight Phantoms to deal with the potential threat. Evidence of such actions remains scant, but accusations alone are enough to feed the suspicion of the eladrin that is common among some cultures.

The Twilight Phantoms maintain no permanent headquarters. Instead, they dwell among the mortal races while posing as merchants and other travelers from the Feywild. As part of a loose network, phantoms might spend years on their own before a parchment arrives with orders for a mission. Wrapped in red velvet, such orders are sealed with a sigil visible only to the guild's members, and which appears to nonmembers as nothing more than a blob of melted wax.

The order places the utmost emphasis on secrecy, and a single member typically knows only two or three other members. Each Twilight Phantom is chosen for his or her abject loyalty to the order, ensuring that whatever the guild's aims might be, its members will dutifully carry them out. In theory, only the guild's high master knows the identity of all members, and missions for the eladrin nobility are controlled by this office.

Rumors persist that the Twilight Phantoms have long since broken into smaller networks. A few of these still carry out orders solely on behalf of the eladrin, but the rest are said to have been infiltrated and seized by other masters. Some believe that the Pale Court now controls a significant portion of the order, which it is slowly bending to its will.

"It was the shadow that concealed us during our flight from the bright lands. It was the shadow that enfolded us, sheltered us from the gods' wrath. And it is to shadow I pledge my loyalty without question."

—Kreston, vryloka paladin

Elves

To the far-ranging elves, the Shadowfell is yet another vista to explore. History teaches elves that ignorance is dangerous. Elven wisdom dictates that mysteries should be investigated and secrets plucked from hiding, in case the unknown conceals a perilous truth. The world of shadow contains countless such enigmas, as does the magic rooted in the Shadowfell.

Gloaming Hearts

In the depths of primeval forests and woodlands untouched by calloused hands are groves of mighty trees that shade the forest floor from almost all light. Under the canopy of these trees, the brightest day becomes mere twilight. Night is like the spaces among the stars, blacker than black.

In some of these locales, elven tales say, the Shadowfell touches the world. The cavelike environment is cool, despite rotting timber and leaves, giving off a chill even in the summer. Trees loom with a sinister aspect. Creatures that feed on decay, such as insects and spiders, take refuge among the trunks and branches. Apparitions of long-dead animals appear on the edge of firelight, and voices of the departed can be heard whispering in the still air. The magic of shadow and death is enhanced.

Despite the macabre nature of such surroundings, elves acknowledge these places as part of the natural order. Elves can see past the forbidding exterior to the eerie beauty of these dim realms. Some elves are attracted to the gloom and what it might hide. Over the centuries, more than one elven settlement has sprung up in or near a lightless wood. Among elves, these settlements are known as gloaming hearts.

Gloaming hearts are difficult to find. Most are found in the center of elven territories, so only friends of the elves have a chance to make their way to one. Legends about the forest that surrounds one, some of which elves create and spread, can keep even elven allies away. The truth works to do the same, since those who are familiar with gloaming hearts know that they can contain crossings to the Shadowfell. Gloaming hearts are also where surrounding elven communities send their dead, and undead creatures that are welcoming only to elves might dwell within.

Elves of the gloaming hearts deal with death and shadow, and they revere the Raven Queen and Sehanine. Although they are far from morbid, these elves are the keepers of the departed and the caretakers of the oldest elven lore. To perform their duties or to further delve into the unknown, numerous gloaming heart elves give a small piece of their soul "to the dark side of the moon" to learn shadow magic. Other elves who wish to explore shadow magic often travel to a gloaming heart to do so.

Elf clerics of the death domain, tending to the needs of the dead and the bereaved, are common in gloaming hearts. Perhaps more than other elves, such priests are lovers of life and foes of those who use shadow magic for the sake of evil. Elf illusionists, necromancers, and nethermancers hone their arts in gloaming hearts. Primal magic that evokes elf ancestors is also a customary practice among gloaming heart elves who have real power.

Dusk Elves

In the ancient war against Lolth and the drow—a conflict that divided kin and sundered age-old relationships—some elves could not bear to take sides. Among them were those who had once favored Lolth's overbold teachings and others who had loved Corellon best. All of these neutral parties renounced their alliances and were among the first elves to flee the Feywild for the world. Corellon and Lolth, as well as their loyalists, branded the abstainers as cowards and traitors. Sehanine instead protected these individualistic elves for cleaving to a personal code and following her ways. Dusk elves were born as Sehanine's chosen people.

In the intervening centuries since the great war, Corellon's wrath has cooled, and most elves are ignorant of the stance of their primeval kin against the dusk elves. Lolth and her followers have not forgotten, however, and neither have the dusk elves. They remain hidden and apart, in the shadow between legend and history.

Dusk elves live in hidden enclaves, which they protect fiercely. They are not like other elves. When an elf might be expected to be joyous, a dusk elf is staid, and when an elf might be expected to be rash, a dusk elf is cautious. Dusk elves call on Sehanine, the Raven Queen, and Melora, by tradition never lifting prayer or song to Corellon, who rejected them in his anger. Given to darker moods and emotions, dusk elves hate Lolth and the drow more fervently than their lighter-hearted kin do.

By turning from fey conventions to self-imposed exile and veneration of Sehanine, the dusk elves embraced a unique path. Although they grieve over their banishment in song and story, few desire to return to past glories. Instead, dusk elves seek power and favor in unusual places. Individual dusk elves are just as likely as other elves to go into the wider world, but dusk elves do so without revealing their true heritage until they have proven their worth in word and deed. On this path, they are more likely to utilize illusion, trickery, stealth, and shadow magic than any other elves.

Halflings

Halflings have never been renowned for their skill with magic, but much of that reputation is due to their low profile. Halflings like the fact that bigger folks consistently underestimate them, and they go to great lengths to keep their knowledge of magic a secret. Among the halflings, fewer secrets are better kept than mastery of the magic of the Shadowfell.

Halflings are no more likely to master shadow magic than any other race is. However, when a halfling does learn to command the power of shadow, it is typically not for the personal gain that others seek, but for the good of the tribe that is the center of halfling society. The leaders of halfling wagon and raft caravans have learned that the best way to deal with a threat is sometimes to simply step around it.

A halfling clan that is ambushed by brigands or that stumbles into a war zone can seek sanctuary in the Shadowfell, slipping across the planar boundaries to bypass the conflict. Such forays into shadow carry their own risks, which is why halflings learn to recognize the ebb and flow of shadow's power. Only by the precise plotting of a safe course can the safety of the clan be assured.

The Bleak Paths

The desolate stretches of road and river where the Shadowfell bleeds over into the world, known as the Bleak Paths, allow travel to and from that dark realm. The power of shadow and death invariably infuses such locations, which are the sites of terrible crimes, large-scale tragedies, or powerful rituals that channel shadow magic.

Most of those who travel the Bleak Paths do so by performing the rituals needed to access them. In some cases, however, a traveler can stumble into the Shadowfell along such a road without warning. Such sudden disappearances might coincide with the manifestation of undead or shadow monsters in an area, and could depend on the nature of the event that created the Bleak Path.

One of the most infamous Bleak Paths lies within the Nentir Vale, on an overgrown track that crosses the Gray Downs. In ages past, a hill clan war chief walking in the company of his bride was set upon by the chief's brother, eager to seize control of the tribe. In a deadly ambush, the chief and his beloved were cut down by a hail of arrows as they walked hand in hand along the path.

To this day, travelers that follow this ancient track are cautioned to never make physical contact with their companions as they walk. Legends tell of how those who do so near the location of the ambush are pulled into the Shadowfell as they inadvertently mimic the doomed couple's last steps.

The Phantom Blades strike without warning, then vanish into the darkness

"It is not for personal gain that we dabble in darkness. Rather, it is to protect our people and what is rightfully ours."

—Callie Darkdagger of the Phantom Blades

The spiritual imprint that death makes on an area is the key to accessing a Bleak Path. As such, the halflings' mastery of lore and secrets allows their scouts and clan leaders to accumulate untold numbers of such keys. This information, along with maps showing the locations of Bleak Paths across the lands in which halflings travel, is greatly treasured by the clans that possess it.

The lore of the Bleak Paths is concealed within otherwise mundane-looking maps. Vanishing ink made visible only by the light of a full moon, secret symbols woven into a map's decorative borders, and codes carefully worked into place names and histories protect this precious secret.

The Phantom Blades

The Phantom Blades are a cabal of halfling shadow magic-wielders who patrol the waterways and paths on which their people wander. They keep the Bleak Paths secret, hunting down members of other races who steal and misuse the lore of such sites.

By using their own knowledge of the Bleak Paths, the Phantom Blades specialize in setting up ambushes for their enemies. More than one kobold or goblin war party in stealthy pursuit of a halfling clan has been suddenly assaulted by halfling warriors who appear from nowhere as they step from the Shadowfell into the world.

Their fanatic dedication to defending their people sometimes causes the Phantom Blades to cross the line between protection and aggression. A human trader who overcharges only halflings for his goods might be targeted for vengeance. Likewise, the Phantom Blades have been known to resort to banditry on the Bleak Paths to settle old grudges with other folk. Such grudges can trace their roots to injustices visited on the halflings in the distant past. However, for some Phantom Blades, such slights are an excuse to raid, pillage, and murder in the present day.

Humans

No border is too daunting for bold humans, no unexplored land too distant. Passion and ambition, of both light and dark varieties, push humans into new places, sometimes against their better judgment. A willingness to take great risks for a number of reasons leads humans across boundaries that others might hesitate to cross. Shadow magic is far from uncommon among humans, who put such power to any number of purposes.

First in Shadow

History and the events of the present show humans to be impulsive and daring. They are also short-lived compared to many other races. Concern over their mortality can make humans try harder to give their existence meaning or to extend their lives. All these factors have guided humans of the past toward exploring and living in the Shadowfell, as well as tapping shadow for eldritch power.

Long ago, a tribal nation of humans in the world feared death above all else. They saw how Nerull, who was god of death then, abused the souls of the dead. None living could tell where the soul went after death if it passed out of creation, which most souls did. The existing gods were too demanding, and devils too depraved, to be trusted in the arena of possible immortality. When the Raven Queen claimed Nerull's throne over his broken body, these humans sought to deal with death herself. The Raven Queen granted them vigor and longevity for their fealty, and bade them move into the Shadowfell. They became the shadar-kai, able to do as they wish as long as they serve the Raven Queen.

It is said that even before they became a unique race, these precursors of the shadar-kai founded the oldest part of the settlement now known as Gloomwrought. This first section was a black hall in which followers of Nerull still lurked. The early shadar-kai sent these foul cultists to the grave and claimed Gloomwrought for themselves. Like a living creature, the city responded and grew to accommodate its new inhabitants. And so it still does, having passed over the years from the shadar-kai back into human dominance—unless its mysterious caretakers, the keepers, are its true masters.

Since ancient days, humans have rightly seen the Shadowfell as a place where powerful and secret places, people, and items are lost or imprisoned. Orcus cast the entire city of Moil into the Plane of Shadow, where it still exists and holds its mysteries and treasures. Nameless forces drag those who have committed heinous crimes into mist-shrouded private hells, known as domains of dread, in the Shadowfell. The influence of those in such realms can reach beyond their prisons, and similarly, the marks that mighty beings leave behind linger in the dim realm as vestiges that can be called upon for power.

Humans have ever found reasons to go to the Shadowfell and deal with beings there. These motivations are as diverse as the supernatural gifts that can be gained through such exploration.

Dark Teachings

Other races label humans as curious and ambitious, with both reasonability and some measure of disdain. Humans' curiosity is rooted in the adage that knowledge leads to power. Humans have a reputation for seeking knowledge, too often and too fervently, with little heed to the consequences. That tendency, however chancy, means that humans accumulate information and create institutions to disseminate that information for a price.

The Tenebrous Cabal, based in Gloomwrought, is such an organization. Most people agree that a human or a group of humans founded the cabal to study shadow and the eerie powers that can be had from that learning. Rumor and innuendo surround the actual names of those founding few, including Evard, Maikedhon, Gorm the Hidden, and even Acererak. Gaining admittance to the cabal involves undertaking a perilous task for its benefit. A few, however, get in by means of relationships with current members or the influence of a patron. The cabal has a reputation for apolitical behavior and little concern for moral judgments. It is a ruthless meritocracy in which the capable climb to the top over defeated rivals.

The White Lotus Academy, which the human wizard Daniorra helped establish before Nerath's fall, has a staunchly academic stance toward arcane magic and the study of the shadow arts. Known for admitting students based on talent and tuition, the school also has a reputation that is far less sinister than that of the Tenebrous Cabal. The instructors discourage full devotion to shadow magic due to the strain that such concentration puts on a student's soul. However, more than one academy scholar has crossed that line without censure. Policies forbid the use of black magic in the academy, but the administration remains hands-off as long as shadow practitioners remain within reasonable moral bounds. In fact, Marovic, the current headmaster of the school, is an illusionist who learned from a master in the Shadowfell. Marovic refuses to speak further about his teacher.

Shadow Options

THE POWER of shadow magic is available to anyone willing to pay its price. A wizard skilled in arcane magic, a devout cleric schooled in the deepest mysteries of the divine, or a valiant fighter who has seen a hundred battlefields—all these worthies can turn their eyes to the power of shadow and accept its gifts. The strange currents of shadow magic flow even stronger for those mortals who yearn to control it, as if the darkness can sense their hunger.

This chapter provides a number of options for characters of any class or race.

Paragon Paths: The world of shadow conceals a multitude of secrets. The paragon paths presented here allow characters to delve into shadow magic's mysteries.

Epic Destinies: Some characters are born with their destinies intrinsically tied to the power of shadow. Others are chosen by the shadow or its masters—most notably the Raven Queen—to undertake epic deeds in the name of darkness.

Feats: Whether your character is interested in dabbling in shadow magic, has ties to the Shadowfell, or wishes to make use of feats of stealth and subterfuge, this section offers plenty of options.

Magic Items: Artisans have learned to distill shadow magic into physical forms, creating powerful weapons, armor, and relics that channel the power of darkness.

"Contrary to my peer's position regarding shadow magic, I still believe it is possible to access the power in darkness without contaminating the soul or at least without succumbing to the evil that such magic invites. There are many paths to shadow, some darker than others. It is your choice whether you use shadow to work evil or to rise above the temptation and turn darkness against itself."

—Mordenkainen, Dark Reflections

Paths of Shadow

The paragon paths presented in this chapter are sets of specialized abilities that you gain in place of your class's built-in paragon path (if it has one). Each path has some connection to shadow magic, representing special training or ties to the Shadowfell. In either case, a paragon path allows you to alter your character in fundamental ways.

A paragon path includes features and powers assigned to certain character levels. If you choose a path, you gain the benefits noted for each specific level.

Your Character's Path

A paragon path represents an important commitment on the part of your character. It provides abilities and powers that remain with you throughout the paragon and epic tiers. In addition, many paragon paths are linked to an organization or an ethos—often the one that first helped to create the path, and through which your character will learn to master the abilities granted by the path.

Consider how your character interacts with his or her paragon path. Does a paragon path have a connection to an order that your character has long sought to join? Does a path connect to your character's background or history in some way? Has your character been in previous contact with other members of the path's order or guild? Establishing these sorts of connections between a paragon path, your character's life, and the campaign as a whole can help make that path more than just a collection of bonuses and abilities.

Choosing a Paragon Path

From a mechanical perspective, consider the following points when you choose a paragon path for your character.

Prerequisite: You must meet any prerequisites noted for a paragon path. These can include belonging to a specific class or race, having training in a specific skill, or having access to a specific power source or ability. If your character does not meet the prerequisites for a paragon path, you cannot select that path.

JIM NELSON

Halfling shadowthief

Attacks and Powers: When you are considering a paragon path, pay attention to the powers it offers. Do attack powers require a weapon or an implement? Which attributes modify a power's attack rolls and damage rolls? Even though you qualify for a paragon path, you might find that your character is not a good fit for the path's powers.

Synergy: When looking at a paragon path, consider how its powers and features mesh with your character's personality and approach to play. Sometimes, working against the norm can make for a memorable, unique character. A wizard who loves being at the center of a fight might be better off considering a combat-focused paragon path than a path built for more traditional wizard characters. Some fighters can make good use of a stealth-oriented paragon path. For others, a knack for hiding would hinder their ability to stay in the thick of combat.

Taking a Paragon Path

Applying a paragon path to your character is easy, and depends on what type of class your character is.

Some classes already include a built-in paragon path in their advancement, as noted in the class's paragon tier table. Your class's paragon path entry includes a list of powers and features provided by the path. If you choose a different paragon path, you do not gain those class features and benefits. Instead, you receive the features and benefits of your chosen path.

If your class does not already include a built-in paragon path, you can take any paragon path of your choice. If the class includes no mention of a paragon path, then it falls into this category. You gain the benefits and features of your chosen paragon path in addition to your class's features as you gain levels.

Shadows of Destiny

Everyone's destiny is different. Although your fate is probably tied closely to the fortunes of your companions, you and your path are unique. To embrace shadow magic is to cleave closely to the bonds of fate and death. The Shadowfell is home to those aspects of the cosmos, as well as to the god who embodies them, the Raven Queen. Your future is shaped by your choices, as well as the choices others make about you. You have chosen your course until now, and perhaps you still might, but greater forces could call you into eternal service in ways you could not have imagined as a lesser mortal.

This chapter provides epic destinies that are alternatives to epic destinies appearing in other Dungeons & Dragons supplements. Each one is a thematic way to cap your career as an adventurer, whether you've used shadow magic or an entity of shadow has chosen you as its champion. If you choose one of the epic destinies here, you gain that destiny's features and powers in place of any other possibilities. Choose well.

"We nearly lost ourselves in the dark time as slaves to the fomorians, but we never lost hope. We needed an edge, and we found it in magic."

—Pog, gnome hero

RAVEN MIMURA

Paragon Paths

The following paragon paths are available to any character who meets the prerequisites.

Battleweaver

Prerequisite: Any arcane class, at least two illusion at-will or encounter powers

You have adapted your arcane talents to control the field of battle. Your tradition originated with gnomes of the Feydark, who escaped their fomorian masters by mastering shadow magic to make their innate talent for illusions even more potent. Like those gnomes, you are an illusionist at heart, building your tactics on deception and misdirection. The shadowstuff you infuse into your spells makes those illusions a tangible part of the battlefield.

Level 11: Hindering Illusion

When you enter an opponent's mind to craft your illusions, you hinder the foe's ability to engage with the terrain around it.

Benefit: Whenever you hit a creature with an at-will illusion attack power, the creature is slowed until the end of your next turn.

Level 11: Weaver's Action

When you push yourself in battle, you bind strands of shadowstuff into your illusions, shackling the minds of your foes and taking advantage of their confusion.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to use an illusion attack power, you have combat advantage against each target of the power. In addition, for each target you hit with the power, you can shift up to 2 squares as a free action.

Level 11: Battleweave

Your signature illusion warps the battlefield around your opponents. As they struggle to navigate the illusory terrain you lay down around them, you and your allies can take advantage of their distraction.

Benefit: You gain the battleweave power.

Battleweave — Battleweaver Attack 11

Shadow unfurls from your hands to surround your foes, setting up a haze of swirling darkness that leaves them at your mercy.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Illusion, Implement, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 10 squares
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Intelligence or Charisma vs. Will
Hit: 2d6+ Intelligence or Charisma modifier psychic damage, and the target is slowed and grants combat advantage until the end of your next turn.

Level 12: Illusory Shelter

Just as you learn to warp the battlefield to hinder your foes, you can protect your allies with the same magic, manipulating strands of light and shadow into an impenetrable protective weave.

Benefit: You gain the illusory shelter power.

Illusory Shelter — Battleweaver Utility 12

You call forth the illusion of a bunker, a wall, or some other concealing structure to shield you and your allies from enemy eyes.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Illusion, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 1 within 10 squares
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. Your allies gain partial concealment while in the zone. In addition, you can place the following illusions anywhere in the zone: 2 squares of difficult terrain that allies can ignore, and one wall 3 of blocking terrain.
Sustain Minor: The zone persists until the end of your next turn.

Level 16: Pierce Illusion

Your mastery of illusions is second to none, and your powerful images undermine the minds of your foes.

Benefit: Any enemy takes a –2 penalty to its first saving throw against the effects of your illusion powers.

Level 20: Reshape Battlefield

As you reach the pinnacle of the battleweaver's art, you master a powerful illusion that can transform the battlefield to your liking.

Benefit: You gain the reshape battlefield power.

Reshape Battlefield — Battleweaver Attack 20

You call forth shadowstuff to take the form of piles of rubble, rampart walls, obscuring mist, and deadly spikes to hinder your foes.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Illusion, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Area burst 3 within 10 squares
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Intelligence or Charisma vs. Will
Hit: 3d6 + Intelligence or Charisma psychic damage.
Effect: You can distribute the following shadow terrain throughout the area of the burst.

- ✦ 5 squares of difficult terrain that allies can ignore.
- ✦ Two walls 3 of blocking terrain.
- ✦ 2 heavily obscured squares.
- ✦ 2 squares of caltrops. Any enemy that enters a caltrops square or ends its turn there takes damage equal to your Intelligence or Charisma modifier.

Once distributed, the shadow terrain is stationary and cannot be moved. The shadow terrain lasts until the end of the encounter or until you end this effect as a minor action.

Dark Watcher

Prerequisite: Good or lawful good alignment

The ancient order of the dark watchers was founded by arcanists who mastered the power of shadow, then matched that power with a righteous understanding of the light of life and the Astral Sea. As a dark watcher, you are a vigilant guardian of the light of life and the natural world. The power taught to you by the order grants you unmatched defensive prowess, allowing you to protect yourself and your allies from the forces of darkness. Only by embracing the shadow can its corruption be turned to light—or so you believe.

Level 11: Righteous Vigilance

When you take advantage of a foe caught off guard, you can strike to sap its strength rather than wound its flesh.

Benefit: When you hit an enemy with an opportunity attack that deals damage, you can choose to deal no damage with the attack. Instead, the enemy is weakened until the end of your next turn.

Level 11: Righteous Beacon

When the forces of darkness must be held at bay, you become a beacon of righteousness whose light gives strength to your allies.

Benefit: Whenever you spend an action point, you can choose to project bright light out to 5 squares until the end of your next turn. While in this light, allies gain a +4 bonus to all defenses and do not provoke opportunity attacks.

Level 11: Call for Vigilance

As an opponent of all that is dark, you weave unseen power around your allies to protect them even when you cannot.

Benefit: You gain the call for vigilance power.

Call for Vigilance — Dark Watcher Attack 11

An intangible field of protection unfurls around you, keeping a vigilant watch on your allies and blinding those who dare attack them.

Encounter ✦ Shadow
Immediate Reaction Close burst 5
Trigger: An enemy within 5 squares of you attacks one or more of your allies.
Target: The triggering enemy in the burst
Effect: The target is blinded until the end of its next turn.

Level 12: Constant Vigilance

The connection you forge with your allies makes you aware when one of them falls in combat. In the blink of an eye, you slip through the realm of shadow, bypassing any foe or obstruction to come to that ally's aid.

Benefit: You gain the constant vigilance power.

Constant Vigilance — Dark Watcher Utility 12

You appear at the side of a dying ally to grant the power of healing.

Daily ✦ Healing, Shadow, Teleportation
Immediate Reaction Close burst 10
Trigger: An ally within 10 squares of you drops to 0 hit points or fewer.
Target: The triggering ally in the burst
Effect: You teleport adjacent to the target, and the target can spend a healing surge.

Level 16: Never Surrender to Darkness

Having touched the Shadowfell, you have learned to resist the inexorable pull of the plane of the dead. This power makes your presence an inspiration to your allies whenever they fight for life.

Benefit: You die after failing four death saving throws, instead of three. While within 10 squares of you, allies gain a +2 bonus to death saving throws.

Level 20: Righteous Disruption

Your mastery of the magic of light and shadow lets you tap into and unravel the life force of your foes. Your allies can quickly gain the advantage over a creature torn apart by your wrath.

Benefit: You gain the righteous disruption power.

Righteous Disruption — Dark Watcher Attack 20

A ray of scintillating light and shadow strikes your foe, disrupting its life force and leaving it at your allies' mercy.

Daily ✦ Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Effect: Your allies gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls and a +5 power bonus to damage rolls against the target. In addition, the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls. These effects last until the end of the encounter.

Disciple of Razaundra

Prerequisite: Warlock, gloom pact

You have made your warlock's pact with the shadow demon Razaundra, a creature of unmatched anger and rage. Once a powerful demon in service to Lolth, Razaundra forges pacts with ambitious warlocks, teaching them to control and channel their anger. In the hands of her disciples, rage becomes a force as deadly as any magic, and Razaundra's shadow warlocks can lace their curses with pure fury. You have learned to channel and manipulate the power of rage.

Level 11: Curse of Crimson Darkness

Like all disciples of Razaundra, you were chosen for your bloodlust, then taught how to control this rage. As battle escalates around you, you are filled with a roiling red darkness that you can direct at your foes.

Benefit: When you hit with an encounter or daily warlock attack power or disciple of Razaundra attack power, you gain a +2 bonus to the damage roll. This bonus increases to +4 if you are bloodied.

Level 11: Maelstrom of Rage

You usually direct your rage at a single enemy, but when your fury peaks, no one is safe. Your anger becomes a storm of shadows that flares out beyond your chosen foe.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to make an attack, one enemy within 5 squares of one target of that attack takes cold and necrotic damage equal to 5 + your Charisma modifier.

Level 11: Razaundra's Lash

Razaundra advocates controlled anger, but her own rage toward Lolth shows that not all anger can be contained. Inspired by her fury, you mimic the dread lash she wields to spread agony among your foes.

Benefit: You gain the Razaundra's lash power.

Razaundra's Lash Disciple of Razaundra Attack 11

A red lash appears in your hand, laying into your foes and leaving them in anguish.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 5
Target: One or two enemies
Attack: Charisma vs. Will
Hit: 1d10 + Charisma modifier damage, and the target is weakened until the end of your next turn. You gain a +5 bonus to the damage roll if you are bloodied.

Level 12: Cascade of Fury

Waves of anger flow from you like heat roiling above the desert sands. You release this rage in a pulse of power that leaves your foes reeling.

Benefit: You gain the cascade of fury power.

Cascade of Fury Disciple of Razaundra Utility 12

When you release your fury, Razaundra's wrath distracts your foes to leave them at your mercy.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the end of your turn, all enemies grant combat advantage to you.

Level 16: Redirected Anger

You are not content with concentrating on and slaying only a single foe. When you destroy an enemy, you redirect the passion and rage that went into that kill, slamming another enemy with the force of your fury.

Benefit: Once per encounter, when you reduce an enemy to 0 hit points on your turn, you can use a warlock at-will attack power as a minor action before the end of your turn. You can use the power as a free action if you are bloodied.

Level 20: Open the Dark Floodgates

You have achieved such mastery over your rage that you can unleash it as a force unto itself, feeling it tear free from you with violence all its own. When you surrender yourself to the darkness in this way, you channel a power that few can withstand.

Benefit: You gain the open the dark floodgates power.

Open the Dark Floodgates Disciple of Razaundra Attack 20

The rage that wells up inside you is a dark storm whose force is felt by you and your foe alike.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Charisma vs. Will
Hit: 2d8 + Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is stunned (save ends). You are dazed until the end of your next turn.
Aftereffect: The target is dazed (save ends). While the target is dazed by this aftereffect, your attacks must include the nearest enemy that you can see. In addition, you gain a +2 power bonus to attack rolls and a +5 power bonus to damage rolls.
Miss: Half damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).

Dusk Oracle

Prerequisite: Training in Insight and Religion

The spirits of the dead hold the accumulated lore of all creatures that once lived. Through the art of the dusk oracle, you have learned to call forth the ephemeral shades of the dead to answer questions and help you battle your foes. Whether you are a character capable of tapping into these endless memories or an empathic mortal called upon by the gods, your search for knowledge is guided by the whispers of the dead.

Level 11: Oracle's Insight

You question the deceased, gaining insight into their memories. Faint spirits whisper directions and instructions to guide you toward your goals.

Benefit: You can ask the corpse of any intelligent creature a single question and receive an answer. The corpse knows what the creature knew in life and what has occurred near the area where its body fell. The corpse answers truthfully, though sometimes cryptically.

Level 11: Predicted Action

As you push yourself to the limit, you call on the spirits of the dead to correct your aim or to point out weaknesses in your opponent's defenses. At times, you can share these insights with an ally.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to make an attack, the attack is against the lowest of each target's Fortitude, Reflex, or Will. If you spend an action point to take an action that grants an attack to an ally, you can apply this benefit to the ally instead of to yourself.

Level 11: Foreseen Hit

In the heat of combat, you listen to the shades surrounding you and use their expertise to your advantage.

Benefit: You gain the foreseen hit power.

Foreseen Hit — Dusk Oracle Attack 11

The unseen dead point out the gaps in your opponent's defenses, even as they suffuse your attack with the dark energy of the Shadowfell.

Encounter ✦ Cold, Necrotic, Shadow
No Action — Personal
Trigger: You make a basic attack or use an at-will attack power against an enemy.
Effect: The triggering attack targets the lowest of the enemy's Fortitude, Reflex, or Will. On a hit, the attack deals extra necrotic and cold damage equal to 3 + your Wisdom or Charisma modifier, and the target is slowed until the end of your next turn.

Level 12: Predicted Outcome

You augment your own knowledge by drawing on the shadowy memories of the dead, seeking ancient wisdom and insight to guide your actions.

Benefit: You gain the predicted outcome power.

Predicted Outcome — Dusk Oracle Utility 12

Sifting through the whispering voices of the spirits that surround you, you find one with expertise in the task at hand.

Daily ✦ Shadow
Minor Action — Personal
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, you gain a power bonus to skill checks with one chosen skill. The bonus is equal to your Wisdom or Charisma modifier.
Sustain Minor: The effect persists until the end of your next turn.
Sustain Standard: The effect persists until the end of your next turn, and you can choose a new skill.

Level 16: Oracular Insight

When your opponent's guard is down, the whispering spirits you summon allow you to bypass the enemy's defenses with expert accuracy.

Benefit: While you have combat advantage against an enemy, any resistance it has against your attacks is reduced by 10.

Level 20: Foreseen Battle

Having earned the trust and respect of your spirit guides, you can call upon them to fight at your side.

Benefit: You gain the foreseen battle power.

Foreseen Battle — Dusk Oracle Attack 20

A torrent of shadow pierces your opponent to the soul, feeding you insight that you use to guide your allies.

Daily ✦ Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action — Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Wisdom or Charisma vs. Fortitude, Reflex, Will. You make one attack roll. If it hits at least one of the three defenses, the attack hits.
Hit: 3d10 + Wisdom or Charisma modifier necrotic damage. If you hit at least two defenses, the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls (save ends). If you hit all three defenses, the target is also weakened (save ends all).
Miss: Half damage.

Nocturnal

Prerequisite: Any primal class

Your innate connection to shadow, night, and the freedom you find within the darkness led you to the nocturnal path. By embracing this connection, you begin to wield the power shared by the shadowy predators that preceded you. You can step between this world and the world of shadow, summoning the aid of your nocturnal packmates from that shadow in times of need.

Level 11: Nightstrider

As a nocturnal predator, you stride in and out of the Shadowfell at will. When you launch yourself at an enemy, the barriers thrown up by the material world are of no concern.

Benefit: When you charge a creature that you can see, you are phasing during the charge's movement.

Level 11: Nocturnal Frenzy

In the thick of battle, blood calls to blood. When you push yourself to the limit, each successful strike unleashes greater fury.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to use an at-will attack power that hits at least one target, you can then charge as a free action.

Level 11: Savor the Black Blood

You are a creature of the hunt, drawing strength from the fear of your prey as you stalk it. When the moment comes to strike, your dark bloodlust revitalizes you as you lay into your foe.

Benefit: You gain the savor the black blood power.

Savor the Black Blood — Nocturnal Attack 11

You drive into your foe with a brutal attack, replenishing your strength as you drink deep of its life force.

Encounter ✦ Primal, Shadow
No Action Melee 1
Trigger: You hit an adjacent creature with a melee attack.
Target: The creature you hit
Effect: The target takes 10 extra damage, and you gain 10 temporary hit points.

Level 12: Summon the Shadow Pack

As your status in the shadow pack rises, you are able to summon others of your kind to your aid. Your call brings forth giant birds of prey, great cats, and other predators whose shadowy forms shift and flow around you.

Benefit: You gain the summon the shadow pack power.

Summon the Shadow Pack — Nocturnal Utility 12

A feral howl heralds the arrival of your packmates, who slip around your foes to aid you and your allies.

Daily ✦ Conjuration, Primal, Shadow
Minor Action Ranged 10
Effect: You conjure up to five shadow pack members in unoccupied squares within range that are adjacent to one or more enemies. The pack members last until the end of your next turn. Pack members can flank with you and your allies. As a move action, you can move any or all pack members up to 6 squares each.
Sustain Minor: The pack members persist until the end of your next turn.

Level 16: Hunter of Two Worlds

As a nocturnal, you are a member of a pack that exists in two worlds at once. Through careful focus, you can slip the bonds of space to embrace your shadow nature, letting you move unhindered for a time.

Benefit: When you use a move action in place of a standard action, you can lose a healing surge, causing yourself to be phasing during that move action.

Level 20: Tainted Predator

You are a master hunter among the creatures of your pack, and you can channel the dark life force of the deadliest predators.

Benefit: You gain the tainted predator power.

Tainted Predator — Nocturnal Attack 20

You call forth the black blood of the hunting beasts that are your kin, seeding your attacks with their deadly power.

Daily ✦ Necrotic, Poison, Primal, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Until the end of the encounter, your melee attacks that hit also deal ongoing 5 necrotic and poison damage (save ends). On a critical hit, this increases to ongoing 10 necrotic and poison damage (save ends).

Ravenkin

Prerequisite: Any arcane class, training in Religion

From time to time, the Raven Queen's gaze lingers on a mortal soul whose courage and devotion sparks her cold heart. To these mortals she sends a special boon—a raven-shaped shadow whose appearance is a sign of her favor.

Those who gain this blessing are known as ravenkin, and from that point on they are never truly alone. The shadow raven that keeps them company is a physical connection to the god of death. Devout worshipers of the Raven Queen are the most common ravenkin. However, some ravenkin are recent converts to her faith, unsure of what they have done to warrant such a gift.

Since the blessing that marked you as a ravenkin, you have been aware that you are watched by the Raven Queen. Some might grow uneasy under such scrutiny, but you embrace it, knowing that you have a special place in the god's plans.

Level 11: Shadow Raven Familiar

The raven that has come to you is a herald of the Raven Queen's favor and an omen of the destiny that opens before you. Its unreadable eyes watch you, giving the impression that it serves another even though it always does your bidding.

Benefit: You gain a shadow raven familiar.

| Shadow Raven | Familiar |
|---|---|
| A small shadow takes the form of an inky black raven with glowing red eyes. | |
| Senses darkvision | |
| Speed 2, fly 6 (hover) | |
| Constant Benefits | |
| You gain a +2 bonus to Perception checks. | |
| You gain a +4 bonus to all defenses during a surprise round. | |
| Active Benefits | |
| Under Raven's Wing: Once per encounter as a minor action, you and your allies adjacent to the shadow raven gain partial concealment until the end of your next turn. | |

Level 11: Sight of the Raven

As long as your shadow raven is perched on your shoulder, darkness can hold no secrets from you.

Benefit: While your shadow raven familiar is in passive mode, you have darkvision.

Level 11: Murderous Action

Melding your soul with the shadow raven, you learn to project your attacks through it. When you push yourself, your magic unfurls as a haze of shadow that lashes out at your unsuspecting foes.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to use an arcane attack power and your shadow raven

YOUR FAMILIAR

Your shadow raven familiar is a spirit that accompanies you as your friend and ally. It doesn't need to eat or breathe.

Modes: A familiar has two modes, active and passive. You can switch your familiar between these modes as a minor action. When your familiar is in active mode, you can gain the active benefit described in its stat block.

In passive mode, your familiar shares your space, perched on your shoulder or tucked inside your clothing, and it can't be targeted or damaged by any effect. If your familiar is not in your space when you switch it to passive mode, it appears in your space.

In active mode, your familiar takes up the space of a Tiny creature. The familiar is immune to your attacks in this mode, although you can ignore this benefit. An active familiar can take actions—within its capabilities—but you must spend the relevant action for it to act. A familiar doesn't have its own set of actions.

Attributes: In addition to the characteristics given in its statistics block, these facts are also true about your familiar.

Attacks: It can't attack, and it can't flank.

Defenses: It uses your defenses.

Skills and Checks: It uses your modifiers for all skill checks and ability checks.

Hit Points and Dying: Your familiar has 1 hit point, but a missed attack never damages it. If your familiar drops to 0 hit points, it is destroyed. After your next short or extended rest, it reappears in passive mode in your space. If you die, your familiar dies with you. If you are restored to life, so is your familiar.

Communication: You and your familiar can speak to each other, but no one else understands what either of you is saying. The familiar can repeat what it hears in a language you know, but it can't understand other languages.

Movement and Range: You can move your familiar as a move action. The familiar has its own speed and movement modes, and it can't move more than 20 squares away from you. If it tries to do so, it appears back in your space in passive mode.

familiar is in active mode, the attack can originate from the shadow raven's space.

Level 11: Winter's Raven

The shadow raven watches over you on behalf of the god of death and brings cold vengeance against those who would harm you.

Benefit: You gain the winter's raven power.

Winter's Raven — Ravenkin Attack 11

As an enemy aims at you, your raven unfurls as a shroud of bitter wind that deflects the attack.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Shadow
Immediate Interrupt Close burst 5
Trigger: An enemy within 5 squares of you targets you with a ranged attack.
Target: The triggering enemy in the burst
Attack: Wisdom or Charisma vs. Reflex
Hit: 2d8 + Wisdom or Charisma modifier cold damage.
Effect: If your shadow raven familiar is present, it appears adjacent to the target in active mode. The target takes a –2 penalty to attack rolls until the end of your next turn.

Level 12: Raven Harrier

Your shadow raven is no stranger to combat, and proves it by harassing your enemies to thwart their defenses.

Benefit: You gain the raven harrier power.

Raven Harrier — Ravenkin Utility 12

Your shadow raven flies shrieking into combat at your command, distracting a foe to grant you the advantage.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Requirement: Your shadow raven familiar must be in active mode.
Effect: One creature adjacent to your shadow raven familiar grants combat advantage until the end of your next turn.

Level 16: Bonded Raven

The rapport you share with your shadow raven connects both of you in spirit and thought.

Benefit: You can communicate telepathically with your shadow raven familiar out to a range of 10 squares. You must have line of effect to your familiar to communicate in this manner. Your familiar also gains a +2 bonus to all defenses.

WARREN MAHY

Level 20: An Unkindness of Ravens

You have served the Raven Queen well, and she rewards you in your time of need. From the cold heights of Letherna, a flock of shadow ravens is dispatched to fight at your side.

Benefit: You gain the power an unkindness of ravens.

An Unkindness of Ravens — Ravenkin Attack 20

Your shadow raven splinters into a dozen distinct shapes, attacking your enemies with deathly cold.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Cold, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Close burst 3 centered on you or your shadow raven
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Wisdom or Charisma vs. Reflex. If the target is bloodied or undead, you gain a +2 power bonus to the attack roll.
Hit: 2d8 + Wisdom or Charisma modifier cold and necrotic damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends).
Aftereffect: The target is slowed (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is slowed (save ends).

Shadow Dancer

Prerequisite: Any teleportation at-will or encounter power, training in Stealth

You embrace the darkness as a means of perfecting the teleportation ability that quickly becomes your trademark in combat. When you strike like living shadow, you leave your foes to wonder where you might appear next.

Level 11: Dancer's Ambush

Your mastery of teleportation is such that when you slip back from the space between, your enemies cannot hope to stand against you. Whether you leap from midair, lash out with your weapon as you pass, or appear in utter silence, your attack catches your foe wholly by surprise.

Benefit: Whenever you teleport during your turn, you gain combat advantage for the next attack roll you make before the end of your turn.

Level 11: Dancer's Action

When you push yourself beyond your normal limits, the shadow magic infusing your body and soul spins out from you in a web of darkness. Using the secret lore you have mastered, you move along those shadowy tendrils in the blink of an eye.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to make an attack, you can teleport up to 5 squares as a free action before or after the attack.

Level 11: Shadowy Tendrils

The magic you use to slip through shadow grants you a limited ability to control that darkness. By imbuing your own shadow with your mastery of teleportation, you send a foe on a dizzying journey that slips the bonds of space.

Benefit: You gain the shadowy tendrils power.

Shadowy Tendrils — Shadow Dancer Attack 11

As you teleport, a shadowy afterimage manifests as tendrils that reach out to your foes.

Encounter ✦ Shadow, Teleportation
Standard Action Personal

Effect: You teleport up to 5 squares, then make a basic attack. You teleport one target hit by the attack up to 3 squares, and it is dazed until the end of your next turn.

Level 12: Shadow Stalk

As you hone your ability to step through shadows, you are able to seize partial control of another creature's shadow, then to meld it with your own. While you and your enemy are bound in this way, it cannot hope to escape your wrath.

Benefit: You gain the shadow stalk power.

Shadow Stalk — Shadow Dancer Utility 12

You attune yourself to your foe's shadow, then step through it at a moment's notice.

Encounter ✦ Shadow, Teleportation
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: One creature in the burst

Effect: Until the end of your next turn, you can teleport to any square adjacent to the target as a move action. If you are already adjacent to the target, you can teleport up to 3 squares as a minor action.

Level 16: Lingering Shadows

When you hide from your enemies, shadow spins between you to more effectively shroud their sight.

Benefit: If you are hidden from a creature at the start of its turn, you are invisible to that creature until the end of its turn.

Level 20: Trail of Shadows

At the height of your power, the shadows around you flicker and shift like black fog. You call on the bitter power of the Shadowfell as you move, leaving behind a shroud of darkness to scour your foes.

Benefit: You gain the trail of shadows power.

Trail of Shadows — Shadow Dancer Attack 20

You streak through your foes as a blur of shadow, leaving a field of bitter darkness behind you that freezes your foes to the marrow.

Daily ✦ Cold, Shadow, Zone
Move Action Personal

Effect: You shift up to your speed. The squares you enter during this movement become a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter. Any enemy in the zone or adjacent to it when it is created takes 15 cold damage. The zone is totally obscured to your enemies. Any enemy that ends its turn in the zone or adjacent to it takes 10 cold damage, and that enemy is slowed (save ends).

Shadow Shaper

Prerequisite: Wizard, one or more illusion powers

Illusions trick the mind to evoke physical results. You have found that the interplay of shadow and illusion makes spectral images into true threats. You delight in tricking both the minds and bodies of your foes, constantly blurring the line between what is illusion and what is real.

Level 11: Mind and Body

When you first begin to master shadow shaping, you learn to create illusions that have a visceral and physical effect on your foes.

Benefit: Any illusion attack powers you use that target Will can target Fortitude instead.

Level 11: Nightmares Made Real

By exerting the full force of your illusion and shadow powers, you can bring a single illusion completely to life, dealing a deadly assault to your foe's psyche and body.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to use a 1st-level at-will illusion attack power against a single target, the attack deals maximum damage if it hits.

Level 11: Night Terror

Wizards can cast spells that prey on a target's fear. No one brings that fear fully to life better than you do.

Benefit: You gain the night terror power.

Night Terror — Shadow Shaper Attack 11

You draw forth a nightmare from your foe's mind that leaves it vulnerable, and which acts as a conduit for your power.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Fear, Illusion, Necrotic, Psychic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Effect: The target takes necrotic and psychic damage equal to your Intelligence modifier, and it is dazed until the end of your next turn. You can use the target's space as the origin for the next close or melee implement attack power you use before the end of your next turn.

Level 12: Never-Ending Nightmare

By infusing your illusions with shadowstuff, you can extend their duration—and their deadly effect on your foes.

Benefit: You gain the never-ending nightmare power.

Never-Ending Nightmare — Shadow Shaper Utility 12

By focusing on an illusion just about to fade, you imbue it with the power of shadow to ensure that your enemies' agony persists.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Illusion, Shadow
Minor Action Personal
Effect: Choose an illusion effect you created that would end at the end of your current turn. The effect instead lasts until the end of your next turn.

Level 16: Spectral Dominance

Your psychic presence is singularly powerful. Each assault you make against a creature's mind with your shadow illusions leaves that creature at your mercy.

Benefit: While an enemy is subject to the effect of any of your illusion attacks, you gain combat advantage against that enemy.

Level 20: Nightscape

Your mastery of shadow and illusion lets you draw forth the foulest nightmares from the minds of your foes. As you turn the battlefield into a horrid dreamscape, your enemies must overcome their own worst fears to survive.

Benefit: You gain the nightscape power.

Nightscape — Shadow Shaper Attack 20

Tendrils of shadow reach out to entwine your foes, shrouding them in the stuff of nightmares.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Illusion, Implement, Psychic, Shadow, Zone
Standard Action Area burst 2 within 20 squares
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Intelligence vs. Will
Hit: 3d8 + Intelligence modifier psychic damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is dazed until the end of your next turn.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter. The zone is difficult terrain for your enemies. You and your allies gain partial concealment while in the zone.

Shadowthief

Prerequisite: Any arcane class

You became a shadowthief when you fell victim to a curse that stole your own shadow away, replacing it with a dark hunger for the shadows of other creatures. You now use your arcane knowledge to seek and draw strength from those shadows, fueling the magic on which your dark power is built.

Level 11: Shadowcursed

Although the loss of your own shadow has left you craving the spiritual power bound into the shadows of other creatures, it has also granted you a measure of protection against shadow magic and the monsters that wield it.

Benefit: You gain a +2 bonus to all defenses against shadow attack powers and against the attacks of shadow creatures and undead.

Level 11: Shadow Feast

Your curse has left you with the need to feed on shadow. When you slay a foe, you claim its shadow, converting it into arcane energy that you use to boost your attacks and resilience.

Benefit: Whenever you reduce an enemy to 0 hit points with an arcane attack power, you gain one shadow. You can have multiple shadows, and they last until the end of the encounter.

As a free action, you can spend up to four of these shadows to gain a power bonus to your next attack roll, damage roll, or saving throw. This bonus is equal to 1 per shadow spent.

Level 11: Shadow Lance

As your ability to channel shadow grows, you devise new spells to capture the shadow essence of other creatures while they live.

Benefit: You gain the shadow lance power.

Shadow Lance — Shadowthief Attack 11

A potent spike of darkness lances out at your foe, sundering its life force for your own use.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Ranged 10
Target: One creature
Attack: Intelligence or Charisma vs. Fortitude
Hit: 2d10 + Intelligence or Charisma modifier necrotic damage.
Effect: You gain one shadow. If the attack hits, you instead gain two shadows. If the attack reduces the target to 0 hit points, you instead gain three shadows. These shadows are in addition to the ones you gain from your Shadow Feast path feature.

Level 11: Harvest of Shadows

When your craving for shadow becomes too strong, your curse can overpower you. When this hunger takes you, you absorb more than just the shadow of a fallen foe—you steal a portion of that enemy's soul.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to make an attack that allows you to use your Shadow Feast path feature, you gain two shadows when you use Shadow Feast instead of one shadow.

Level 12: Shadow Walk

You become able to weave together the shadows of creatures you have defeated and slip through them to elude your enemies.

Benefit: You gain the shadow walk power.

Shadow Walk — Shadowthief Utility 12

The shadows of the creatures you have slain unfurl across the battlefield, forming a path that only you can walk.

Encounter ✦ Arcane, Shadow, Teleportation
Move Action Personal
Requirement: You must have at least one shadow available to spend.
Effect: You spend at least one shadow and teleport up to 5 squares plus 2 squares per additional shadow spent.

Level 16: Decisive Darkness

Your hunger grants you complete control of your foes, allowing you to pull shadow from them as a precursor to their death at your hands.

Benefit: Whenever you bloody an enemy or score a critical hit against an enemy, you gain one shadow.

Level 20: Shadowcurse Cataclysm

You have achieved complete control over your curse, revealing your enemies' shadows as a vast web that links you all. While your foes struggle to free themselves from your control, you drain them of their shadow energy, empowering your magic to even greater heights.

Benefit: You gain the shadowcurse cataclysm power.

Shadowcurse Cataclysm — Shadowthief Attack 20

You raise your hands to the sky, calling down a storm of shadow against your foes.

Daily ✦ Arcane, Implement, Necrotic, Shadow
Standard Action Close burst 10
Target: One enemy in the burst; for every two shadows you spend, this power targets an additional enemy in the burst.
Attack: Intelligence or Charisma vs. Fortitude
Hit: 5d6 + Intelligence or Charisma modifier necrotic damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends).
Miss: Half damage, and the target is immobilized until the end of your next turn.

Veiled Master

Prerequisite: Training in Stealth and Perception

Veiled masters are drawn primarily from the ranks of martial artists who have learned to perceive the world around them with little or no light. In keeping with your veiled master training, you prefer to attack from hiding, either striking from existing shadow or wrapping yourself in the gloom you learn to create. The features of the veiled master path reward those of a stealthy disposition, including monks, rogues, rangers, and other lightly armored warriors.

Level 11: Close the Veil

Your connection to shadow lets you weave an invisible veil that swallows light sources at your whim.

Benefit: Once per round as a minor action, you can douse a nonmagical light source no larger than a small campfire within 10 squares of you. A light source you douse using this power cannot be lit again until the end of the encounter.

Level 11: Blindfold Action

When you push yourself in combat, the shadow power you channel unfurls as strands of darkness that bind your opponent's eyes.

Benefit: When you spend an action point to make a melee or close weapon attack, the first target you hit with that attack is also blinded until the end of your next turn.

Level 11: Veiled Strike

A dark maelstrom wraps you tight, obscuring all sight for your foes even as it leaves them open to your attacks.

Benefit: You gain the veiled strike power.

Veiled Strike — Veiled Master Attack 11

You imbue your weapon with the essence of shadow, unleashing it as an inky cloud that quickly surrounds you.

Encounter ✦ Shadow, Weapon, Zone
Standard Action Melee weapon
Target: One creature
Attack: Strength or Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 2[W] + Strength or Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: You create a zone in a close burst 2 that lasts until the end of your next turn. For all creatures except you, the zone blocks line of sight and is totally obscured.

Level 12: Veiled Eyes

The long hours you have spent training in conditions of total darkness have sharpened your senses. When you focus those senses, your foes cannot hope to hide from you.

Benefit: You gain the veiled eyes power.

Veiled Eyes — Veiled Master Utility 12

You close your eyes and expand your senses to engage foes that you could not otherwise perceive.

Encounter ✦ Shadow, Stance
Minor Action Personal
Effect: You assume the veiled eyes stance. Until the stance ends, you have blindsight 3 and immunity to gaze attacks. You cannot see any creature or object outside your blindsight's range. You can end the stance as a free action.

Level 16: Dark Strike

As your ability to fight without reliance on your eyes increases, not even the deepest darkness or the power of invisibility can protect a foe from your wrath.

Benefit: When you attack an enemy you cannot see, you take a –2 penalty to the attack roll instead of a –5 penalty.

Level 20: Maelstrom of Darkness

You have mastered the ebb and flow of shadow, allowing you to drape an ebon dawn around your enemies. This inky veil of darkness flares at your command, lashing out against all opponents caught within it and leaving a pool of shadow on the battlefield.

Benefit: You gain the maelstrom of darkness power.

Maelstrom of Darkness — Veiled Master Attack 20

With a sweep of your weapon, you call down the darkness of the Shadowfell to surround you and scour your foes.

Daily ✦ Shadow, Weapon, Zone
Standard Action Close burst 2
Target: Each enemy in the burst
Attack: Strength or Dexterity vs. AC
Hit: 3[W] + Strength or Dexterity modifier damage.
Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of your next turn. For all creatures except you, the zone blocks line of sight and is totally obscured.
Sustain Minor: The zone persists until the end of your next turn.

Epic Destinies

The following epic destinies are available to any character who wishes to follow a destiny influenced by shadow.

Guardian of the Void

You walk a path carefully balanced between life and death. You draw on the power of the Shadowfell to preserve death, as well as to prevent the annihilation of countless living things.

The Shadowfell is a realm of death, the one thing in the universe that unifies all mortal folk, from the lowliest beggar to the mightiest emperor. Even the gods are vulnerable to death's sting. During the Dawn War between the gods and the primordials, many deities fell in battle. Since that time, gods have died at the hands of demons and even mortals.

Some creatures seek to escape death's grasp. A wizard walks the dark path of lichdom to attain immortality. An alchemist brews a secret elixir that will extend his life by centuries. Such creatures only delay the inevitable. Others, however, take a more direct approach to avoiding their fate.

Scattered pieces of lore, some dating back to the time before the Dawn War, suggest that death is not an intrinsic part of the cosmic order. By performing a dark ritual known as the Echoing Void, creatures intent on immortality at any cost can overcome death—but only by sacrificing millions of sentient lives.

The signs of preparation for this ritual are unmistakable. For a creature that seeks to create devastation on such a massive scale, the options are few—perhaps smashing an astral dominion or annihilating an entire region of the world. Secrecy rather than overwhelming power is such a villain's primary tool, since the pursuit of the Echoing Void is bound to draw the wrath of heroes, gods, fiends, and primordials alike.

When the ritual of the Echoing Void is begun, the magic it gathers spawns an equal and opposite reaction. The cosmos anoints champions to oppose the ritual's master. These powerful heroes become the Guardians of the Void, dedicated to preventing the wholesale destruction of the established order of death and life.

Living the Destiny

As a Guardian of the Void, your destiny is tied to those who hope to unlock the power of the Echoing Void. Perhaps you crossed paths early, fighting a minor skirmish that later proved to be one of the first steps in beginning the ritual. A guardian has little knowledge of this destiny, assuming its mantle only when the ritual nears its final stages. You might find that a few disparate events come together to paint a terrifying pattern—one that you must disrupt.

A Guardian of the Void fights to prevent the Echoing Void's completion, to destroy all knowledge of the ritual, and to defeat those who would pursue the power it offers. By the time a guardian arises, the threat posed to the cosmos is both dire and imminent. You will face down the servants of the powerful creature that seeks to complete the Echoing Void, preparing for your final battle.

Level 21: Raven Guardian's Endurance

As the final guardian of the mystery of death, you can call on the power of life to sustain you on your quest. Your epic form is honed more sharply, even as you gain a measure of power against death.

Benefit: You increase one ability score of your choice by 2.

In addition, while you are bloodied, you have resist 15 necrotic and regeneration 5.

Level 24: Guardian's Recovery

Your fight to preserve the place of death in the cosmos allows you to resist death's cold hand when it reaches for you.

Benefit: You gain a +2 bonus to death saving throws. You increase this bonus by 1 for each other Guardian of the Void within 20 squares of you.

Level 26: Soul of Destiny

Those who fight alongside you share in your all-important task, gaining a measure of power against your fated foes.

Benefit: You gain the soul of destiny power.

Soul of Destiny — Guardian of the Void Utility 26

The energy of the Shadowfell threads through you and your allies, letting you share the power of your destiny.

Encounter ✦ Aura, Shadow
Minor Action Personal

Effect: You activate an aura 5 that lasts until the end of your next turn. While in the aura, you and each of your allies can use a minor action to lose a healing surge and gain temporary hit points equal to his or her healing surge value and a +4 power bonus to his or her next attack roll, skill check, or saving throw.

Level 30: Guardian of Death

Death is no longer a threat to you. As its champion, you gain the resilience to fight on against even the most overwhelming odds.

Benefit: Once per day when you would drop to 0 hit points or fewer, you instead regain all your hit points, can stand up as a free action, end all effects of your choice that are affecting you, and can teleport adjacent to any other Guardian of the Void as a free action.

Keeper of the Everflow

You draw on the power of the Spirit Wheel, fundamentally changing your physical and spiritual nature to adapt to any challenge you face.

A constant stream of spirits passes through the Shadowfell—part of a grand procession of life, death, and rebirth known to a few ascetics as the everflow. Those who believe in the everflow also believe that it was once intended to return souls back to the world for a new lease on life. According to legend, the dread god Nerull usurped the everflow by hoarding the spirits of the dead. His successor, the Raven Queen, only partly undid the damage done by the fallen god, cutting the everflow short and passing judgment on mortal souls as she sees fit.

The select few who have glimpsed this truth have chosen to correct the course of the everflow. To do this, the Keepers of the Everflow must find a mighty construct hidden deep in the darklands of the Shadowfell—the great Spirit Wheel, set in motion by the actions of the first Keepers. If they complete their work, the everflow will trickle away from the Raven Queen's domain as the procession of souls is redirected from the road to Letherna back into the world. The existence of the Keepers of the Everflow is an affront to the god of death, and she will stop at nothing until the faithful of this upstart order are all held in her wintry grasp.

Living the Destiny

As you achieve enlightenment, your actions attract the attention of beings that would rather face eternal destruction than abide a change in the everflow.

First and foremost among these opponents are the servants of the Raven Queen. Her legions of shadar-kai and sorrowsworn hunt you unceasingly, but their wrath is only a foreshadowing of the eventual confrontation between you and the god of death. When that final conflict comes, you will lead the Raven Queen back into the everflow—by force if necessary—so that she might be reborn and attain the enlightenment she has denied herself and all other creatures.

Level 21: Enlightened Rebirth

You have touched the enlightenment promised by the Spirit Wheel, letting you improve your innate abilities as the life force of all creatures flows through you.

Benefit: You increase one ability score of your choice by 2.

In addition, you can change your origin at the end of a short rest or an extended rest. You gain a benefit based on the origin you choose, even if that origin is your native origin.

Aberrant: You have psychic resistance equal to 5 + one-half your level. Any creature that hits or misses you with an attack that targets your Will takes psychic damage equal to your Intelligence, Wisdom, or Charisma modifier.

Elemental: You have resist 10 acid, resist 10 cold, resist 10 fire, and resist 10 lightning. Your attacks ignore any resistance to acid, cold, fire, or lightning damage.

Fey: You have a +1 bonus to Reflex and Will, and you are immune to charm effects.

Immortal: While you are bloodied, you have regeneration 5. Your at-will attacks that deal untyped damage can now deal radiant damage instead.

Natural: You have resist 5 to all damage and a +2 bonus to saving throws.

Shadow: You have resist 10 necrotic. Any creature that hits or misses you with an attack that targets your Will takes necrotic damage equal to your Intelligence, Wisdom, or Charisma modifier.

Level 24: Life Overflow

The enemies that stand between you and your quest are legion, but you are guided by the Spirit Wheel. Your connection with the everflow grows stronger each time you fall and rise again.

Benefit: Once per day when you start your turn at 0 hit points or fewer, you regain hit points equal to your bloodied value and end all effects of your choice that are affecting you. You can also change your origin, gaining a different benefit from your Enlightened Rebirth feature. You also gain 5 temporary hit points for every allied Keeper of the Everflow present in the encounter.

Level 26: Lore of the Wheel

Countless spirits are connected to each other through the Spirit Wheel. With a moment's concentration, you leave your flesh and let your soul roam the everflow, drenching yourself in the knowledge of all who came before you.

JIM NELSON

Benefit: You gain the lore of the wheel power.

Lore of the Wheel Keeper of the Everflow Utility 26

Black shadow fills your gaze for a moment, as your mind delves deep into the accumulated knowledge of all beings.

Encounter ✦ Shadow
Minor Action Close burst 5
Target: You or an allied Keeper of the Everflow in the burst
Effect: Until the end of your next turn, the target gains a +5 bonus to skill checks. The target can use any skill as if he or she had training in that skill.

Level 30: Turn the Wheel

At long last, you unlock the secrets of the Spirit Wheel, binding your opponents to the power of the everflow.

Benefit: When you hit an enemy with a daily attack power or when you score a critical hit against an enemy, that enemy can make only basic attacks until the end of your next turn.

When you reduce an enemy to 0 hit points, you can choose to have that enemy reincarnated in the world as a natural creature with no memory of its past life. You have no control over where and how the enemy reincarnates.

Marshal of Letherna

You are a principal commander in the armies of death, preserving the citadel's sanctity and supporting the Raven Queen's rule. Her servants and power are yours to command, and just as your foes fear death, they will learn to fear you.

Letherna lies deep in the Shadowfell, far beyond the reach of most mortals. This bastion of the Raven Queen is seen only by the spirits of the dead and by the privileged retainers and bodyguards of the god of death. Those loyal to the Raven Queen stand ready to defend her citadel's frost-covered walls from any threat.

Ages ago, when the Raven Queen struck down the dread god Nerull, the other deities crafted a pact that changed the nature of the gods' relationship with death. To prevent the recently ascended queen from hoarding the spirits of the dead as her own personal army, the pact stipulated that the Raven Queen would be the god of death but not god of the dead, serving as a custodian of the natural cycle of life and death. In return, the gods would allow the Raven Queen to enlist their own followers to aid her worshipers in the defense of her realm. This arrangement suited the Raven Queen, herself an ascended mortal, who preferred to deal with mortals more than with the uncaring powers of the Astral Sea.

That call of duty has sounded again. The armies of Letherna have need of commanders, and only the greatest heroes can be entrusted with the sanctity of the afterlife. With grim determination, the Marshals of Letherna pick up the Raven Queen's banner and stand fast in the defense of her bastion.

Living the Destiny

The Marshals of Letherna are given command over the upper echelons of the Raven Queen's entourage, facing down the threats to her power and to the cosmic balance she upholds. You will stand on the battlements of that great fortress, raining your deity's blessings down on the demons, godlings, and elemental forces that crash against Letherna's gates. When the time comes to finally put down the threats against the god of death, you will lead the strike force.

Of all the dangers to Letherna, none rank higher than Orcus, Demon Prince of Undeath. His ultimate goal is to sit on the Raven Queen's throne, subverting the natural order so that every creature that dies becomes undead. As you defend your dark mistress, a confrontation with Orcus seems all but inevitable.

Level 21: Sworn to Duty

Your mind and body are infused with the power of Letherna, steeling you with an unbreakable resolve.

Benefit: You increase one ability score of your choice by 2.

In addition, you are immune to charm effects and fear effects, and you gain a bonus to death saving throws equal to 2 + the number of allied Marshals of Letherna within 10 squares of you.

Level 24: Legions of Letherna

As battle rages, you can call the armies of Letherna to your side. Shadow creatures congregate near you to hamper the movements of your enemies and allow you to control the battlefield.

Benefit: While you are conscious, enemies treat squares within 2 squares of you as difficult terrain. You can end or resume this effect as a minor action.

Level 26: Clarion of Sorrow

The sorrow that is the heart of the Raven Queen's legacy is yours to command, letting you forge a link to the power of death.

Benefit: You gain the clarion of sorrow power.

Clarion of Sorrow Marshal of Letherna Utility 26

A great horn sounds, carrying with it a shroud of shadow that wraps your foes like raven wings.

Daily ✦ Shadow, Zone
Minor Action Area burst 3 within 20 squares

Effect: The burst creates a zone that lasts until the end of the encounter or until you dismiss it as a minor action. You and your allies gain a +5 power bonus to damage rolls on attacks against creatures in the zone. Bloodied creatures in the zone cannot regain hit points. Creatures reduced to 0 hit points while in the zone cannot be raised as undead.

Level 30: Defender of Life and Death

One of the Raven Queen's mysterious servants watches over you. This pale raven with deep blue eyes has the deity's permission to guide souls back to their bodies and overload them with divine vitality.

Benefit: Once per day when you drop to 0 hit points or fewer, a pale raven guides your soul back to your body. You regain hit points equal to your bloodied value, can stand up as a free action, and can use an at-will attack power as a free action.

Twilight Tribune

You take on a ghostly aspect to more expertly do battle with the wayward spirits that haunt the cosmos.

All mortals have a dark road ahead of them in the afterlife. When their spirits are released from the flesh they were born into, they venture into the Shadowfell to make their way to the cold slopes of Letherna—and to whatever final destination awaits beyond the halls of the Raven Queen. However, some souls linger in the mortal realm, unable or unwilling to take this fateful journey. Entities such as ghosts, specters, wraiths, and devourers are the most dangerous of these hesitant spirits, committing atrocities through malicious intent or mindless despair.

In response to this scourge, the greatest and wisest heroes of the world are called by fate and the Raven Queen to serve as the Twilight Tribunes. These selfless champions dedicate their lives to seeking out and destroying wayward incorporeal souls. By invoking their dread judgment, the Twilight Tribunes allow even the most tormented undead to leave their lives and pain behind. As they follow the path of their destiny, the Twilight Tribunes are drawn to ever more powerful creatures and challenges, working their way through the most fearsome creatures of shadow and undeath. Having dispensed with liches, dracoliches, and vampires, a tribune might be called on in the end to face off against beings of godlike power and the greatest lords of the undead.

Living the Destiny

During your time as a Twilight Tribune, you might begin hearing whispers of an unspeakable evil lumbering its way back into existence. Could a slain god rise as an undead? Could Orcus, Demon Prince of Undeath, animate the corpse of dread Nerull as his servant, thus gaining enough power to challenge the gods directly?

At the end of your journey, you might pass into the afterlife as all mortals do, or you might volunteer to stay behind as a ghostly judge—your unmatched wisdom continuing to guide mortal souls into the beyond. You might serve the Raven Queen as an advisor, or you might lead a covenant of tribunes that eventually replace her as the gods of fate and death.

Level 21: Twilight Insight

Your already legendary enlightenment reaches even greater heights as your destiny unfolds.

Benefit: You increase your Wisdom score by 2. In addition, you gain darkvision.

Level 24: Twilight Cloak

When you recover your strength on the battlefield, the power of the Shadowfell lets you take on a spectral appearance to foil your enemies' attacks.

Benefit: When you use your second wind or use the total defense action, you can become insubstantial until the end of your next turn.

Level 26: Tribune's Authority

As your duties and insight bring you closer to the veil of the afterlife, your voice and presence carry the weight of the Raven Queen's power. What you decree shall be your opponents' fate, and they are powerless to stop you.

Benefit: You gain the tribune's authority power.

Tribune's Authority Twilight Tribune Utility 26

Shadow unfurls around you as your body fades, and you are filled with the dread authority that is your destiny.

Daily ✦ Shadow, Stance
Minor Action Personal

Effect: You assume the tribune's authority stance. Until the stance ends, you are insubstantial and gain a fly speed equal to your speed. When a creature hits you or an allied Twilight Tribune within 10 squares of you with an attack while you are in this stance, you gain combat advantage against that creature until the end of your next turn.

Level 30: Tribune's Judgment

Your presence carries the full weight of the cycle of life and death. No creature, mortal or otherwise, can violate the sanctity of your judgment without facing your wrath.

Benefit: Whenever a nonminion enemy hits you with a melee attack, roll a d20. On a 10 or higher, the enemy takes damage equal to half the damage it dealt you with the attack.

In addition, creatures you reduce to 0 hit points can't be raised from the dead or animated as undead.

Shadow Feats

Most of the feats presented here are associated with shadow magic or the Shadowfell. Several feat categories provide a hint of shadow magic's power, allowing you to tap into that power in minor but useful ways. Others encompass specialized training that reflects a character's connection to the realm of shadow, or a focus on battling the monsters spawned there, particularly the undead.

Feat Categories

The feats in this section are organized into categories to make feat selection easier. Each feat is detailed following the category descriptions.

Ghostwise

Those who touch the Shadowfell occasionally develop the ability to see the spirit world and the unearthly things that dwell there. These so-called "ghostwise" learn to draw on their second sight to grant them a supernatural edge in combat.

| Ghostwise Feats |
|---|
| Ghost Eyes |
| Ghost Scorpion Strike |
| Spectral Step |

Implement Training

For those who wield magic, an implement provides a conduit for deadly power. The feats in this category allow you to improve your prowess with a holy symbol or a ki focus.

| Implement Training Feats |
|---|
| Holy Symbol Expertise |
| Ki Focus Expertise |

Lore of Moil

At great risk, you have sought out the ancient tomes and scrolls of Moil, the City That Waits. This doomed civilization swore allegiance to dread Orcus, Demon Prince of Undeath, then forsook him out of fear and remorse. The city's faith turned to Pelor, god of light and scourge of the undead. For this betrayal, Orcus flung the entire city into the Shadowfell, where it slumbers, devoid of all life. The secrets you have gathered hint at the terrible power once wielded by the city's inhabitants.

| Lore of Moil Feats |
|---|
| Executioner of Undeath |
| Legioncaller of Moil |
| Soulstealer of Moil |
| Tainted Wounds |

Revenant

Revenants have access to a number of feats based on the unique nature of their existence.

| Revenant Racial Feats |
|---|
| Dark Feasting |
| Empowered Reaping |
| Past Soul |

Shadowborn

Your soul is tethered to the Shadowfell. You might be a shadowborn creature, touched by the time you or your ancestors spent in that dark realm. You might have been born near a shadow crossing in the mortal realm, or touched by the attack of shadow monsters, such as wraiths and specters. Whatever its origin, your connection to the darkness lets your own shadow serve as a conduit for the Shadowfell's power.

| Shadowborn Feats |
|---|
| Born of Shadow |
| Shadow Blood |
| Shadow Control |
| Shadow Mantle |
| Shadow Overflow |
| Shadow Strider |

Winterkin

Although the vast ice sheets of the Elemental Chaos and the Feywild's courts of the winter fey vie for the title of the coldest site in all creation, no realm reflects the gloom, loneliness, and oppression of winter as does the Shadowfell. Your association with that realm manifests in your embrace of the cold, granting you a kinship with the power of winter.

| Winterkin Feats |
|---|
| Frozen Soul |
| Winter Walker |

Adventurer Feats

This section presents the feats in alphabetical order by name.

Born of Shadow Your soul is forever bound to the twilight of the Shadowfell. Your shadow is slightly deeper than seems normal for the ambient light around you, and your body and mind are strengthened when you are shrouded in gloom.

Benefit: Your origin changes to shadow, and you gain a +1 bonus to saving throws while you are in dim light or darkness.

Dark Feasting You grow stronger and more vital when you deal necrotic damage with your dark reaping racial power, drawing life energy from opponents with every strike you make.

Prerequisite: Revenant

Benefit: When you deal damage with your dark reaping, you gain temporary hit points equal to the extra necrotic damage dealt to the target.

Empowered Reaping You learn to make your dark reaping attack more powerful as you gain command of the forces at your control.

Prerequisite: Revenant

Benefit: You gain a +2 feat bonus to the damage dealt by your dark reaping. This bonus increases to +4 at 11th level and +6 at 21st level.

Executioner of Undeath As a hero sworn to destroy the undead, you can draw on ancient combat tactics to maximize the effect of your deadliest weapon attacks.

Benefit: Whenever you make a weapon attack using an axe or a heavy blade against an undead creature, you can reroll any damage die but must use the second result.

Frozen Soul The numbing bite of winter's wind can cut as sharp as any blade. You have long weathered this cold, toughening the resilience of body and mind.

Prerequisite: Constitution 13 or Wisdom 13

Benefit: You gain resist 5 cold and a +1 feat bonus to Will. The cold resistance increases to 10 at 11th level and 15 at 21st level. The bonus to Will increases to +2 at 11th level and +3 at 21st level.

Ghost Eyes Your connection to the world of unseen things allows you to catch flickering glimpses of invisible creatures, helping you land blows that might otherwise go astray.

Prerequisite: Wisdom 13

Benefit: You gain a +2 bonus to attack rolls against invisible creatures. In addition, you gain a +5 feat bonus to Perception checks actively made to find creatures that are hidden from you.

Ghost Scorpion Strike The ghost scorpion is a mythical predator of the Shadowfell whose name is invoked by a deadly combat tradition. Even incorporeal undead quail in fear of your mastery of the ghost scorpion's power.

Benefit: Your necrotic attack powers and poison attack powers ignore the insubstantial quality.

Holy Symbol Expertise Holy symbols are signs of faith. Yours represents a god or a cause that is dear to you. Your resolve is strengthened whenever you smite a foe with your symbol.

Benefit: You gain a +1 feat bonus to implement attack rolls that you make with a holy symbol. This bonus increases to +2 at 11th level and +3 at 21st level.

When you attack an enemy with an implement attack using a holy symbol, your enemies cannot gain combat advantage against you until the start of your next turn, unless you use a power or another ability that states that you grant combat advantage.

Ki Focus Expertise You have dedicated yourself to becoming as attuned to your ki focus as possible, heightening your prowess in battle.

Benefit: You gain a +1 feat bonus to implement attack rolls and weapon attack rolls that you make with your ki focus.

In addition, you gain a +1 bonus to the damage rolls of attacks that you make with your ki focus against a bloodied enemy. Both of these bonuses increase to +2 at 11th level and +3 at 21st level.

Legioncaller of Moil Moil was defended by vast armies of undead and other creatures of darkness whose unholy vitality spoke to the power of the city's necromancers. Having gleaned their secrets, you can call forth mightier servants to carry out your will.

Benefit: Any creature that you summon with a shadow summoning power gains a +1 feat bonus to attack rolls and a +1 feat bonus to all defenses.

Past Soul You remember that in your past life, you were of a different race.

Prerequisite: Revenant
Benefit: You gain the racial power of the race you chose with your Past Life racial feature (if that race has more than one racial power, choose one of the powers, and you gain only that one). During each encounter, you can use either that power or dark reaping, not both.

Shadow Blood Although others feel the chill of fear in the shadows, you find only solace in the darkness. When you draw on your inner reserves of strength, the shadow that cloaks you grants you even more vitality.

Prerequisite: Born of Shadow feat
Benefit: When you use your second wind to regain hit points while you are in dim light or darkness, you regain 5 additional hit points. The additional hit points increase to 10 at 11th level and 15 at 21st level.

Shadow Control The shadow magic you channel lets you summon strength from the darkness, drawing down shadows that shift and swirl to shield you from attacks.

Prerequisite: Born of Shadow feat
Benefit: You gain a +1 bonus to all defenses while you are in dim light or darkness.

Shadow Mantle At the height of combat, shadow flares to accentuate your movements, then conceals you as you execute your next assault.

Prerequisite: Born of Shadow feat
Benefit: When you score a critical hit or reduce a nonminion enemy to 0 hit points, you gain partial concealment until the end of your next turn.

Shadow Overflow Your soul is imbued with shadow energy that flows through your attacks. Each time you slay an enemy, tendrils of that shadow lash out against your other foes.

Prerequisite: Born of Shadow feat
Benefit: Whenever you reduce a nonminion enemy to 0 hit points with a melee basic attack, one enemy within 2 squares of you takes necrotic damage equal to your Constitution modifier.

"The darkness is never content, never satisfied by the sliver of life you sacrificed when you took the first step into shadow. Ever will it beckon, ever does it call, drawing you deeper into its embrace until you can no longer find the way back to who you were."

—Acererak

Shadow Strider As a creature of shadow, you move through the night with ease. Darkness coalesces around you, making it easy to pick your way through even the roughest terrain.

Prerequisite: Born of Shadow feat
Benefit: You ignore difficult terrain in squares of dim light or darkness.

Soulstealer of Moil When you call your dark servants, you draw off raw vitality from the necromantic energy that animates them.

Benefit: Whenever you use a shadow summoning power, you gain 5 temporary hit points. These temporary hit points increase to 10 at 11th level and 15 at 21st level.

Spectral Step The power of the Shadowfell flows in you, responding to your heroic instincts to let you slip partly into the spirit world for a time.

Prerequisite: Any shadow power
Benefit: When you spend an action point to take an extra action, you also become insubstantial until the end of your current turn.

Tainted Wounds You have learned how to turn shadow magic against the monsters you face. When your weapon scores a hit, you leave behind a lingering curse that saps a foe's ability to heal.

Benefit: If you hit an enemy with a melee weapon attack, it cannot regain hit points until the end of your next turn.

Winter Walker Your experience and endurance make you feel at home in even the most frigid conditions.

Benefit: You gain ice walk, meaning that you ignore difficult terrain caused by ice and snow. In addition, you gain both a +5 feat bonus to Endurance checks made to resist the effects of cold weather and a +5 feat bonus to Acrobatics checks made to balance on icy surfaces.

Equipment

As pervasive as the essence of shadow is, it should come as no surprise that any kind of gear can be infused with some of its traits or can be used to further its purpose.

The following items are available in marketplaces found in communities ranging from small villages to large cities. Their "magic" is the power of everyday rituals and folklore. A wise old crone in a distant village might have learned the secrets of a raven's feather from her mother, who learned it from her mother before her.

ADVENTURING GEAR

| Item | Price | Weight |
|---|---|---|
| Blessed soil | 10 gp | 1 lb. |
| Ghoul candle | 10 gp | 1/10 lb. |
| Poisoner's kit | 25 gp | 5 lb. |
| Raven's feather | 25 gp | 1/10 lb. |

Blessed Soil The soil contained within this small, plain bag has been blessed by a cleric or some other wielder of divine magic. If sprinkled over a casket or grave, blessed soil prevents any corpse buried therein from rising as an undead creature due a ritual. However, blessed soil has no effect on undead creatures that return to life due to other means. A creature might rise as a ghost if compelled to do so by a curse imposed upon it. Many communities require that blessed soil be used as part of any burial ritual. All too often, con artists and unscrupulous ritualists offer fake blessed soil at cheap rates, leaving graveyards rife with potential skeletons and zombies.

Ghoul Candle Fashioned from fat rendered from a slain ghoul, a ghoul candle sheds light that is invisible to undead. It functions as a normal candle, except that it provides no illumination for undead creatures. Gravediggers use these candles when they must venture into a cemetery at night, in hopes of avoiding the notice of any ghosts or similar creatures that might be about.

Poisoner's Kit A common item found in the hands of the most dangerous assassins, a poisoner's kit consists of a collection of tools, vials, and base ingredients used to concoct deadly poisons. Possession of a poisoner's kit is usually grounds for arrest in most civilized areas, since there is little good that can come of the substances that the kits require.

Raven's Feather This plain black feather ends in a small iron needle. When the item's user pricks a creature's skin with the needle, just enough to draw blood, the feather forms a mystic bond to that creature. At the moment of that creature's death, the black feather turns bloodred. Merchants and travelers leave raven's feathers with their loved ones, while some thieves' guilds and mercenary bands require initiates to leave one with their superiors. One of these feathers is by no means infallible. There is no way to inspect the feather to ensure that it is linked to a specific person. It is easy enough to fake one's death by passing off a feather attuned to a different creature as belonging to someone else.

KI FOCUSES

A ki focus is an implement that certain characters use as a focus for their inner magical energy, known as ki. A ki focus might take the form of a training manual, a scroll of ancient secrets, a blunt training weapon, or a cherished memento.

Attunement: Before you can use a ki focus, you must attune yourself to it. To attune yourself to a ki focus, you must have the item on your person during a short or an extended rest and must have proficiency with ki focuses. Some characters study their ki focus to attune themselves to it. Others meditate with it or wield it as they practice fighting techniques. The ki focus that you are attuned to occupies your ki focus item slot.

Whenever you take a rest, you can attune yourself to a ki focus in your possession, but you can be attuned to only one ki focus at a time. Also, only one creature at a time can be attuned to a particular ki focus. Once you attune yourself to a ki focus, no one else can be attuned to it until you are no longer attuned to it or you are dead.

Using a Ki Focus: Once you have attuned yourself to a ki focus, you must either wear it or hold it in order to use it as an implement.

Ki Focuses and Weapon Attacks: If you use a magic ki focus, you can add its enhancement bonus to the attack rolls and the damage rolls of weapon attacks you make using a weapon with which you have proficiency. If you have both a magic ki focus and a magic weapon, you choose before you use an attack power whether to draw on the magic of the ki focus or that of the weapon. Your choice determines which enhancement bonus, critical hit effects, and magic item properties and powers you can apply to that power. You can't, for example, use the enhancement bonus of your ki focus and the critical hit effect of your magic weapon on the same attack.

Give Your Hero a Dark Edge

The Shadowfell is a cold, grim place through which the spirits of the dead must travel on their way to the afterlife. Dark, evil things live there, suffused with the power of shadow. Some mortals in the natural world learn how to tap into this source. However, not all beings that draw strength from the Shadowfell are vile, black-hearted fiends. A few even dare to call themselves heroes, using the power of darkness to fight darkness.

Player's Option: Heroes of Shadow™ is aimed at players who are ready to reach beyond the Dungeons & Dragons Essentials™ books, Heroes of the Fallen Lands™ and Heroes of the Forgotten Kingdoms™. In addition to exploring the nature of the shadow power source, this roleplaying game supplement presents races, classes, feats, powers, and other options aimed at players hungry to play the archetypal antihero with a dark edge.

Monsters A to Z

The second compendium of monsters for the Dungeons & Dragons® game, Monster Manual® 2 is filled with a new assortment of creatures designed to challenge and terrify adventurers of all levels.

The monsters in these pages offer threats of every level and include brand new monsters, such as fir-bolgs and djinns, as well as new versions of familiar monsters like giants and demons. Monster Manual 2 also introduces the metallic dragons, which join their chromatic kin in the game.

The rest of this introduction explains how to read a monster's statistics block and assumes you're familiar with the power and combat rules in the Player's Handbook®. The glossary, starting on page 216, defines many of the terms used in the book, and the list of monsters by level, starting on page 221, is meant to assist you in tailoring encounters for your player characters (PCs).

The Statistics Block

A monster's statistics are presented in a format meant to be used in play. A typical statistics block is formatted as follows.

| Monster Name | Level and Role |
|---|---|
| Size, origin, and type (keywords) | XP value |
| Initiative modifier | Senses Perception modifier; special senses |
| Aura name (keywords) aura size; effect. | |
| HP maximum; Bloodied value | |
| Regeneration | |
| AC; Fortitude, Reflex, Will | |
| Immune effects; Resist effects; Vulnerable effects | |
| Saving Throws modifier | |
| Speed | |
| Action Points | |
| [Power icon] Power name (action; requirement; recharge) ✦ Keywords | |
| Range and area; targets; attack bonus vs. defense; effect on a hit. Miss: Result (if any). Other effects. | |
| Alignment | Languages |
| Skills skill modifiers | |
| Str score (modifier) | Dex score (modifier) Wis score (modifier) |
| Con score (modifier) | Int score (modifier) Cha score (modifier) |
| Equipment armor, shield, weapons, other equipment | |

Level and Role

A monster's level and role are tools for the DM to use when building an encounter. Chapter 4 of the Dungeon Master's Guide explains how to use these tools.

Level: A monster's level summarizes how tough it is in an encounter. Level determines most of the monster's statistics as well as the experience point (XP) award the PCs earn for defeating it (Dungeon Master's Guide, pages 56–57).

Role: A monster's role describes its preferred combat tactics, much as a character class's role suggests tactics for PCs. Monster roles are artillery, brute, controller, lurker, skirmisher, and soldier (Dungeon Master's Guide, pages 54–55).

A monster might have a second role: elite, solo, or minion. Elite monsters and solo monsters are tougher than standard monsters, and minions are weaker. For the purpose of encounter building, an elite monster counts as two standard monsters of its level, a solo monster counts as five, and four minions count as one.

In addition, a monster might have the leader subrole, indicating that it grants some sort of boon to its allies, such as a beneficial aura.

Size

A creature's size determines its space as well as its reach.

| Monster Size | Space | Reach |
|---|---|---|
| Tiny | 1/2 × 1/2 | 0 |
| Small | 1 × 1 | 1 |
| Medium | 1 × 1 | 1 |
| Large | 2 × 2 | 1 or 2 |
| Huge | 3 × 3 | 2 or 3 |
| Gargantuan | 4 × 4 or larger | 3 or 4 |

Space: This is the area (measured in squares) that a creature occupies on the battle grid.

Reach: If a creature's reach is greater than 1, the reach is noted in any melee power the creature has that uses that reach. Even if a creature's reach is greater than 1, the creature can't make opportunity attacks against targets that aren't adjacent to it unless it has threatening reach.

A creature that has reach 0 cannot normally make melee attacks outside its own space.

Origin

A monster's origin summarizes its place in the D&D cosmology. Origins are aberrant, elemental, fey, immortal, natural, and shadow. See the glossary for information about each origin.

Type

A creature's type summarizes some basic things about its appearance and behavior. Types are animate, beast, humanoid, and magical beast. See the glossary for information about each type.

Keywords

Some monsters have keywords that further define them. These keywords represent groups of monsters, such as angel, demon, devil, dragon, and undead. See the glossary for definitions of a monster's keywords.

Senses

Every monster has a Perception modifier. Some monsters also have special senses, such as darkvision or tremorsense, which are noted in the "Senses" entry.

Aura

If a monster has an aura, that is noted near the top of its statistics block. An aura is a continuous effect that emanates from the monster. See the glossary for more about auras.

Regeneration

Some monsters have regeneration. At the start of each of its turns, a monster that has regeneration regains a specific number of hit points, as long as the monster has at least 1 hit point.

The regeneration of some monsters can be suppressed by certain types of damage or by specific circumstances, and some creatures can use regeneration only under specific circumstances (for example, only while bloodied).

Speed

If a monster has alternative movement modes, such as fly, climb, or swim, that fact is noted in its speed entry.

Action Points

Elite and solo monsters have action points they can spend to take extra actions, just as PCs do. Unlike PCs, a monster can spend more than 1 action point in an encounter, but only 1 per round.

Powers

A monster's powers are presented so that its basic attacks appear first, followed by its other powers.

Type

Each power has an icon that represents its type: melee (), ranged (), close (), or area (). If a power doesn't have an icon, it's a personal power.

A basic attack has a circle around its icon: melee basic attack ⊕ or ranged basic attack ⊛.

Action
If a power requires an action to use, that fact is noted in the power's description. An immediate action's trigger is noted right after the action type. Some powers don't require an action to use; they simply occur in response to a trigger.

Requirement
Some powers are usable only if a precondition is met. For example, a power might be usable only while a monster is bloodied or only if it is wielding a specific weapon. A requirement is noted after a power's action type, if any.

Recharge
A monster power is at-will, encounter, or daily, or it recharges in certain circumstances.

Recharge ⚀ ⚁ ⚂ ⚃ ⚄ : The power has a random chance of recharging during each round of combat. At the start of each of the monster's turns, roll a d6. If the roll is one of the die results shown in the power description, the monster regains the use of that power. The power also recharges after a short rest.

Recharges when . . . : The power recharges in a specific circumstance, such as when the monster is first bloodied during an encounter. The power also recharges after a short rest.

Range and Area
A melee power has a range of 1, unless otherwise noted. Ranged powers specify a range, and area powers and close powers specify a range and an area of effect.

Targets
Some monster powers specify targets. An area attack or a close attack targets each creature within its area of effect, unless otherwise noted.

Attack
Unless an attack power hits automatically, its description includes an attack notation, which specifies the monster's attack bonus for that power and which defense it targets.

Hit: The effect of a power hitting is specified after the attack notation.

Miss: Some attack powers have an effect on a miss (indicated by Miss).

Effect: Some attack powers have an effect whether or not the attack hits (indicated by Effect).

Effects
Monster powers include many of the same effects that appear in PC powers, such as aftereffects, conditions, damage of various types, ongoing damage, and secondary attacks.

A power's effects are instantaneous, unless otherwise noted. The effects of some powers can be sustained (indicated by Sustain and then whatever action is required to sustain the effect).

Alignment
A monster's most typical alignment is noted in its statistics block. Chapter 2 of the Player's Handbook contains information on the various alignments.

Languages
A statistics block gives the languages that a monster typically can speak and understand. An individual monster might know additional languages, like Common or the languages of its companions. See the Dungeon Master's Guide, page 171, for more information about the languages of the D&D world.

Skills
The skills section of a monster's statistics block includes only trained skills or skills for which the monster has an unusual modifier. A monster's Perception modifier isn't repeated here.

Ability Scores
A monster's six ability scores are included toward the bottom of its statistics block. Following each score in parentheses is the adjusted ability score modifier, including one-half the monster's level, which is useful whenever the monster needs to make an untrained skill check or an ability check.

Equipment
A monster's "Equipment" entry notes the weapons and implements the creature uses. If a character gains a monster's equipment, he or she can use it as normal equipment. A character does not gain the powers that a monster uses through its equipment.

Healing Surges
Monsters have healing surges. However, few monsters have powers that let them spend healing surges. The number of healing surges a monster has is based on its level: 1–10, one healing surge; 11–20, two healing surges; 21 or higher, three healing surges.

Because they rarely come into play, healing surges are not included in a monster's statistics block.

ANGEL

Angels are divine servants of the gods. Although common in the Astral Sea, they can be found anywhere acting on behalf of a deity or other force whose goals align with their calling.

Angel of Authority

An angel of authority is the mouthpiece of a deity. This angel governs other angels and servants of a deity in and out of combat.

| Angel of Authority | Level 22 Controller (Leader) |
|---|---|
| Large immortal humanoid (angel) | XP 4,150 |
| Initiative +17 | Senses Perception +18 |
| HP 203; Bloodied 101 | |
| AC 36; Fortitude 32, Reflex 34, Will 35 | |
| Immune fear; Resist 15 radiant | |
| Speed 8, fly 12 (hover) | |
| ⊕ Quarterstaff (standard; at-will) ✦ Radiant, Weapon | |
| Reach 2; +27 vs. AC; 1d10 + 8 damage plus 1d10 radiant damage. | |
| Lightning Bolt (standard; at-will) ✦ Lightning | |
| Ranged 10; +26 vs. Fortitude; 2d10 + 8 lightning damage, and the target is dazed until the end of the angel of authority's next turn. | |
| Majestic Rally (standard; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞) ✦ Radiant, Thunder | |
| Close burst 5; targets enemies; +26 vs. Will; 1d10 + 8 radiant damage plus 1d10 thunder damage, and the target is weakened (save ends). Miss: Half damage. Effect: Any angel within the burst gains a +2 bonus to attack rolls until the end of the angel of authority's next turn. | |
| Angelic Presence (while not bloodied) | |
| Any attack against the angel of authority takes a -2 penalty to the attack roll. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Supernal |
| Skills Insight +23, Religion +23 | |
| Str 20 (+16) | Dex 22 (+17) Wis 25 (+18) |
| Con 19 (+15) | Int 24 (+18) Cha 27 (+19) |
| Equipment plate armor, quarterstaff | |

Angel of Authority Tactics

An angel of authority stays behind the lines, raining down lightning bolts and bolstering allies with majestic rally whenever possible.

Angel of Authority Lore

Religion DC 24: An angel of authority is the herald of a particular deity. The angel handles the most important tasks concerning the protection and well-being of the deity's dominion.

Encounter Groups

An angel of authority leads angels of protection, vengeance, supremacy, battle, and valor. It also administers or directs other servants of a deity who are not angels.

Level 22 Encounter (XP 21,400)

- 1 angel of authority (level 22 controller)
- 2 angels of vengeance (level 19 elite brute, MM 17)
- 6 angels of light (level 23 minion)

Angel of Retrieval

When deities require the recovery of a stolen object or a kidnapped creature, they send a squad of divine beings that includes an expert tracker: the angel of retrieval.

| Angel of Retrieval | Level 22 Artillery |
|---|---|
| Large immortal humanoid (angel) | XP 4,150 |
| Initiative +20 | Senses Perception +22; blindsight |
| HP 162; Bloodied 81 | |
| AC 34; Fortitude 33, Reflex 35, Will 33 | |
| Immune fear; Resist 15 radiant | |
| Speed 8, fly 12 (hover), teleport 5 | |
| ⊕ Short Sword (standard; at-will) ✦ Radiant, Weapon | |
| Reach 2; +27 vs. AC; 2d6 + 6 radiant damage. | |
| Angelic Bow (standard; at-will) ✦ Radiant, Weapon | |
| Ranged 20/40; +27 vs. AC; 2d8 + 9 radiant damage, and each enemy adjacent to the target takes 10 radiant damage. | |
| Isolating Displacement (standard; at-will) ✦ Radiant, Teleportation | |
| Reach 2; +27 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 10 radiant damage, and the angel of retrieval teleports the target 5 squares. The angel then teleports to a space adjacent to the target. The angel can choose to deal no damage with this attack. Miss: The angel teleports 5 squares. | |
| Clear the Way (standard; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞) ✦ Radiant | |
| Area burst 3 within 10; +27 vs. Fortitude; 3d8 + 9 radiant damage, and the angel of retrieval slides the target 3 squares. Miss: Half damage, and the angel slides the target 1 square. | |
| Hunt the Guilty (minor; encounter) | |
| The angel of retrieval chooses one enemy within 10 squares of it. Until the end of the encounter, the angel's attacks deal 1d10 extra damage against that creature. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Supernal |
| Skills Arcana +28, Intimidate +29 | |
| Str 22 (+17) | Dex 28 (+20) Wis 23 (+17) |
| Con 24 (+18) | Int 23 (+17) Cha 24 (+18) |
| Equipment plate armor, longbow, short sword | |

Angel of Retrieval Tactics

An angel of retrieval is often dispatched to capture a person or a thing. The angel uses hunt the guilty on the individual to be captured or the one holding an item to be recovered. The angel uses clear the way to give its allies more space to maneuver. Otherwise, the angel prefers to fight from a distance with its angelic bow.

Angel of Retrieval Lore

Religion DC 24: An angel of retrieval is best described as a bounty hunter from the Astral Sea. These angels are trained in rituals that allow them to hunt down creatures, such as Observe Creature (Player's Handbook, page 309) and Planar Portal (Player's Handbook, page 311).

Encounter Groups

An angel of retrieval is assisted by other angels in interplanar hunting parties.

Level 23 Encounter (XP 21,400)

- 1 angel of retrieval (level 22 artillery)
- 2 angels of supremacy (level 24 soldier)
- 12 angel of valor legionnaires (level 21 minion, MM 16)

Angel of Light

Made purely of divine energy, an angel of light exists as a brilliant embodiment of a deity's subconscious.

| Angel of Light | Level 23 Minion Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Medium immortal humanoid (angel) | XP 1,275 |
| Initiative +19 | Senses Perception +19 |
| HP 1; a missed attack never damages a minion; see also death burst. | |
| AC 37; Fortitude 34, Reflex 34, Will 36 | |
| Immune fear; Resist 15 radiant | |
| Speed 8, fly 12 (hover) | |
| ⓘ Angelic Glaive (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| Reach 2; +28 vs. AC; 15 damage. | |
| ✧ Death Burst (when the angel of light drops to 0 hit points) ✦ Radiant | |
| The angel of light explodes in a burst of radiant light: close burst 10; targets enemies; +26 vs. Fortitude. Effect: Angels in the burst gain 10 temporary hit points. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Supernal |
| Str 18 (+15) | Dex 23 (+17) Wis 27 (+19) |
| Con 23 (+17) | Int 15 (+13) Cha 23 (+17) |
| Equipment glaive | |

Angel of Light Tactics

A squad of angels of light spreads out and tries to attack as many targets as possible. They never retreat from battle.

ERIC L. WILLIAMS

Angel of Light Lore

Religion DC 24: An angel of light is the bound form of a deity's subconscious thoughts, appearing in the Astral Sea as a mote of pure energy until given direction by more powerful angels. The thought that originally formed it drives its actions eternally.

Religion DC 29: Although directed by a deity's thoughts, angels of light can act independently to see those thoughts enacted. There have even been rare occasions when angels of light acted in ways contrary to their creators' ethos in zealous attempts to see those ideas made real.

Encounter Groups

Angels of light are found with other angels or as members of a larger group enforcing a deity's will.

Level 22 Encounter (XP 24,550)
- 1 angel of supremacy (level 24 soldier)
- 8 angels of light (level 23 minion)
- 1 marut concordant (level 22 elite controller, MM 85)

Angel of Supremacy

Angels of supremacy are the strongest of the angelic fighters.

| Angel of Supremacy | Level 24 Soldier |
|---|---|
| Large immortal humanoid (angel) | XP 6,050 |
| Initiative +19 Senses Perception +18 | |
| HP 226; Bloodied 113 | |
| AC 40; Fortitude 38, Reflex 36, Will 35 | |
| Immune fear; Resist 15 radiant | |
| Speed 8, fly 12 (hover) | |
| ⨁ Spear (standard; at-will) ✦ Thunder, Weapon | |
| Reach 3; +31 vs. AC; 1d10 + 9 damage plus 1d10 thunder damage. | |
| ⤖ Light of Justice (standard; encounter) ✦ Radiant | |
| Ranged 10; +29 vs. Fortitude; 2d10 + 9 radiant damage. Effect: The target is marked until the end of the encounter. | |
| ⤖ Summons to Justice (minor 1/round; at-will) | |
| Ranged sight; targets creatures marked by the angel of supremacy; no attack roll; the angel of supremacy pulls the target 1 square. | |
| ✧ Astral Brilliance (standard; encounter) ✦ Radiant, Zone | |
| Close burst 3; +29 vs. Reflex; 2d10 + 9 radiant damage. Effect: The burst creates a zone of radiance that lasts until the end of the encounter. The angel of supremacy's spear attack deals 1d10 extra radiant damage while the angel is within the zone. | |
| Angelic Presence (while not bloodied) | |
| Any attack against the angel of supremacy takes a -2 penalty to the attack roll. | |
| Threatening Reach | |
| An angel of supremacy can make opportunity attacks against all enemies in reach. | |
| Alignment Unaligned Languages Supernal | |
| Skills Intimidate +21 | |
| Str 29 (+21) Dex 21 (+17) Wis 22 (+18) | |
| Con 26 (+20) Int 25 (+19) Cha 19 (+16) | |
| Equipment plate armor, heavy shield, spear | |

Angel of Supremacy Tactics

An angel of supremacy positions itself at a chokepoint or other tactically important location and uses astral brilliance. It targets a melee combatant with summons to justice, bringing the target within reach of its spear and the radiant zone.

Angel of Supremacy Lore

Religion DC 24: Angels of supremacy guard the homes of gods and protect the gods' favored mortal servants. They are also the backbone of strike force groups for a deity.

Encounter Groups

An angel of supremacy is the vanguard of any strike force sent by the gods.

Level 24 Encounter (XP 30,350)
- 3 angels of supremacy (level 24 soldier)
- 1 deva fallen star (level 26 artillery)
- 1 tormenting ghost (level 21 controller, MM 117)

Archangel

The highest of all angels are the Archangels, powerful beings from the Astral Sea. An archangel is the ultimate authority in an astral dominion with the exception of the actual deity.

The archangel template can be applied to any angel.

| Archangel | Elite Controller |
|---|---|
| (angel) | XP Elite |
| Saving Throws +2 | |
| Action Point 1 | |
| Hit Points +8 per level + Constitution score | |
| Powers | |
| ↓ Avenging Strike (when an ally within 5 squares of the archangel drops to 0 hit points; at-will) | |
| The archangel shifts 2 squares and makes a melee basic attack as a free action. | |
| ✧ Overwhelming Presence (standard; encounter) ✦ Radiant | |
| Close burst 5, targets enemies; level + 4 vs. Will; 1d8 + Wisdom modifier radiant damage, and the target is stunned until the end of the archangel's next turn. | |

ANKHEG

Loathsome insects with a taste for bipedal prey, ankhegs burst from hiding to seize the unwary. An ankheg moves with great stealth, but might be detected by the faint whiff of acid dripping from its twitching mandibles.

Ankheg Level 3 Elite Lurker
Large natural beast XP 300

Initiative +10 Senses Perception +9; tremorsense 5
HP 100; Bloodied 50
AC 17; Fortitude 14, Reflex 16, Will 14
Resist 5 acid
Saving Throws +2
Speed 8, burrow 4 (tunneling)
Action Points 1

⊕ Claw (standard; at-will)
+8 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage.

⸸ Mandible Grab (standard; usable only while the ankheg does not have a creature grabbed; at-will)
+8 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage, and the target is grabbed; see also mandible carry.

⸸ Gnaw and Scuttle (minor; at-will) ✦ Acid
Targets a creature grabbed by the ankheg; +8 vs. AC; 1d8 + 2 damage, and ongoing 5 acid damage (save ends). The ankheg then shifts 2 squares and pulls the target to space adjacent to its new location.

✧ Acid Spray (standard; recharges when first bloodied) ✦ Acid
Close blast 3; +8 vs. Reflex; 1d8 + 5 acid damage, and the target is slowed and takes ongoing 5 acid damage (save ends both).

CHRISTOPHER BURDETT

Ankheg Tactics

Adult ankhegs strike quickly, attempting to grab and carry away a vulnerable target. An ankheg broodling remains in hiding until an adult ankheg has brought a grabbed victim near.

Ankheg Lore

Nature DC 10: Ankhegs dig mazelike networks of tunnels, which might contain other monsters that have claimed part of the tunnel network as their own.

Nature DC 15: Ankhegs are found in nesting pairs, their broodlings rarely emerging from the safety of their tunnels.

Encounter Groups

Ankhegs are normally encountered as pairs. Broodlings are occasionally controlled by giant ants after the ant hives drive away or kill the adult ankhegs.

Level 4 Encounter (XP 950)
- ✦ 2 ankhegs (level 3 elite lurker)
- ✦ 6 ankheg broodlings (level 1 minion)
- ✦ 1 rage drake (level 5 brute, MM 92)

Ant, Giant

Waves of single-minded giant ants can strip the landscape bare for miles, overcoming any foe with sheer numbers. They have been known to reduce towns to bare earth.

Hive Worker

Weakest of the giant ants, workers exist to fulfill the functional needs of the hive, providing little help in battle other than their swarming numbers.

| Hive Worker | Level 1 Minion Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Medium natural beast | XP 25 |

Hive Worker Tactics

A hive worker shows little initiative. It attacks any adjacent creature other than those of its own hive, or moves to attack any creature that is in combat with a member of its hive.

Hive Warrior

A hive warrior acts as an explorer and guardian for the workers during their forays outside the hive.

| Hive Warrior | Level 2 Skirmisher |

Hive Queen Tactics

A hive queen aims her kick carefully, pushing enemies into groups for an acidic blast attack or into swarming clusters of her brood. In a desperate situation, she calls a strategic retreat, sacrificing warriors without concern while leading soldiers and drones to a more advantageous location. If the entire brood is eliminated, the queen fights to the death.

Giant Ant Lore

Nature DC 7: Giant ants live in hives consisting of hundreds of members. The majority of these ants are workers, but they all fight to defend the hive.

Nature DC 12: Although they are not intelligent, giant ants use teamwork and simple yet effective tactics. Giant ants possess a social organization rivaling that of the most efficient humanoids.

Nature DC 17: Giant ants communicate with nearby members of the hive by using a complex combination of pheromones. These pheromones are highly acidic, and the ants use them to damage foes.

Encounter Groups

Giant ants are encountered with others of their hive, since they generally consider anything else to be food.

Level 1 Encounter (XP 500)
- ✦ 1 hive soldier (level 3 soldier)
- ✦ 2 hive warriors (level 2 skirmisher)
- ✦ 4 hive workers (level 1 minion)

Primordials crafted archons to be soldiers in the cataclysmic war against the immortals of the Astral Sea. Now, they act as servitors and mercenaries for powerful forces within the Elemental Chaos, such as giants, efreets, and demons. These creatures of energy exert little will of their own, instead furthering the goals and ambitions of their masters. The few archons that are independent prowl the Elemental Chaos, attacking creatures without elemental origins.

Earth Archon Ground Rager

An earth archon ground rager is drawn to regions of geologic activity, such as volcanoes, fault zones, sink holes, or areas prone to landslides.

War Pick (standard; at-will) ✦ Thunder, Weapon
+23 vs. AC; 2d8 + 7 damage plus 1d8 thunder damage (crit 4d8 + 23 damage plus 8 thunder damage).

Stone Javelin (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Ranged 10/20; +23 vs. AC; 1d10 + 7 damage, and the target is marked until the end of the earth archon seismic striker's next turn.

Seismic Stomp (standard; recharge ⁞⁞) ✦ Thunder
Close burst 3; +21 vs. Fortitude; 2d10 + 7 thunder damage, and the target is knocked prone. Miss: Half damage, and the target is knocked prone.

Ground Strike ✦ Thunder
An earth archon seismic striker's attack deals an extra 1d8 thunder damage against any prone enemy.

Combat Superiority
An earth archon seismic striker gains a +5 bonus to opportunity attack rolls and immobilizes a creature that it hits with an opportunity attack.

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Primordial
Str 18 (+12) Dex 22 (+14) Wis 21 (+13)
Con 24 (+15) Int 15 (+10) Cha 17 (+11)

Earth Archon Lore

Arcana DC 13: Earth archons prefer a slow, inexorable advance toward conquest, and they are excellent strategists. They prefer to take, hold, and fortify positions, unlike the rapid and destructive blazes of fire archons. In this regard earth archons are similar to ice archons and work well with them.

Arana DC 20: The greatest fortress of earth archons in the Elemental Chaos is Thrak-Harda, ruled by a stone titan named King Brakkamul. This sprawling fortification guards a huge gem called the Diamond of Despair.

Arcana DC 25: Rumors say that the fortifications around the Diamond of Despair are intended to protect others from it rather than to protect it from thieves. What danger it presents is a matter of speculation, and the Diamond has long been an obsession of the dao, mysterious cousins of the djinns and efreets.

Encounter Groups

Earth archons can be found with any type of elemental creature, eager to crush any enemy in their path.

Level 14 Encounter (XP 5,200)
- 1 earth archon ground rager (level 14 controller)
- 1 earth archon seismic striker (level 16 soldier)
- 2 fire archon emberguards (level 12 brute, MM 18)
- 1 ice archon hailscourge (level 16 artillery, MM 20)

Level 18 Encounter (XP 10,400)
- 1 cambion hellfire magus (level 18 artillery, MM 39)
- 1 earth archon ground rager (level 14 controller)
- 3 earth archon seismic strikers (level 16 soldier)
- 2 earth archon rumblers (level 17 brute)

Storm Archon Squallshield

As tempestuous as a hurricane, a storm archon squallshield is always spoiling for a fight. It serves as versatile infantry to more powerful elemental lords, and goes out of its way to cause panic and suffering.

(Left to right) storm archon lightning walker, tempest weaver, and squallshield

| Medium elemental humanoid (air, water) | XP 1,600 |

Initiative +15 Senses Perception +15

Rain Wall aura 1; each enemy that starts its turn within the aura must make a DC 22 Athletics check or Acrobatics check. An enemy that fails the check is knocked prone.

HP 168; Bloodied 84

AC 33; Fortitude 30, Reflex 30, Will 26

Immune disease, poison; Resist 15 lightning, 15 thunder

Speed fly 8 (hover)

⨺ Longsword (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+23 vs. AC; 2d8 + 7 damage, and the target is marked until the end of the storm archon squallshield's next turn.

↯ Snarling Lightning (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Lightning
Ranged 10; +21 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 7 lightning damage, and the target is marked (save ends). Each enemy adjacent to the target takes half damage and is marked (save ends).

Pursuing Storm (move; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Teleportation
The storm archon squallshield teleports 7 squares to a space adjacent to a creature it has marked. The target grants combat advantage to the squallshield until the end of the squallshield's turn.

Mark of the Tempest
When a storm archon squallshield hits a creature marked by it with a ranged or melee attack, that creature is slowed (save ends).

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Primordial

| Con 24 (+15) | Int 17 (+11) | Cha 17 (+11) |

Equipment plate armor, light shield, longsword

Storm Archon Squallshield Tactics

A squallshield focuses its attacks on a weak target. It marks the foe from range using snarling lightning and then teleports next to it using pursuing storm. The squallshield then attacks with its longsword, keeping the target marked until the squallshield's other abilities recharge.

Storm Archon Lightning Walker

A lightning walker crackles with intensity and arrogance, flashing across the battlefield faster than the eye can blink.

| Storm Archon Lightning Walker | Level 18 Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Medium elemental humanoid (air, water) | XP 2,000 |

Initiative +18 Senses Perception +16

Immune disease, poison; Resist 15 lightning, 15 thunder

Speed fly 8 (hover)

⨺ Spear (standard; at-will) ✦ Teleportation, Weapon
+23 vs. AC; 2d8 + 4 damage, and the storm archon lightning walker teleports the target 2 squares. Effect: The lightning walker teleports 2 squares.

JASON A. ENGLE

Booming Retort (immediate reaction, when an enemy enters a square adjacent to the storm archon lightning walker; recharge ⚅) ✦ Lightning, Thunder
The triggering enemy takes ongoing 5 lightning and thunder damage (save ends), and the lightning walker shifts 2 squares.

Lightning Pulse (standard; encounter) ✦ Lightning, Teleportation
Close burst 2; targets enemies; +21 vs. Reflex; 3d6 + 6 lightning damage. Effect: The storm archon lightning walker teleports 10 squares.

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Primordial
Str 17 (+12) Dex 24 (+16) Wis 15 (+11)
Con 19 (+13) Int 15 (+11) Cha 18 (+13)
Equipment scale armor, spear

Storm Archon Lightning Walker Tactics

A lightning walker is in constant motion on the battlefield, vanishing in a flash after every attack and reappearing a short distance away. The archon reserves lightning pulse for situations when it finds itself surrounded or flanked.

Storm Archon Tempest Weaver

Riding the turbulent winds and storms raging across the Elemental Chaos, a tempest weaver hurls down lightning at its foes with capricious zeal.

Storm Archon Tempest Weaver Level 21 Artillery
Medium elemental humanoid (air, water) XP 3,200

Initiative +12 Senses Perception +14
HP 155; Bloodied 77
AC 33 (35 with defensive squall); Fortitude 32, Reflex 33 (35 with defensive squall), Will 33
Immune disease, poison; Resist 15 lightning, 15 thunder
Speed 6, fly 8 (hover)

Storm Touch (standard; at-will) ✦ Lightning

Resounding Bolt (standard; at-will) ✦ Lightning, Thunder
Ranged 10; +26 vs. Fortitude; 1d10 + 5 thunder damage, and ongoing 10 lightning damage (save ends).

Lightning Blast (standard; recharges when first bloodied) ✦ Lightning
Close burst 2; +24 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 5 lightning damage, and the target is blinded until the end of the storm archon tempest weaver's next turn.

Heart of the Tempest (standard; encounter) ✦ Lightning, Thunder
Area burst 3 within 20; targets enemies; +24 vs. Reflex; the target slides 3 squares, takes ongoing 10 lightning damage and ongoing 10 thunder damage, and is restrained (save ends all).

Defensive Squall
A storm archon tempest weaver gains a +2 bonus to its AC and Reflex against ranged attacks.

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Primordial
Skills Intimidate +20
Str 14 (+12) Dex 15 (+12) Wis 18 (+14)
Con 23 (+16) Int 25 (+17) Cha 25 (+16)
Equipment robes

Storm Archon Tempest Weaver Tactics

Unlike most artillery, a tempest weaver is willing to move close in combat. It begins with heart of the tempest, incapacitating as many creatures as possible and rearranging the battlefield to its advantage before closing in to use storm touch. The tempest weaver then withdraws, using its fly speed to put distance between itself and attackers.

Storm Archon Lore

Arcana DC 16: Storm archons live in floating storm cities that cruise through the Elemental Chaos. Always on the move, these cities drift overhead, indifferent to what happens beneath them. However, storm archons strike without provocation if they grow bored.

Arcana DC 24: Storm archons can be found in the company of storm giants, especially during the howling black tempests that rise up from the Abyss. Storm archons and storm giants ride these evil winds as they swirl through the layers of the Elemental Chaos, spilling out into planes beyond to cause tornadoes and hurricanes.

Arcana DC 29: Storm archons and storm giants are at their worst when they ride a black tempest's winds. While flying upon a tempest, they can attract demons to follow or fight alongside them.

Encounter Groups

Teams of storm archons patrol their masters' domains within the Elemental Chaos. Storm archons often serve storm giants and their elemental comrades.

Level 18 Encounter (XP 10,400)
- 2 storm archon squallshields (level 17 soldier)
- 2 storm archon lightning walkers (level 18 skirmisher)
- 1 storm archon tempest weaver (level 21 artillery)

Level 18 Encounter (XP 11,600)
- 2 fire archon blazesteels (level 19 soldier, MM 19)
- 1 ice archon frostshaper (level 20 controller, MM 21)
- 2 storm archon lightning walkers (level 18 skirmisher)

Level 22 Encounter (XP 20,750)
- 2 storm archon tempest weavers (level 21 artillery)
- 1 storm giant (level 24 controller, MM 24)
- 1 thunderhawk (level 22 elite soldier, MM 221)

Water Archon Shoal Reaver

A shoal reaver is a merciless raider, happy to dispatch any creatures in its way. It savages enemies with ruthless strikes of its trident, pulling them to the water's edge.

Water Archon Shoal Reaver Level 13 Brute
Medium elemental humanoid (aquatic, water) XP 800

Initiative +8 Senses Perception +7

Equipment scale armor, trident

Water Archon Shoal Reaver Tactics

A shoal reaver uses its swim speed to its advantage, assaulting enemies who venture into the water. Additionally, its liquid body allows the creature to move freely onto land. It employs water harpoon to draw enemies close before using whirlpool of tines, which it uses against at least two targets at a time.

Water Archon Tide Strider

Taciturn and violent, a tide strider does its talking with the end of its deadly spear.

Water Archon Tide Strider Level 15 Skirmisher
Medium elemental humanoid (aquatic, water) XP 1,200

Initiative +13 Senses Perception +9
Body Torrent aura 1; each enemy within the aura that hits or misses the water archon tide strider with an attack is pushed 1 square.
HP 144; Bloodied 72
AC 29; Fortitude 27, Reflex 28, Will 26
Immune disease, forced movement, poison; Resist 10 acid;
Vulnerable cold (a water archon tide strider that takes cold damage is slowed until the end of its next turn)
Saving Throws +2 against immobilized, restrained, and slowed
Speed 6, swim 8

Greatspear (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; +20 vs. AC; 2d10 + 4 damage.

Way of Water (standard; recharge ⁞⁞)
The water archon tide strider shifts 6 squares and makes one greatspear attack against each enemy within reach at any point during the move.

Combat Advantage
Hits from a water archon tide strider's melee attacks knock prone any target that is granting combat advantage to it.

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Primordial
Str 17 (+10) Dex 19 (+11) Wis 14 (+9)
Con 16 (+10) Int 15 (+9) Cha 14 (+9)
Equipment scale armor, greatspear

Water Archon Tide Strider Tactics

A tide strider waits until its allies engage an enemy before attacking. It uses way of water at each opportunity, using combat advantage to knock prone as many enemies as possible.

Water Archon Waveshaper

Manipulating the ocean with gestures of its war fans, a waveshaper works tirelessly to see the world drowned by the churning waters of the Elemental Chaos.

Water Archon Waveshaper Level 16 Controller (Leader)
Medium elemental humanoid (aquatic, water) XP 1,400

Initiative +10 Senses Perception +12
HP 157; Bloodied 78
AC 30; Fortitude 28, Reflex 27, Will 30
Immune disease, forced movement, poison; Resist 10 acid;
Vulnerable cold (a water archon waveshaper that takes cold damage is slowed until the end of its next turn)
Saving Throws +2 against immobilized, restrained, and slowed
Speed 6, swim 8

Waveshape (standard; at-will)
+20 vs. Reflex; 2d6 + 5 damage, and the target is pushed 1 square and knocked prone.

Dizzying Whirlpool (standard; at-will)
Ranged 10; +19 vs. Fortitude; 2d8 + 7 damage, and the target cannot charge or shift (save ends).

Geyser (standard; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞)
Area burst 2 within 10; +19 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 4 damage, and the target is knocked prone and cannot use immediate actions until the end of its next turn.

Ocean Call (minor; recharges when bloodied)
Each ally that is within 10 squares of the water archon waveshaper and that has the water keyword or the aquatic keyword shifts 3 squares as a free action and gains 10 temporary hit points.

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Primordial
Skills Intimidate +16
Str 14 (+10) Dex 19 (+12) Wis 25 (+15)
Con 21 (+13) Int 15 (+10) Cha 17 (+11)
Equipment robes, 2 war fans

Water Archon Waveshaper Tactics

A waveshaper is content to linger at the edge of battle, just within the limits of its ranged powers. From this location, the waveshaper alternates between using dizzying whirlpool and geyser, using the first while the second recharges. A waveshaper uses ocean call early in combat, once its allies have engaged their enemies.

Water Archon Lore

Arcana DC 18: Water archons don't limit themselves to seas. They use rivers and streams as highways, setting up outposts in swamps or lakes. Water archons prefer to remain near water, but use land-based attacks as a surprise tactic.

Arcana DC 23: Water archons prowl waterways in great ships of water crafted by waveshapers. These strange aquatic masses have a semisolid state that allows them to rise and submerge as the water archons wish. These ships have given water archons a reputation as planar pirates.

Encounter Groups

Water archons typically find themselves in the service of masters as mercurial and destructive as the sea itself. They are loyal as long as they are not sent too far from water and are given frequent opportunities to spread misery and woe.

Level 12 Encounter (XP 3,500)
- 1 human pirate captain (level 10 soldier)
- 2 windfiend furies (level 12 controller)
- 2 water archon shoal reavers (level 13 brute)

Level 14 Encounter (XP 5,200)
- 1 aboleth slime mage (level 17 artillery, MM 8)
- 3 water archon shoal reavers (level 13 brute)
- 1 water archon waveshaper (level 15 controller)

BARGHEST

Savage goblin shapeshifters, barghests seek power and influence through violence and treachery. Barghests can adopt the forms of a variety of creatures, including bugbears, hobgoblins, and wolves.

Barghest Savager

This bugbear barghest lives for battle. A barghest savager tries to incite bugbears, goblins, and hobgoblins to violence, and often leads raiding parties in slaughter and pillage.

Barghest Savager Level 4 Brute
Medium natural humanoid (shapechanger) XP 175

Initiative +4 Senses Perception +9; low-light vision
HP 63; Bloodied 31
AC 16; Fortitude 17, Reflex 15, Will 15
Speed 6 (8 in wolf form)

⊕ Bite (standard; usable only in wolf form; at-will)
+7 vs. AC; 2d8 + 4 damage.

⊕ Battleaxe (standard; usable only in bugbear form; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+7 vs. AC; 1d10 + 6 damage.

⸸ Jump Strike (standard; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞)
The barghest savager shifts 3 squares before and after the attack: +7 vs. AC; 3d8 + 5 damage.

⸸ Power Feed (standard; usable only in wolf form; encounter) ✦ Psychic, Reliable
+5 vs. Will; 2d6 + 5 psychic damage, and the barghest savager gains one use of an at-will or encounter attack power that it has seen the target use during this encounter.
The savager must use the gained power while in its bugbear form and before the end of the encounter. The attack bonus for the power is +7 vs. AC and +5 vs. any other defense.

Change Shape (minor 1/round; at-will) ✦ Polymorph
A barghest savager can alter its physical form to appear as a wolf or a bugbear (see Change Shape, MM 280).

Alignment Evil Languages Common, Goblin
Skills Stealth +9
Str 18 (+6) Dex 15 (+4) Wis 14 (+4)
Con 13 (+3) Int 12 (+3) Cha 11 (+2)
Equipment battleaxe

Barghest Savager Tactics

Rare is a savager that doesn't charge headlong into battle; subtlety is for other beasts. It uses jump strike to hit defenders, then bounds away toward a party's strikers and controllers to feed upon a useful power.

Barghest Battle Lord

A battle lord gains its name from its propensity for taking control of the flow of combat, earning respect and fear from friend and foe alike.

Barghest Battle Lord Level 7 Controller
Medium natural humanoid (shapechanger) XP 300

Initiative +5 Senses Perception +12; low-light vision
HP 82; Bloodied 41
AC 21; Fortitude 19, Reflex 19, Will 19
Resist 5 psychic
Speed 6 (8 in wolf form)

⊕ Bite (standard; usable only in wolf form; at-will)
+12 vs. AC; 2d6 + 4 damage, and the target is knocked prone.

⊕ Greatsword (standard; usable only in hobgoblin form; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+12 vs. AC; 1d10 + 5 damage, and the barghest battle lord is invisible to the target until the end of the battle lord's next turn.

⊛ Psychic Howl (standard; at-will) ✦ Fear, Psychic
Ranged 10; +11 vs. Will; 1d8 + 5 psychic damage, and the target is dazed until the end of the barghest battle lord's next turn.
Aftereffect: The target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls (save ends).

Barghest savager in bugbear form and in wolf form

| Equipment greatsword | | |

Barghest Battle Lord Tactics

A barghest battle lord keeps its distance, preferring to let other creatures rush into melee. It allows itself to be surrounded in order to use life feed to best effect, afterward putting distance between itself and enemies.

Barghest Lore

Nature DC 7: Although barghests are shapeshifters of the goblin race, they can also be found with other evil creatures. Barghests are born at random among goblins, which is viewed by parents as a blessing from Bane.

Nature DC 12: Barghests gain energy by feeding on their foes' will. Some steal powers; others use their foes' strength to heal their own wounds.

Nature DC 17: Barghests have unusual features that indicate their special nature even in goblin form; a shock of white hair or a discolored eye is a common sign.

Encounter Groups

Barghests can be found terrorizing prey alongside all types of goblins, which they almost always lead through brute force or intimidation.

Level 3 Encounter (XP 825)
- ✦ 1 barghest savager (level 4 brute)
- ✦ 2 goblin sharpshooters (level 2 artillery, MM 137)
- ✦ 4 goblin warriors (level 1 skirmisher, MM 137)

Level 6 Encounter (XP 1,350)
- ✦ 1 barghest battle lord (level 7 controller)
- ✦ 2 barghest savagers (level 4 brute)
- ✦ 2 bugbear stranglers (level 6 lurker, MM 136)
- ✦ 1 hobgoblin commander (level 5 soldier, MM 140)

Behir

The behir is a multilegged serpentine horror known for its fearsome lightning-spitting attack. Clever and voracious predators, behirs are deadly hunters from the time they are hatched.

Behir

Shrewd and deadly, a behir is capable of running down prey and swallowing it whole. A quick-witted opponent could try to reason with—or bribe—a behir before becoming its next meal.

| Behir | Level 14 Solo Soldier |
|---|---|
| Huge natural magical beast | XP 5,000 |
| Initiative see lightning reflexes | Senses Perception +12; tremorsense 10 |
| Lightning Storm aura 5; an enemy that starts its turn in the aura takes 5 lightning damage. | |
| HP 564; Bloodied 282 | |
| AC 30; Fortitude 27, Reflex 26, Will 26 | |
| Resist 15 lightning | |
| Saving Throws +5 | |
| Speed 7, climb 5 | |
| Action Points 2 | |
| ⊕ Claw (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 3; +21 vs. AC; 2d8 + 6 damage. | |
| ⸸ Bite (standard; at-will) ✦ Lightning | |
| Reach 3; +21 vs. AC; 1d8 + 6 damage plus 1d8 lightning damage. | |
| ⸸ Devour (standard; recharges when no creature is affected by this power) | |
| Reach 3; +19 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 6 damage, and a Medium or smaller target is swallowed. A swallowed target is grabbed and restrained. A swallowed creature has line of sight and line of effect only to the behir, and no creature has line of sight or line of effect to it. A creature that escapes the grab is no longer swallowed and appears in a space adjacent to the behir. A behir can move normally while it has a target grabbed in this way. When the behir dies, the target can escape as a move action, appearing in the behir's former space. Sustain Minor: The behir sustains the grab, and the target takes 15 damage. | |
| ⇙ Lightning Breath (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Lightning | |
| Close blast 5; +17 vs. Reflex; 3d10 + 6 lightning damage and the target is dazed. Miss: Half damage. | |
| ⇙ Thunderleg Stomp (standard; at-will) | |
| Close burst 3; +17 vs. Fortitude; 1d8 + 6 damage, and the target is knocked prone. | |
| Lightning Reflexes | |
| The behir acts three times in a round, on initiative counts 30, 20, and 10. It cannot delay or ready actions. On each turn, it has a standard action instead of the normal allotment of actions. It can use one immediate action between each pair of turns. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Common, Draconic |
| Str 23 (+13) | Dex 20 (+12) Wis 21 (+12) |
| Con 21 (+12) | Int 7 (+5) Cha 13 (+8) |

Behir Tactics

A behir begins combat by attacking a weak-looking target with devour, even if that means provoking opportunity attacks when moving past other foes. While sustaining devour, it uses lightning breath and thunderleg stomp to target multiple foes, falling back on bite and claw attacks if pressed in melee.

Behir Bolter Whelp

Although small in comparison with adult behirs, a behir bolter whelp is large and fast enough to easily capture and consume the creatures it preys upon.

| Behir Bolter Whelp | Level 8 Solo Soldier |
|---|---|
| Large natural magical beast | XP 1,750 |
| Initiative see lightning reflexes | Senses Perception +7; tremorsense 10 |
| HP 352; Bloodied 176 | |
| AC 24; Fortitude 19, Reflex 21, Will 19 | |
| Resist 10 lightning | |
| Saving Throws +5 | |
| Speed 8, climb 5 | |
| Action Points 2 | |
| ⊕ Claw (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; +15 vs. AC; 2d6 + 5 damage. | |
| ⸸ Bite (standard; at-will) ✦ Lightning | |
| Reach 2; +15 vs. AC; 1d6 + 5 damage plus 1d6 lightning damage. | |
| ⸸ Knockdown Rush (minor; recharge ⚄ ⚅ ⚅) | |
| The behir bolter whelp charges and makes the following attack: +16 vs. AC; 1d12 + 6 damage, and the target is knocked prone. | |
| ⸸ Rip-Claw Response (immediate reaction, when hit by a melee attack; at-will) | |
| The behir bolter whelp makes a claw attack against the triggering creature. | |
| ⇙ Lightning Shock (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅ and when first bloodied) ✦ Lightning | |
| Close burst 2; +13 vs. Reflex; 2d10 + 7 lightning damage. Miss: Half damage. | |
| Lightning Reflexes | |
| The behir bolter whelp acts three times in a round, on initiative counts 20, 15, and 5. It cannot delay or ready actions. On each turn, it has a standard action instead of the normal allotment of actions. It can use one immediate action between each pair of turns. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Common, Draconic |
| Str 17 (+7) | Dex 20 (+9) Wis 17 (+7) |
| Con 16 (+7) | Int 7 (+2) Cha 11 (+4) |

Behir Bolter Whelp Tactics

A bolter whelp moves swiftly into melee and focuses on a single lightly armored foe. It uses knockdown rush before making bite and claw attacks, and it uses jumping shock and rip-claw response against foes that move between it and its chosen target.

Behir Stormsteed

Trained as mounts by storm giants, behir stormsteeds focus their lightning breath into constant streams of arcing electricity that they cling to and climb upon with their many legs.

| Behir Stormsteed | Level 24 Soldier |
|---|---|
| Huge natural magical beast | XP 6,050 |
| Initiative +21 | Senses Perception +18; tremorsense 10 |
| HP 229; Bloodied 114 | |
| AC 40; Fortitude 38, Reflex 36, Will 35 | |
| Resist 15 lightning | |
| Speed 8, fly 8 (hover) | |
| ⊕ Bite (standard; at-will) ✦ Lightning | |
| Reach 2; +31 vs. AC; 1d8 + 9 damage plus 1d8 lightning damage, and each creature within 3 squares of the target takes 5 lightning damage. | |
| ⇜ Lightning Breath (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Lightning | |
| Close burst 3; two creatures in burst; +29 vs. Reflex; 1d10 + 9 lightning damage and the target is slowed until the end of the target's next turn. | |
| Ride the Lightning (while mounted by a friendly rider of 24th level or higher; at-will) ✦ Mount | |
| The behir stormsteed can use its bite or lightning breath once per turn as a minor action. In addition, the rider gains a +2 bonus to attacks with lightning powers. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Common, Draconic |
| Str 27 (+20) | Dex 25 (+19) Wis 23 (+18) |
| Con 29 (+21) | Int 7 (+10) Cha 15 (+14) |

Behir Stormsteed Tactics

A stormsteed works with its rider to charge at tight groups of enemies, using its attacks to spread damage among as many targets as possible.

Behir Lore

Nature DC 11: A behir is a cunning predator that spends its life apart from others of its kind. Behirs eject their young from their lairs shortly after birth, forcing them to fight to survive.

Nature DC 18: Despite its bestial nature, a behir is surprisingly intelligent. By virtue of their ability to speak and understand Common, behirs are sought out by creatures looking to entice one of these predators into their service. Such negotiations end badly if the behir's terms are not met.

Nature DC 23: Stormsteeds can ride the lightning they generate, allowing them to fly through the air and even hover. They are allies and mounts of storm giants.

Encounter Groups

Behirs most often hunt and live alone. However, they are clever enough to work with other creatures when necessary, and even to recruit weaker creatures to serve them.

Level 10 Encounter (2,500 XP)
- ✦ 1 behir bolter whelp (level 8 solo soldier)
- ✦ 3 bugbear wardancers (level 6 skirmisher)

Level 17 Encounter (8,200 XP)
- ✦ 1 behir (level 14 solo soldier)
- ✦ 1 medusa shroud of zehir (level 18 skirmisher, MM 187)
- ✦ 1 yuan-ti malison incanter (level 15 artillery, MM 269)

WAYNE ENGLAND

With their deadly eye rays and voracious nature, beholders are among the most powerful and most feared of monsters.

Beholder Gauth

The gauth is the least among beholderkind, but it uses the reputation of its more fearsome kin to gain power over weaker creatures.

| Beholder Gauth | Level 5 Elite Artillery |
|---|---|
| Medium aberrant magical beast | XP 400 |
| Initiative +4 | Senses Perception +10; all-around vision, darkvision |
| HP 102; Bloodied 51 | |
| AC 17; Fortitude 16, Reflex 18, Will 19 | |
| Saving Throws +2 | |
| Speed fly 6 (hover) | |
| Action Points 1 | |
| Bite (standard; at-will) | |
| +12 vs. AC; 2d4 damage. | |
| Central Eye (minor; at-will) | |
| Ranged 5; +10 vs. Will; the target is immobilized until the end of the beholder gauth's next turn. | |
| Eye Rays (standard; at-will) ✦ see text | |
| The beholder gauth uses two eye ray powers chosen from the list below. Each eye ray must target a different creature. Using eye rays does not provoke opportunity attacks. | |
| 1—Fire Ray (Fire): Ranged 8; +10 vs. Reflex; 2d6 + 4 fire damage. | |
| 2—Exhaustion Ray (Necrotic): Ranged 8; +10 vs. Fortitude; 1d8 + 4 necrotic damage, and the target is weakened (save ends). | |
| 3—Sleep Ray (Sleep): Ranged 8; +10 vs. Fortitude; the target is slowed (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target is knocked unconscious (save ends). | |
| 4—Telekinesis Ray: Ranged 8; +10 vs. Fortitude; the beholder gauth slides the target 4 squares. | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages Deep Speech |
| Str 12 (+3) | Dex 15 (+4) Wis 16 (+5) |
| Con 15 (+4) | Int 18 (+6) Cha 20 (+7) |

Gauth Tactics

The gauth relies on allies and servants to keep enemies away while it attacks with its eye rays. If confronted by a strong melee combatant, it uses its telekinesis ray to push the creature within range of its allies. Spellcasters and ranged combatants are taken out of the fight with the gauth's sleep ray or immobilized by its central eye.

Gauth Lore

Dungeoneering DC 12: Though less powerful than its other beholder kin, a gauth possesses deadly eye rays and a hunger for power.

Dungeoneering DC 17: A gauth is a cowardly creature that relies on allies and slaves for protection. It is perfectly willing to sacrifice those allies to save its own life.

Beholder Eye of Frost

The eye of frost is a heartless predator that hunts in frozen lands of ice and snow. More so than other types of beholders, the eye of frost lives for the twisted pleasures of the moment, seldom concerning itself with long-term plans.

| Beholder Eye of Frost | Level 14 Elite Artillery |
|---|---|
| Large aberrant magical beast | XP 2,000 |
| Initiative +12 | Senses Perception +16; all-around vision, darkvision |
| HP 222; Bloodied 111; see also ice armor | |
| AC 26 (28 with ice armor); Fortitude 26 (28 with ice armor), Reflex 26, Will 27 | |
| Resist 15 cold | |
| Saving Throws +2 | |
| Speed fly 4 (hover) | |
| Action Points 1 | |
| Bite (standard; at-will) | |
| +21 vs. AC; 2d6 damage. | |
| Central Eye (minor 1/round; at-will) | |
| Ranged 8; +20 vs. Reflex; the target is weakened (save ends). If the target takes cold damage while weakened by this power, it is immobilized until no longer weakened. | |
| Eyes of the Beholder (free, when an enemy starts its turn within 5 squares of the beholder eye of frost; at-will) | |
| The eye of frost uses eye ray against the triggering enemy. While the eye of frost is bloodied, a creature it hits also gains vulnerable 5 cold until the end of the eye of frost's next turn. | |
| Eye Rays (standard; at-will) ✦ see text | |
| The beholder eye of frost uses one eye ray power chosen from the list below. Using eye rays does not provoke opportunity attacks. | |
| 1—Freeze Ray (Cold): Ranged 10; +19 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 7 cold damage. | |
| 2—Telekinesis Ray: Ranged 10; +19 vs. Fortitude; the eye of frost slides the target 6 squares. | |
| 3—Ice Ray (Cold): Ranged 10; +19 vs. Reflex; 1d8 + 6 cold damage, and the target takes ongoing 5 cold damage and is immobilized (save ends both). | |
| Ice Armor (when first bloodied; encounter) | |
| The beholder eye of frost's AC and Fortitude increase by 2 until the end of the encounter. | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages Deep Speech |
| Str 13 (+8) | Dex 21 (+12) Wis 18 (+11) |

JEREMY JARVIS

Eye of Frost Tactics

Each round, the eye of frost targets the nearest foe with its central eye followed by an eye ray. It uses ice ray to immobilize melee foes, employing its telekinesis ray to slide targets within range of its eyes of the beholder effect.

Eye of Frost Lore

Dungeoneering DC 18: An eye of frost prefers to dwell in cold lands within the world and the Elemental Chaos, drifting high above the frozen landscape to spy prey from afar.

Dungeoneering DC 23: Ice archons, frost giants, and oni employ eyes of frost as hunters and guardians. These sadistic beholders often chafe under the command of such creatures, but they obey as long as their masters sate their appetite for cruelty.

Beholder Eye of Chaos

The eye of chaos is a singular engine of destruction, eschewing tactics and reason in favor of sowing a maximum amount of mayhem and ruin.

Eye of Chaos Tactics

The eye of chaos targets a random creature with its central eye each round while targeting another creature with one of its eye rays. When bloodied, it uses ripple of chaos to attack the closest targets, then teleports to an easily defended location.

Eye of Chaos Lore

Dungeoneering DC 26: Eyes of chaos are associated with demons and other creatures of the Elemental Chaos, although they ally themselves with any creature if doing so advances their ruinous goals. Like a demon, an eye of chaos seeks to sow destruction and discord, but its plans are far more complex.

Dungeoneering DC 31: Eyes of chaos arose from an ancient beholder eye tyrant that sought to tap the power of the shard of pure evil that created the Abyss. Although it never found the shard, this eye tyrant returned from the Abyss possessed of great power that warped it physically and mentally. None can say what secret goals drive the eyes of chaos, but their actions more often align with the interests of demons than with those of other beholders.

Beholder Ultimate Tyrant

The most horrible of all beholders, ultimate tyrants emerge from the Far Realm to spread dark madness in their wake.

Beholder Ultimate Tyrant Level 29 Solo Artillery
Huge aberrant magical beast XP 75,000

Initiative +20 Senses Perception +27; all-around vision, darkvision
HP 1,080; Bloodied 540; see also spasmodic rays

Immune petrification
Saving Throws +5
Speed fly 8 (hover)
Action Points 2

⊕ Bite (standard; at-will)
+36 vs. AC; 3d8 + 10 damage.

Central Eye (minor 1/round; at-will)
Ranged 30; +34 vs. Fortitude; the target is dazed and slowed (save ends both). First Failed Saving Throw: The target is stunned (save ends). Miss: The target is slowed (save ends).

Eyes of the Beholder (free, when an enemy starts its turn within 5 squares of the beholder; at-will)
The ultimate tyrant uses eye ray against the triggering enemy.

Spasmodic Rays (when first bloodied and again when the beholder ultimate tyrant drops to 0 hit points)
The ultimate tyrant uses a random eye ray attack against each enemy within 10 squares.

Eye Ray (standard; at-will) ✦ see text
The beholder ultimate tyrant uses two eye ray powers chosen from the list below. The origin square of each area burst must be centered on a different enemy. Using eye ray does not provoke opportunity attacks.
1—Madness Ray (Charm, Psychic): Area burst 1 within 10; +32 vs. Will; 2d8 + 7 psychic damage, and the target must make a basic attack against its nearest ally as a free action.
2—Unraveling Ray: Area burst 1 within 10; +32 vs. Fortitude; 2d6 + 7 damage, and the target takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target takes 1d10 damage. Second Failed Saving Throw: The target takes 2d10 damage. Third Failed Saving Throw: The target takes 3d10 damage, and the ongoing damage from this power ends.
3—Withering Ray (Necrotic): Area burst 1 within 10; +32 vs. Fortitude; 2d8 + 7 damage, and the target takes ongoing 10 necrotic damage (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target is weakened (save ends).
4—Burning Ray (Fire): Area burst 1 within 10; +32 vs. Reflex; 2d6 + 7 fire damage, and the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls and ongoing 10 fire damage (save ends both).
5—Telekinesis Ray: Area burst 1 within 10; +32 vs. Fortitude; the beholder slides the target 8 squares, and the target is knocked prone.
6—Frost Ray (Cold): Area burst 1 within 10; +32 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 7 cold damage, and the target takes a -2 penalty to saving throws until the end of the beholder's next turn.
7—Petrifying Ray: Area burst 1 within 10; +32 vs. Fortitude; the target is slowed (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target is immobilized instead of slowed (save ends). Second Failed Saving Throw: The target is petrified.
8—Disintegrate Ray: Area burst 1 within 10; +32 vs. Fortitude; 2d10 + 7 damage, and the target takes ongoing 15 damage (save ends). Aftereffect: Ongoing 10 damage (save ends).

ERIC L. WILLIAMS/JIM NELSON

9—Ray of Attraction: Area burst 1 within 10; +32 vs. Reflex; the target takes a -5 penalty to all defenses, and at the start of the target's turn the beholder pulls it 2 squares (save ends both). Aftereffect: The target takes a -2 penalty to all defenses (save ends).

10—Ray of Repulsion: Area burst 1 within 10; +32 vs. Reflex; the target takes a -2 penalty to Reflex, and at the start of the target's turn the ultimate tyrant pushes it 6 squares (save ends both). Aftereffect: The target is pushed 3 squares at the start of its turn (save ends).

Antimagic Field

A beholder ultimate tyrant takes no damage from zone effects.

Ultimate Tyrant Tactics

The ultimate tyrant focuses its central eye attacks on the strongest-looking melee combatants, hoping to keep them out of the fray. It hovers above foes on the ground, keeping out of melee as it assaults the closest targets with its eye ray powers. However, it stays near enemies in order to maximize the effect of its spasmodic rays.

Ultimate Tyrant Lore

Dungeoneering DC 28: The ultimate tyrant is the pinnacle of beholderkind. These creatures originate in the Far Realm, drawing power from the madness of that unknowable place.

Dungeoneering DC 33: Ultimate tyrants command the allegiance of lesser beholders. Even the willful and unpredictable eye of chaos bows to the leadership of an ultimate tyrant.

Encounter Groups

Beholders command a wide range of forces, typically consisting of servants willing to stand between them and their foes. Many beholders recruit flying creatures to their service, creating a deadly airborne strike force.

Level 5 Encounter (1,100 XP)
- 1 beholder gauth (level 5 elite artillery)
- 2 barghest savagers (level 4 brute)
- 1 goblin underboss (level 4 elite controller, MM 138)

Level 13 Encounter (4,000 XP)
- 1 beholder eye of frost (level 14 elite artillery)
- 1 oni mage (level 10 elite lurker, MM 201)
- 2 wyverns (level 10 skirmisher, MM 268)

Level 24 Encounter (34,750 XP)
- 1 beholder eye of chaos (level 25 elite artillery)
- 1 chaos hydra (level 22 solo brute)

Level 29 Encounter (89,000 XP)
- 1 beholder ultimate tyrant (level 29 solo artillery)
- 2 slaughterstone hammerers (level 25 soldier)

BULLYWUG

Nasty and noisome, bullywugs turn any swamp they inhabit into a dismal echo of the land it once was, so much so that even they view their existence as innately askew. Bullywugs sense this "wrongness" as a heightened paranoia, a feeling that everyone is out to kill them. And it's true—creatures that attack a bullywug with extreme power or precision find themselves blessed by a moment of clarity and renewed strength, as if the natural world were thanking them.

Bullywug Mucker

Strong and stout, a bullywug mucker leaps into combat to knock foes prone.

Bullywug Mucker Level 1 Brute
Medium natural humanoid (aquatic) XP 100

Initiative +2 Senses Perception +0

Bullywug Lore

Nature DC 10: Bullywugs say they were created by the original primordials, not by the gods. Their primitive societies are among the pettiest and most mindlessly destructive of all humanoid societies.

Nature DC 15: By amassing legacies of savagery, the cruelest bullywugs imagine that they will one day be reborn as slaads. Bullywug tribes that have exhausted a swamp's resources have been known to resort to cannibalism; others are cannibals by choice.

Encounter Groups

Bullywugs have a hard time teaming up with any other creatures, but when they do it is with the foul, the chaotic, and the feral.

Level 1 Encounter (XP 524)
- ✦ 1 bloodthorn vine (level 2 soldier)
- ✦ 2 bullywug croakers (level 3 minion)
- ✦ 2 bullywug muckers (level 1 brute)

| ↳ Rootwhip Staff (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| Reach 2; +15 vs. Reflex; 1d8 + 6 damage, the centaur mystic slides the target 3 squares, and the target is slowed (save ends). | |
| ✧ Ancestral Chargers (standard; recharges when a centaur within 10 squares of the centaur mystic drops to 0 hit points) ✦ Psychic | |
| Close blast 5; targets enemies; +14 vs. Fortitude and Will (one attack roll against both defenses); 3d8 +5 psychic damage if the attack hits the target's Will; the target is pushed 2 squares and knocked prone if the attack hits the target's Fortitude. | |

Biting Earth (standard; recharges when first bloodied) ✦ Zone
Area burst 2 within 10; the burst creates a zone of biting earth that lasts until the end of the centaur mystic's next turn. Any enemy that ends its turn within the zone is immobilized (save ends). As a free action, an enemy immobilized by the zone can take 3d8 damage to save against the effect. Sustain Standard: The zone persists, and the mystic can move it 3 squares.

Mystic Resonance (minor; encounter) ✦ Healing
The centaur mystic and each ally it can see regain 10 hit points and can make a saving throw against one effect.

Centaur Lore

Nature DC 10: Centaurs are wild folk with a love of battle so powerful that they sell their combat services to other creatures, especially fey. Highly territorial, centaurs brook no trespass and challenge those who enter their lands. Their homes commonly include stretches of awe-inspiring steppes in the Feywild, bordered by rough hills or mountains. Worldly plains, particularly near elven lands, might also support a tribe of centaurs.

Centaurs build their villages among hills near water and in natural caves. They do so for protection and a good view of surrounding territory. Peaceful visitors to such settlements do well to loudly announce themselves and bring friendship offerings of food and strong drink, a common centaur custom.

Nature DC 16: Centaurs revere the wild forces represented by Kord and Melora, rather than those of the fey god Corellon. Thus, they love the wild, and they fiercely protect pure lands from despoiling interlopers and monsters. They see combat and athletic contests as paths to renown, and they do not fear death in battle. Their celebrations after successful battles, hunts, or births are unruly and long, full of boasting, sport, and drink.

As fierce as they are, centaurs are gentle to one another and to friends. They have a strong mystical tradition and wise leaders, most of which are female. Their laws are simple and very different from human standards. The punishment for serious crimes is banishment from the tribe. Such outlaws must leave the tribe's lands, and no other tribe member can raise hand or hoof to help them.

Nature DC 21: Devotion to Kord's creed and a spiritual connection to nature is physically manifest in these fey creatures; mystics among the centaurs develop amazing powers over the natural world. Centaurs devoted to battle, as well as centaur mages, develop power over lightning and thunder.

Encounter Groups

Centaurs have strong ties with elves, eladrin, gnomes, and satyrs. Many adventurous centaurs live among other fey and explore the wider cosmos. Fey chargers, for example, have been seen as "knights" in eladrin courts. Exiled centaurs do the same, although these outcasts are more likely to be evil. A few centaurs, often campaigners, venture far afield as mercenaries.

Level 23 Encounter (XP 25,500)

- 1 centaur campaigner (level 25 soldier)
- 2 fell wyverns (level 24 skirmisher)
- 2 eladrin ghaeles of winter (level 21 artillery, MM 103)

CENTIPEDE

These voracious nocturnal predators thrive in dark conditions such as forest undergrowth and moist caves. Centipedes are quick and silent hunters that prey on any creature they are able to eat.

Centipede Swarm

Although each individual is just a foot long, when groups of centipedes swarm together they can kill and consume far larger targets.

| Centipede Swarm | Level 2 Brute |
|---|---|
| Medium natural beast (swarm) | XP 125 |
| Initiative +4 | Senses Perception +1; darkvision |
| Swarm Attack aura 1; each enemy that starts its turn within the aura takes 3 damage plus 2 extra damage per centipede swarm adjacent to the enemy. | |

Centipede Lore

Nature DC 10: Centipedes are plentiful in woodlands and caves, and their poison can drain a victim's strength.

Nature DC 15: Centipedes are sacred to Torog, and his worshipers keep them as pets.

Encounter Groups

Because they're wide-ranging and not smart, centipedes serve other forest and underground creatures as pets or guardians.

Level 4 Encounter (XP 800)
- ✦ 1 ankheg (level 3 elite lurker)
- ✦ 2 bloodthorn vines (level 2 soldier)
- ✦ 2 centipede swarms (level 2 brute)

Level 5 Encounter (XP 1,050)

Chaos Shard

At the maelstrom that marks the boundaries of the Abyss, the raging energy of the Elemental Chaos merges with an all-pervasive evil. Where these forces coalesce, they give rise to chaos shards—intelligent and malevolent creatures of living crystal.

Storm Shard

A storm shard pummels its foes with powerful blasts of thunder and lightning.

Chaos Shard Lore

Arcana DC 10: Chaos shards are sentient crystal creatures formed in the maelstrom where the deepest levels of the Elemental Chaos become the Abyss.

Arcana DC 16: Chaos shards exist due to the influence of the shard of pure evil from which the Abyss was created. Legends state that the most powerful of the chaos shards are splinters of this legendary crystalline fragment.

Arcana DC 21: Wizards and those that draw power from the Elemental Chaos sometimes capture chaos shards to use them as sources of power.

Encounter Groups

Chaos shards travel together in small clusters, sowing upheaval wherever they go. They are also highly sought after by arcane casters and creatures of the Elemental Chaos, which use them as powerful (if unpredictable) guardians.

Level 7 Encounter (XP 1,500)
- ✦ 2 death shards (level 8 artillery)
- ✦ 1 bloodseep demon (level 7 skirmisher)
- ✦ 2 evistros (level 6 brute, MM 54)

Level 17 Encounter (XP 8,200)
- ✦ 1 prismatic shard (level 16 artillery)

COCKATRICE

This odd-looking creature terrifies even the bravest because of its ability to turn flesh into stone.

| Cockatrice | Level 5 Skirmisher |

| Speed 4, fly 6 (clumsy) | |
| ⊕ Bite (standard; at-will) | |
| +10 vs. AC; 1d6 + 3 damage, and the cockatrice makes a secondary attack against the same target. Secondary Attack: +8 vs. Fortitude; the target is slowed (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target is immobilized instead of slowed (save ends). Second Failed Saving Throw: The target is petrified. | |
| ↯ Buffeting Wings (immediate interrupt, when an enemy moves adjacent to the cockatrice; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃) | |
| The cockatrice uses its bite against the triggering enemy and then shifts 3 squares. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages – |
| Skills Stealth +11 | |
| Str 9 (+1) | Dex 18 (+6) | Wis 11 (+2) |
| Con 15 (+4) | Int 2 (-2) | Cha 4 (-1) |

Cockatrice Tactics

Despite its fearsome reputation, a cockatrice is a cowardly foe. It engages one enemy at a time, using its buffeting wings to bite and then retreat.

Cockatrice Lore

Nature DC 12: The lair of a cockatrice is filled with broken statues of previous victims, which include various wild animals. In the wild, the soft ground of a cockatrice's lair is filled with short tunnels and hollows that a cockatrice can use when attacked.

Nature DC 17: Feathers freshly plucked from a cockatrice can be mixed with mud to create a poultice that reverses petrification when spread over an affected creature. This method requires a DC 20 Heal check and 30 minutes, and it is successful only if the poultice is applied within twenty-four hours of the petrification. One cockatrice provides enough feathers to create a poultice for one petrified creature.

Encounter Groups

Reptilian and serpentine monsters such as yuan-ti, lizardfolk, and medusas sometimes keep cockatrices as pets or guardians.

Level 3 Encounter (XP 850)
- 2 cockatrices (level 5 skirmisher)
- 1 poisonscale collector (level 3 lurker)
- 2 poisonscale myrmidons (level 3 soldier)

| Con 30 (+24) Int 3 (+10) Cha 15 (+16) | |

Colossus Lore

Arcana or Religion DC 28: Originally crafted by the primordials, primordial colossi now slumber in crumbling ruins or move freely throughout the planes, seeking to fulfill the orders of their long-gone masters. Some primordial colossi appear to be shattered statues, but rise in fury when approached.

Arcana or Religion DC 33: Most primordial colossi are as ageless as their original masters. However, these powerful guardians can also be created by the death or awakening of mighty elemental beings, from a buildup of arcane energy, or by the rituals of mighty wizards.

RALPH HORSLEY

Encounter Groups

Though a primordial colossus can arise spontaneously, most of these creatures are found in the ancient ruins they were created to defend, fighting alongside other immortal guardians.

Level 26 Encounter (XP 45,100)
- ✦ 1 primordial colossus (level 28 elite brute)
- ✦ 2 great flameskulls (level 24 artillery, MM 109)
- ✦ 1 slaughterstone hammerer (level 25 soldier)

Level 27 Encounter (XP 61,000)
- ✦ 1 primordial colossus (level 28 elite brute)
- ✦ 1 primordial naga (level 25 solo artillery, MM 195)

COUATL

The ancient race of couatls has earned renown for selflessly opposing the evil of demons and the Abyss. However, the couatls' legendary virtue and benevolence can sometimes be occluded by their single-minded pursuit of their goals.

Couatl Cloud Serpent

A couatl cloud serpent attacks from above, hurling lightning at its foes.

| Couatl Cloud Serpent | Level 18 Artillery |

| Reach 2; +23 vs. Fortitude; the target is pushed 2 squares and knocked prone. | |
| ⤖ Sky Bolt (standard; at-will) ✦ Lightning, Radiant | |
| Ranged 20; +23 vs. Reflex; 2d10 + 6 lightning and radiant damage. | |
| ✲ Snaking Arcs (standard; recharges when first bloodied) ✦ Lightning, Radiant | |
| Area burst 3 within 20; targets enemies; +23 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 6 lightning and radiant damage. | |
| Radiant Absorption ✦ Radiant | |
| If a couatl cloud serpent takes radiant damage, its attacks deal 5 extra radiant damage until the end of its next turn. | |
| Twist Free | |
| A couatl cloud serpent makes saving throws against immobilized and restrained conditions at the start of its turn as well as at the end of its turn. In addition, a cloud serpent can make saving throws against immobilized and restrained conditions that do not allow saving throws and would normally end at the end of its turn or at the end of an enemy's turn. | |

| ⨽ Couatl Radiance (standard; encounter) ✦ Fire, Healing, Radiant | |
| The couatl star serpent gains insubstantial and phasing until the end of its turn, and moves 8 squares. The star serpent can move through enemies' spaces. If the star serpent moves through an ally's space, that ally regains 15 hit points and can spend a healing surge. If it passes through an enemy's space, the couatl makes an attack against that enemy: +19 vs. Will; 1d6 + 5 fire and radiant damage, and ongoing 10 fire and radiant damage (save ends). The star serpent can attack a target only once with each use of this power. | |
| ⨽ Righteous Coils (minor 1/round; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; +19 vs. Fortitude; 1d6 + 5 damage, and the target is grabbed. A creature grabbed by the couatl star serpent grants combat advantage to the star serpent, and the star serpent can move the grabbed creature without needing to make a Strength attack. | |
| ⨽ Constrict (minor 1/round; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; targets a creature grabbed by the couatl star serpent; +19 vs. Fortitude; 2d6 + 5 damage, and the target is dazed until the end of the couatl's next turn. | |
| ✧ Purifying Scream (standard; encounter) ✦ Psychic | |
| Close burst 5; targets enemies; +18 vs. Will; 1d10 + 6 psychic damage, and the target is dazed (save ends). If the target is taking ongoing fire, poison, or radiant damage, it is also stunned until the end of the couatl star serpent's next turn. | |
| Radiant Absorption ✦ Radiant | |
| If a couatl star serpent takes radiant damage, its attacks deal 5 extra radiant damage until the end of its next turn. | |
| Twist Free | |
| A couatl star serpent makes saving throws against immobilized and restrained conditions at the start of its turn as well as at the end of its turn. ## Couatl Lore

Religion DC 11: Couatls are benevolent celestial serpents known for their hatred of demons and other forces of evil and chaos.

Religion DC 18: The couatls' benevolent reputation is only partly deserved. Although they are driven in their hatred of evil, couatls are single-minded in their dedication to their specific plans, whether protecting a village, propelling a chosen creature on a path of destiny, or preventing a planar breach. Creatures that stand opposed to a couatl's plans—knowingly or otherwise—can easily find themselves the object of the creature's wrath.

Religion DC 23: Couatls were supposedly born of the first light in the world. Ancient lore speaks of great couatls fighting in the war between the gods and the primordials, and of how these creatures bound mighty beings within the world or on other planes. Free couatls and their followers work to make sure such sites remain forever undisturbed.

Encounter Groups

Couatls most often ally with other creatures that share a desire to oppose malevolence or guard against ancient evil. However, a couatl might fight on the side of unaligned or even evil creatures if doing so works against a greater evil in the long term.

Level 14 Encounter (XP 5,600)
- 1 couatl star serpent (level 15 elite controller)
- 3 deva knights-errant (level 11 soldier)
- 1 phoelarch warrior (level 12 elite skirmisher)

Level 20 Encounter (XP 15,500)
- 2 couatl cloud serpents (level 18 artillery)
- 2 marut executioners (level 22 brute)
- 1 marut prosecutor (level 21 controller)

Crossing Between Worlds

A couatl can cross from any plane to the Astral Sea by taking 10 minutes to do so. It arrives at a random location or at a teleportation circle it knows. If it chooses to, it can make an Arcana check to leave a portal open behind it. Such a portal's duration is the same as if the couatl had created it using the Planar Portal ritual (PH 311).

DARKMANTLE

Strange émigrés from the Shadowfell, darkmantles lurk in caverns, ruins, and other dark places. They feed by dropping on prey from above.

Darkmantle Enveloper Tactics

A darkmantle enveloper waits for a group to approach. Once a few targets are near, it attacks with shadowcry and then immediately drops down to use engulf against a dazed foe.

Darkmantle Lore

Arcana DC 14: Darkmantles are strange predators from the Shadowfell. The enveloper clings to the ceiling and drops upon prey, using its size to engulf a foe.

Arcana DC 19: Shadar-kai and cave dwellers use darkmantles as guard pets. Darkmantles possess at least as much intelligence as dogs.

Encounter Groups

Darkmantles often hunt in hanging packs. They are also used as living traps by numerous humanoid tribes.

Level 6 Encounter (XP 1,400)

DEMOGORGON

Demogorgon, Prince of Demons, is a two-headed monstrosity who commands the fear and respect of deities, devils, demons, and primordials alike. His followers embrace wanton destruction, and his wars against Orcus and Graz'zt have raged across the Abyss for eons. Only Demogorgon's two competing minds keep his mad ambitions in check.

The Prince of Demons is cunning, cruel, envious, and ferocious even for a demon. He sees both sides of every problem and has plenty of attention to spare for his cosmos-spanning cult of sadism and destruction.

Demogorgon's worshipers include troglodytes, kuo-toa, and other humanoids that exult in mindless violence and destruction. In times of chaos, humans and others flock to Demogorgon's cult. Demogorgon's priests teach that through savagery, strength, and slaughter, followers thrive and multiply where others fade and die. When war wracks the land—particularly when hordes of monsters sweep over bastions of civilization, leaving them in ruin—Demogorgon's cult grows strong.

Although Demogorgon's cult is small, it leaves a terrible swath of destruction across the land. Demogorgon's cultists organize themselves into crude war bands, relying on battle madness and wrath to overpower their enemies. They wander from town to town, burning and looting everything in their paths. Like miniature aspects of their lord's wrath, they destroy all they see.

No commentary on Demogorgon is complete without mention of Dagon, a mighty demon lord who prowls the deepest waters of the Abyss. If Demogorgon is the machine of destruction, Dagon is the cool, calculating mind behind it, sowing chaos in subtle, intricate ways. Dagon, Lord of the Depths, is an oracle and sage among demons. Creatures of the Abyss, and those brave or foolish enough to seek his counsel, offer him powerful artifacts and favors in return for shares of his knowledge.

The rough alliance between Dagon's intellect and Demogorgon's brute strength makes their combined power formidable. Dagon whispers his knowledge into each of Demogorgon's heads—never both at the same time—thus playing a significant role in the tension between Demogorgon's two minds.

Demogorgon Tactics

Demogorgon attempts to divide and conquer his enemies. He uses inescapable grasp to pull individuals toward him, rips into his chosen targets with his tentacle attack, and uses Aameul's gaze and Hethradiah's gaze to keep other enemies at bay. If sorely pressed, Demogorgon teleports away.

Close blast 5; +35 vs. Will; 1d12 + 10 psychic damage, and the target uses an at-will attack power of Demogorgon's choice against a target of Demogorgon's choice as a free action.

Dual Aspects of Demogorgon (standard; recharge ⚅) ✦ Psychic
Close blast 10; targets enemies; +35 vs. Will; 4d10 + 10 psychic damage, and the target is knocked unconscious (save ends).

Gaze of Abyssal Might (free, when an enemy starts its turn within 10 squares of Demogorgon; at-will) Close burst 10; targets the triggering creature; +37 vs. Will; the target is dazed until the end of its turn.

Double Actions
At the start of combat, Demogorgon makes two initiative checks. Each check corresponds to one of Demogorgon's heads—Aameul or Hethradiah—and Demogorgon takes a turn on both initiative counts. Demogorgon has a full set of actions on each of these turns, and Demogorgon's ability to take an immediate action refreshes on each turn. Each of Demogorgon's heads is unable to use the attack power named for the other head.

JESPER EJSING

Demogorgon Lore

Arcana DC 22: Demogorgon's two heads are named Aameul and Hethradiah. Aameul prefers deception, and Hethradiah favors destruction. Originally, Demogorgon had one head and one mind. A mighty blow from the deity Amoth split him nearly in two before Demogorgon killed Amoth. After he healed, Demogorgon's head remained split. The two heads often disagree with one another but turn disagreement to their mutual advantage. For instance, one head struck an alliance with a powerful lich queen of the deep Shadowfell, and the other killed her to steal her powers.

Arcana DC 32: As comfortable in the seas as on the land, Demogorgon makes his home in a tropical region of the Abyss that is composed of dense jungles, deep oceans, and vast stretches of brine flats. The mightiest of the demon princes, Demogorgon commands creatures from places as as varied as the depths of the Underdark and the decadent palaces of civilization. Troglodytes worship him as a deity, sparking endless battles against their Torog-worshiping kin. Colonies of kuo-toas appeal to him for aid in reclaiming their once-great empire.

Arcana DC 37: Twins born to cultists or kidnapped and indoctrinated at a young age lead Demogorgon's mightiest cults. Each twin serves one of Demogorgon's two personalities. Invariably, such a cult falls to infighting as one high priest turns against the other, hindering many a foul plot.

Arcana DC 39: Temples to Demogorgon often reflect the dual nature of the Prince of Demons. Builders construct each temple symmetrically: One half is dedicated to Aameul, and the other to Hethradiah. Priests, warriors, petitioners, and other functionaries dwell in whichever side of the temple better fits their personalities. A grand cathedral unites the two halves at the center.

Aspect of Demogorgon

The ritual for summoning an aspect of Demogorgon—a manifestation of Demogorgon's form and powers that is less potent than the Prince of Demons—involves "twinning" to represent Demogorgon's two personalities. A cultist might split a sacrifice in half down the center.

An aspect of Demogorgon acts more like one of the demon's heads than the other, being an unbalanced version of the demon. The aspect behaves like Demogorgon but does not commune with either of Demogorgon's minds. It melts into a puddle of venom when it completes the task for which it was summoned.

Aspect of Demogorgon Tactics

An aspect of Demogorgon uses tactics similar to those of the true demon lord. Lacking gaze attacks, it instead uses dominating glare to turn several enemies into allies and then focuses subsequent attacks on those who avoid the effect.

Aspect of Demogorgon Lore

Arcana DC 26: The dark ritual to summon Demogorgon requires a sacrifice of life. Only the most faithful—thus, the most demented—of his followers can successfully complete the ceremony.

Arcana DC 31: Mortals cannot summon Demogorgon, but an aspect of him answers the ritual's call. A temporary manifestation of power, the aspect has no psychic or spiritual connection to the demon lord.

Dagon

Dagon was the first demon lord to appear in the Abyss. None can say whether the Chained God created the Abyss or opened the first passage to its depths. When the first primordials entered the Abyss, they found Dagon already lurking deep within its dark seas and hidden recesses.

Dagon Tactics

Dagon draws his enemies near in battle, particularly warlocks, clerics, and other spellcasters who avoid close fighting. Dozens of clawed tentacles constrict and tear unlucky captives to pieces. A calculating tactician, Dagon uses wrath of the deep to turn the area within 5 squares of him into a killing zone. Dagon uses doom drone and abyssal tides to keep his enemies within that area.

ANDREW HOU

DEMOGORGON

Dagon Lore

Arcana DC 20: Dagon, the oldest of the demon lords, possesses a treasure trove of lost secrets and blasphemous knowledge. He allied with Demogorgon soon after the Abyss formed, and since then the two demon princes have fought Orcus and Graz'zt for domination. Although Dagon sends fewer demons and followers into these battles than Demogorgon does, his knowledge of the Abyss and his keen mind allow their combined minion forces to outmaneuver their enemies.

Arcana DC 30: Dagon's cultists reside in isolated seaside towns and villages. He can call up storms and tidal waves to punish those who defy him and send great schools of fish to those who offer sacrifices to him. Villages prone to the cult descend into savagery, because Dagon demands greater and greater sacrifices of intelligent humanoids in return for his favors.

Arcana DC 35: Wizards and sages willing to trade their sanity for arcane lore seek Dagon's counsel. Arcane casters lead many of his cults. Shadow wars between clerics of Vecna and followers of Dagon are common.

Arcana DC 37: Dagon's temples are underwater, although they include air-filled chambers and caverns for his terrestrial followers. Powerful currents sweep petitioners through water-filled tunnels and deposit them in deep sea caves to allow them access to Dagon's temples.

Kazuul, Exarch of Demogorgon

As a champion of good who served Erathis, Kazuul carved a swath of order through savage lands. In time, though, Kazuul came to embrace destruction. He became a manifestation of the forces of chaos and carnage and joined Demogorgon's faithful. Kazuul turned his back on humanity entirely and accepted an investiture of demonic size and strength from the demon lord. Now an exarch of Demogorgon, he fights for Hethradiah, the aspect of Demogorgon dedicated to savagery.

Twice the size of a mortal human, Kazuul has a heavily armored body deformed by demonic musculature. Wielding a sword and an axe, he stalks the battlefields of the Abyss and beyond, herding an army of demons before him and leaving desolation and gore in his wake.

Kazuul Tactics

Kazuul throws himself into the fray like a madman, shrieking a battle cry and launching himself at the nearest enemy. Only the sight of a powerful magic weapon can lure him from his battle madness. If one of Kazuul's enemies uses a 28th-level or higher magic weapon, he focuses all his attacks on that enemy.

Kazuul once owned the mighty blade Gorgorin the Shatterer but lost it in battle against Hainard, exarch of Pelor and leader of that deity's White Guard. Kazuul burns with desire to find a worthy replacement or to recover Gorgorin.

Kazuul Lore

Arcana DC 28: Kazuul bears two weapons taken from exarchs. One, the Tooth of Grom, is a longsword forged from the tooth of a slain fire titan lord. Kazuul claimed the other weapon, a battleaxe called World Splitter, from Clangeddin Silverbeard, who still harbors a grudge for its loss.

In battle, Kazuul seeks out the enemy who bears the mightiest weapon. He loves nothing more than pulling such armaments from his enemies' shattered corpses.

Arcana DC 33: An ancient prophecy uncovered by the eladrin sage Ellannia proclaims that when Kazuul reclaims the sword Gorgorin, he will use it to slay Demogorgon and will then displace Yeenoghu as lord of the gnolls. The prophecy has spawned infighting and attempts to wrest it from its hiding places in the Feywild and in the world.

Thrarak, Exarch of Demogorgon

Demogorgon's claim to the title "Prince of Demons" has long been disputed, but no being has defeated him to claim that name. He has fought dozens of would-be conquerors, both fellow demon lords and primordials eager to regain their lost might. One such enemy was Storralk, a primordial of stone and earth that fell upon Demogorgon soon after Demogorgon's battle with Amoth split Demogorgon's head in two.

Storralk, failing to recognize Demogorgon's rise to power, foolishly challenged the demon lord to a battle. The shock waves of that cataclysmic battle were felt in the depths of the Abyss and across the Astral Sea.

Demogorgon tore his enemy to pieces. So great was Demogorgon's wrath that he used a powerful ritual given to him by Dagon to extend Storralk's agony. With that ritual, he called forth ettins from the blood Storralk spilled that day. Each ettin carries with it a small shard of Storralk. Every time an ettin feels pain, Storralk's quivering, flayed corpse writhes with agony in his tomb beneath Demogorgon's throne.

Thrarak was one of the first ettins. She remained in Demogorgon's lair, currying favor at first by alternately tending to Storralk's wounds and sawing through the whimpering primordial's flesh. Today, she is the Flayed Maiden, a two-headed agent of vengeance dispatched by Aameul to visit agony upon Demogorgon's hated enemies. She breaks her enemies' minds and bodies, leaving their gibbering husks as a warning to those who would dare cross the Prince of Demons.

Thrarak Tactics

As the exarch of Aameul, the head of Demogorgon that uses deception to destroy its enemies, Thrarak fights using a seemingly random strategy. She shrieks strange oaths and curses containing cryptic riddles, cosmic truths, and forgotten lore.

If on a mission for Demogorgon, Thrarak pursues her designated target with relentless fury. She forgoes attacking so that she can move close to her enemy, even at the risk of taking opportunity attacks. If not on a mission for Demogorgon, she selects an enemy at random and focuses all her attacks on that enemy, despite any attempts by other enemies to distract her.

Thrarak Lore

Arcana DC 26: Thrarak seeks out those among Demogorgon's enemies who have the potential to become threats, such as adventurers beginning on their paths of destiny. She hunts them across the planes, killing them before they can challenge the Prince of Demons.

Arcana DC 31: According to legend, Thrarak possesses the key to freeing Storralk, the primordial of earth and stone trapped beneath Demogorgon's throne. If Thrarak is slain and her heart burned upon Demogorgon's throne, Storralk will break free of the endless torment he has suffered in Demogorgon's realm. In a battle against Demogorgon, the primordial could prove a powerful ally.

Abyssal Marauder

Demogorgon's abyssal marauders swoop upon isolated villages and towns, slaughtering inhabitants, carrying off treasure, and burning buildings to the ground. Marauders roam land and sea. On land, they travel in loose war bands. Seaborne marauders use poorly maintained ships that they barely know how to handle. Pirate captains recruit marauders as shock troops, though only a powerful sea prince—or one who supplies plenty of loot and rum—can keep them in check between battles.

Abyssal Marauder Level 6 Skirmisher
Medium natural humanoid, human XP 250

Initiative +8 Senses Perception +3
HP 69; Bloodied 34
AC 20; Fortitude 18, Reflex 18, Will 17
Speed 6

⊕ Longspear (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; +11 vs. AC; 1d8 + 6 damage, and the abyssal marauder shifts 1 square.

↷ Throwing Axe (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Ranged 5/10; +11 vs. AC; 1d6 + 6 damage, and the abyssal marauder shifts 1 square.

↷/⊕ Howling Charge (standard; encounter)
The abyssal marauder makes a throwing axe attack and then charges the target of that attack.

Death Fury
While bloodied, an abyssal marauder can make two longspear attacks as a standard action, each with a -2 penalty to the attack roll. The marauder cannot use its throwing axe or howling charge while it is bloodied.

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Common
Skills Acrobatics +11, Athletics +11
Str 16 (+6) Dex 16 (+6) Wis 11 (+3)
Con 13 (+4) Int 9 (+2) Cha 10 (+3)
Equipment leather armor, longspear, 2 throwing axes

Abyssal Marauder Tactics

In battle, the abyssal marauder dances through enemies' ranks, shifting to dart out of reach after attacking. Marauders fight alongside shrieking cultists, using their comrades as living barriers. While the cultists' axes rise and fall, marauders dart in to soften up or finish off the enemy.

Abyssal Marauder Lore

Arcana DC 12: Selfish and wrathful, abyssal marauders pledge themselves to Demogorgon and adopt his savagery, becoming his thralls.

Arcana DC 17: Abyssal marauders roam land and sea. On land, they travel in war bands. On the sea, they inexpertly sail ramshackle ships from town to town. Pirate captains recruit marauders to aid in maritime battles, luring them with promises of loot and mayhem.

Berserker Prelate of Demogorgon

Prelates lead the cult in prayers to Demogorgon, begging the Prince of Demons to bring forth the raging beasts that lurk within their hearts.

Berserker Prelate of Demogorgon Level 8 Controller (Leader)
Medium natural humanoid, human XP 350

Initiative +4 Senses Perception +5

Speed 5

⊕ Greatclub (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+13 vs. AC; 1d10 + 7 damage, and the berserker prelate of Demogorgon pushes the target 1 square.

↷ Abyssal Bolt (standard; at-will)
Ranged 10; +12 vs. Will; 1d8 + 4 damage, and the berserker prelate of Demogorgon slides the target 2 squares.

✧ Bloodletter's Call (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Psychic
Close burst 3; targets enemies; +10 vs. Will; 2d6 + 5 psychic damage, and the target is dazed until the end of the berserker prelate of Demogorgon's next turn. Effect: Any ally within the burst gains a +2 bonus to attack rolls until the end of its next turn.

Death Fury (minor; usable only while bloodied; encounter)
Until the end of the encounter, the berserker prelate of Demogorgon can make two greatclub attacks as a standard action, each with a -2 penalty to the attack roll. The prelate cannot use abyssal bolt or bloodletter's call until the end of the encounter.

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Common
Skills Diplomacy +12, Religion +11
Str 17 (+7) Dex 11 (+4) Wis 12 (+5)
Con 14 (+6) Int 14 (+6) Cha 17 (+7)
Equipment hide armor, greatclub, symbol of Demogorgon

Berserker Prelate of Demogorgon Tactics

Berserker prelates of Demogorgon lead the faithful into battle, fighting at the front. Other demon worshipers might prefer to sacrifice their followers to preserve their own lives, but Demogorgon's prelates exult in destruction.

At the start of a fight, a prelate uses its abyssal bolt attack to force enemies apart. Bloodletter's call bogs enemies down and improves the cult's attacks. Once bloodied, the prelate wades amid enemies and uses death fury, committing, at that point, to victory or death in Demogorgon's name.

Berserker Prelate of Demogorgon Lore

Nature DC 14: Berserker prelates of Demogorgon are mad prophets that lapse into trancelike states, babble about visions, and make pronouncements. They lead cults of Demogorgon or act as spiritual mascots.

Nature DC 19: Prelates believe that, like Demogorgon, they each possess two distinct minds. One mind is a set of shackles that restrains the other wild, impulsive mind, which exults in destruction and terror.

Doom Flayer

Doom flayers gain access to Dagon's secrets by offering sacrifices to him and dedicating their lives to acquiring more knowledge to fuel his sprawling plots. They provide arcane support in battle and lend their cunning to channel cultists' brute strength.

Doom Flayer Level 8 Artillery
Medium natural humanoid, human XP 350

Initiative +5 Senses Perception +11

+13 vs. AC; 1d4 + 3 damage.

Force Lash (standard; at-will) ✦ Force, Implement
Ranged 10; +12 vs. Reflex; 1d6 + 6 force damage, and the target is slowed until the end of the doom flayer's next turn.

Grasping Tentacles (standard; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞) ✦ Implement
Ranged 10; +12 vs. Fortitude; 1d8 + 4 damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends). Until the target saves, any ally of the target that starts its turn adjacent to the target is slowed (save ends).

Doom Foretold (minor; encounter)
Ranged 10; the target grants combat advantage until the end of the doom flayer's next turn.

Churning Vortex (standard; encounter) ✦ Implement
Area burst 1 within 10; +10 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 5 damage, the doom flayer slides the target 1 square, and the target is knocked prone. Miss: Half damage.

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Abyssal, Common, Giant
Skills Arcana +13, History +13
Str 8 (+3) Dex 12 (+5) Wis 15 (+6)
Con 11 (+4) Int 19 (+8) Cha 16 (+7)
Equipment robes, dagger, staff, mask of Dagon

Doom Flayer Tactics

Doom flayers use force lash and grasping tentacles to slow or immobilize enemies while allies such as abyssal marauders sweep in to attack and then shift away. A doom flayer saves doom foretold for a particularly dangerous enemy.

Doom Flayer Lore

Nature DC 14: A doom flayer is a mage who worships Dagon and hopes to learn his secrets.

Nature DC 19: A doom flayer gains an advantage over its enemy with spells that reveal disturbing images of a potential future.

Shrieking Cultist of Demogorgon

Demogorgon's cultists desire only to loot, slay, and destroy. Revolutions, war, famine, and other troubles bolster the cult's ranks, because Demogorgon's prelates preach that the best way to avoid suffering is to be among the predators and brutal killers who dole it out.

Shrieking Cultist of Demogorgon Tactics

Demogorgon's shrieking cultists fight with the vengeful fury of the damned. As part of their indoctrination, they embrace nihilistic violence and rage. In battle, they shriek like wild animals with howl of fury and hack at their nearest enemies with greataxes and death wrath.

Shrieking Cultist of Demogorgon Lore

Nature DC 14: Shrieking cultists of Demogorgon give themselves over to the savage rage of Hethradiah, one of Demogorgon's heads. They howl like maniacs in battle and paint themselves in blood.

Nature DC 19: Shrieking cultists yell and scream incoherently, but when many of them gather, anyone already on the path to madness might sense a demonic song buried in the cacophony.

Encounter Groups

Demogorgon's cultists gather in small raiding parties that range far and wide. They rally in large numbers only when resisted by a town's fortifications.

Level 7 Encounter (XP 1,500)
- ✦ 1 abyssal marauder (level 6 skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 berserker prelate of Demogorgon (level 8 controller)

- ✦ Demogorgon (level 34 solo controller)

Demons are among the oldest creatures in the universe. At the birth of the Abyss—the profane and terrifying realm in which demons dwell—only a few demons existed. These demon princes were weapons of unfettered destruction, intended for no other purpose than to bring the universe under the heel of the Chained God. As the Abyss grew, its evil spread into other elemental creatures, creating demons of infinite variety and dreadful power. Demons are scourges of the universe, antagonists of creation and order.

Abyssal Eviscerator

Abyssal eviserators tear into enemies, ripping out their guts in a frenzy of slaughter.

Abyssal Eviscerator Lore

Arcana DC 18: The dimwitted eviscerators often end up under the control of powerful, malign individuals who use them as guardians and muscle.

| Abyssal Eviscerator | Level 14 Brute |
|---|---|
| Medium elemental humanoid (demon) | XP 1,000 |

Abyssal Rotfiend

Abyssal rotfiends are demons of despair and madness, dark souls wrapped in stitched-together demon and devil skins.

| Abyssal Rotfiend | Level 26 Controller |
|---|---|
| Large elemental humanoid (demon, undead) | XP 9,000 |
| Initiative +20 | Senses Perception +20; truesight 20 |

| ⊕ Skullsplitter (standard; at-will) ✦ Psychic | |
| Reach 2; +28 vs. Reflex; 3d8 + 8 psychic damage, or 2d8 + 8 psychic damage against a bloodied target. | |
| ⊰ Conjure Abscess (standard; at-will) ✦ Psychic | |
| Ranged 10; +29 vs. Fortitude; 2d8 + 8 psychic damage, and if the target moves more than 2 squares on its turn, it takes 2d8 extra damage (save ends). If the abyssal rotfiend is bloodied, the target takes the damage for moving 1 or more squares. | |
| ✲ Floating Despair (standard; encounter) ✦ Psychic, Zone | |
| Area burst 2 within 10; the burst creates a zone of dark miasma that lasts until the end of the abyssal rotfiend's next turn. Any enemy that starts its turn within the zone takes 10 psychic damage and grants combat advantage to the rotfiend until the end of its next turn. Sustain Minor: The zone persists, and the rotfiend can move it 5 squares. | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil | Languages Abyssal, Common |
| Str 26 (+21) | Dex 25 (+20) Wis 25 (+20) |

Abyssal Rotfiend Tactics

The abyssal rotfiend unleashes floating despair, moving the zone around the battlefield to affect as many enemies as possible. It uses its aura and conjure abscess on creatures inside its floating despair zone, hindering their escape. The rotfiend relishes inflicting pain on as many targets as possible, and so it prefers to attack uninjured or unbloodied targets over those that are bloodied or injured.

Abyssal Rotfiend Lore

Arcana DC 26: Abyssal rotfiends are demonic undead contained by demon and devil flesh. The spirit within a rotfiend is often a demon soul, although it can come from any evil creature.

Arcana DC 31: Orcus chains abyssal rotfiends in the halls of Everlost, using them as guardians against intruders that can teleport.

Encounter Groups

The abyssal rotfiend favors demonic allies that are maneuverable enough to get between it and dangerous adversaries.

Level 24 Encounter (XP 31,300)

- ✦ 1 abyssal rotfiend (level 26 controller)
- ✦ 1 glabrezu (level 23 elite brute, MM 54)
- ✦ 1 marilith (level 24 elite skirmisher, MM 57)

Bebilith

Originating in the web-strewn realm of Lolth, the spiderlike bebiliths crawl through the Abyss and other planes, hunting and killing for the joy of it.

| Bebilith | Level 18 Solo Brute |

| Action Points 2 | |
| ⊕ Reaving Claw (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 3; +21 vs. AC; 2d10 + 6 damage, and the target takes a cumulative -1 penalty to AC each time it is hit until the end of the encounter. | |
| ⸸ Flashing Claws (standard; at-will) | |
| The bebilith makes two reaving claw attacks against two different targets. | |
| ⸸ Venomous Bite (standard; usable only while bloodied; recharge ⚅) ✦ Poison | |
| +21 vs. AC; 2d8 + 6 damage, and ongoing 10 poison damage (save ends). | |

RALPH HORSLEY

Flaming Web (minor; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Fire
Close blast 5; +19 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 10 fire damage, and the target is slowed and takes ongoing 10 fire damage (save ends both). First Failed Saving Throw: The target is restrained instead of slowed and takes ongoing 15 fire damage (save ends both).

Hunter's Reflexes (immediate reaction, when an enemy moves into an adjacent space; recharge ⚄ ⚅)
The bebilith shifts 4 squares. This shift can move through enemies' spaces.

Dangersense
The bebilith acts two times in a round, on initiative counts 20 and 10. It cannot delay or ready actions. On each turn, it has a standard action instead of its normal allotment of actions. It can use one immediate action between each pair of turns.

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Abyssal
Str 22 (+15) Dex 25 (+16) Wis 20 (+14)
Con 22 (+15) Int 5 (+6) Cha 19 (+13)

Bebilith Tactics

A bebilith moves around constantly during combat, slowing foes with the burning strands of its flaming web.

Bebilith Lore

Arcana DC 20: Bebiliths often serve Lolth, but their limited intellect makes them poor participants in drow schemes. Drow summon these demons as engines of destruction or entrap them for use as guardians.

Encounter Groups

Lolth is fond of bebiliths, so they're often found among drow and other denizens of the Demonweb Pits.

Level 20 Encounter (XP 14,200)
- 1 bebilith (level 18 solo brute)
- 3 drider shadowspinners (level 14 skirmisher, MM 93)
- 1 drow priest (level 15 controller, MM 95)

Bloodseep Demon

The bloodseep demon's poison blood weeps and spurts from its translucent, cracking body, hastening the death of its enemies while healing its allies.

Bloodseep Demon Level 7 Skirmisher (Leader)
Medium elemental humanoid (demon) XP 300

Initiative +9 Senses Perception +8; darkvision
Weeping Poison (Healing, Poison) aura 2; each enemy that starts its turn within the aura takes 5 poison damage. While the bloodseep demon is bloodied, any demon that starts its turn within the aura regains 5 hit points.
HP 79; Bloodied 39
AC 21; Fortitude 18, Reflex 20, Will 19
Resist 10 variable (1/encounter)
Speed 7, teleport 3

⊕ Claw (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison
+12 vs. AC; 2d4 + 5 damage, and ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends).

↓ Poison Portal Strike (standard; recharge ⚅) ✦ Teleportation
The bloodseep demon teleports 5 squares and makes a claw attack. If the attack hits, the bloodseep demon teleports 5 squares.

Poison Blast (minor; encounter) ✦ Healing, Poison
Close blast 5; targets enemies; +10 vs. Fortitude; 1d4 + 5 poison damage. Effect: Each demon in the blast regains 1d4 + 5 hit points.

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Abyssal, Common
Str 15 (+5) Dex 19 (+7) Wis 11 (+3)
Con 15 (+5) Int 11 (+3) Cha 17 (+6)

Bloodseep Demon Tactics

The bloodseep demon teleports near other demons so that its aura can affect them. It uses poison blast or its claw attack on enemies, but allows allies to do most of the damage while it heals them.

Bloodseep Demon Lore

Arcana DC 14: Bloodseep demons like to weaken their foes before facing them in combat, such as by tainting enemy food sources.

Encounter Groups

Bloodseep demons prefer grouping with other demons, particularly those that enjoy standing toe-to-toe with enemies.

Level 7 Encounter (XP 1,500)
- 2 barlguras (level 8 brute, MM 53)
- 1 bloodseep demon (level 7 skirmisher)
- 2 evistros (level 6 brute, MM 54)

| ⊕ Savage Claws (standard; at-will) | |
| +5 vs. AC; 2d6 + 2 damage. | |
| ⸸ Frenzy of Claws (free, when first bloodied; encounter) | |
| The dretch attacks one or two creatures with savage claws. | |
| ✧ Vile Death (when the dretch drops to 0 hit points) ✦ Poison, Zone | |
| Close burst 1; the burst creates a zone of poison centered on the dretch that lasts until what would be the start of the dretch's next turn. Any nondemon that enters the zone or starts its turn there takes 5 poison damage. | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil | Languages Abyssal |
| Str 17 (+4) | Dex 14 (+3) Wis 11 (+1) |
| Con 14 (+3) | Int 5 (-2) Cha 7 (-1) |

Dretch Tactics

Dretches attack as a gang to combine their sickening miasma auras. Although they are incapable of inventing any other tactics, they can be effectively directed by a leader.

Dretch Lore

Arcana DC 10: Quarrelsome and stupid, dretches can be tricked into fighting one another if no leader is present.

Encounter Groups

Demons of greater power and intelligence often use dretches as the first wave of an attack, both to see what their enemies are capable of and for the sheer amusement of watching the dretches meet their doom.

Level 7 Encounter (XP 1,700)

- ✦ 1 bloodseep demon (level 7 skirmisher)
- ✦ 8 dretches (level 2 brute)
- ✦ 2 gnaw demons (level 5 skirmisher)

Gnaw Demon

GNAW DEMONS CONSUME EVERYTHING they can get their hands on. Although they can subsist on inanimate objects, they prefer living flesh.

| Gnaw Demon | Level 5 Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Small elemental humanoid (demon) | XP 200 |
| Initiative +2 | Senses Perception +3; darkvision |

| Str 15 (+4) | Dex 7 (+0) Wis 12 (+3) |
| Con 18 (+6) | Int 9 (+1) Cha 9 (+1) |

Gnaw Demon Tactics

Slow and clumsy, gnaw demons keep to the edge of the battlefield until an enemy becomes bloodied. Then they use hungry teleport to close with that enemy and attack it.

Gnaw Demon Lore

Arcana DC 12: Gnaw demons are cowardly demons that usually choose escape over destruction. Fleeing gnaw demons can become distracted by a weak target, so chasing them down is often as simple as locating their next likely victim.

Encounter Groups

Gnaw demons work on the promise of food.

Level 6 Encounter (XP 1,250)

- 1 gnoll demonic scourge (level 8 brute, MM 132)
- 1 gnoll fang of Yeenoghu (level 7 skirmisher)
- 3 gnaw demons (level 5 skirmisher)

Kazrith

Kazriths prowl the murky depths of lakes, underground waterways, and flooded tunnels.

| Kazrith | Level 20 Lurker |
|---|---|
| Medium elemental magical beast (demon, water) | XP 2,800 |
| Initiative +22 | Senses Perception +19; tremorsense 20 |

| ✣ Acidic Retreat (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Acid | |
| Close burst 2; +23 vs. Reflex; 1d6 + 4 damage, and ongoing 10 acid damage (save ends). Effect: The kazrith burrows its speed. | |
| Acidic Seepage (usable only while bloodied) ✦ Acid | |
| The kazrith gains a +4 bonus to its burrow speed, and at the start of its turn creatures adjacent to it take 10 acid damage. | |
| Slippery | |
| A kazrith makes saving throws against immobilized, restrained, and slowed conditions at the start of its turn as well as at the end of its turn. | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil | Languages Abyssal, Primordial |
| Skills Stealth +23 | |
| Str 22 (+16) | Dex 26 (+18) Wis 19 (+14) |
| Con 20 (+15) | Int 14 (+12) Cha 12 (+11) |

WAYNE ENGLAND/JASON A. ENGLE

Kazrith Tactics

The kazrith lurks underground and uses tremorsense to locate its enemies. Once it has chosen a target, it surfaces and attacks, using acidic retreat after the attack. It waits for the acid to run its course and then resurfaces to finish off the victim.

Kazrith Lore

Arcana DC 22: Kazrith demons are water-dwelling predators of the planes. They lurk in lakes, rivers, and waterways, waiting for unwary prey to pass by. Kazriths can also burrow. Acid sprays from a kazrith's pores, aiding the demon's ability to burrow and leaving a fountain of acid in its wake.

Kazrith and rupture demon

Arcana DC 25: Kazriths travel between bodies of water by creating vast networks of interconnecting flooded tunnels. These networks lie close to the surface so that the kazriths can sense prey overhead. Although most kazriths dwell in the Elemental Chaos, they sometimes find natural gates leading into the world.

Encounter Groups

Kazriths are often found among other sinister aquatic monsters.

Level 18 Encounter (XP 10,200)
- 1 aboleth lasher (level 17 brute, MM 8)
- 4 aboleth servitors (level 16 minion, MM 9)
- 1 aboleth slime mage (level 17 artillery, MM 8)
- 2 kazriths (level 20 lurker)

Needle Demon

Needle demons turn enemies against one another by making them believe that their closest friends have betrayed them. Needle demons wreak havoc and destruction throughout the Abyss and take any opportunity to bring that chaos to the mortal realms.

| Needle Demon | Level 12 Controller |
|---|---|
| Medium elemental humanoid (demon) | XP 700 |
| Initiative +10 | Senses Perception +9; darkvision |
| HP 123; Bloodied 61 | |
| AC 26; Fortitude 23, Reflex 23, Will 25 | |
| Resist 15 variable (2/encounter) | |
| Speed 6 | |
| ⊕ Claws (standard; at-will) | |
| +17 vs. AC; 2d6 + 5 damage. | |
| ⸸ Claws of Betrayal (standard; requires combat advantage against each target; at-will) | |
| The needle demon makes two claw attacks. If both attacks hit the same target, the target takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends). | |
| ⸸ Tail Whip (immediate reaction, when an enemy moves into a square adjacent to the needle demon; at-will ) | |
| +17 vs. AC; 1d6 + 2 damage. | |
| ✧ Rage of the Betrayed (standard; recharge ⚅) ✦ Charm | |
| Close blast 5; targets enemies; +16 vs. Will; the target is dominated (save ends). | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil | Languages Abyssal |
| Skills Bluff +17, Insight +14, Intimidate +17 | |
| Str 16 (+9) | Dex 19 (+10) Wis 17 (+9) |
| Con 19 (+10) | Int 14 (+8) Cha 22 (+12) |

Needle Demon Tactics

A needle demon uses rage of the betrayed on as many targets as possible. It then moves around and looks for opportunities to attack with claws of betrayal. If rage of the betrayed recharges, the needle demon might save its next use for escaping from a hopeless fight.

Needle Demon Lore

Arcana DC 16: Needle demons possess greater cunning than most give them credit for, and they are more patient than many other demons. This craftiness often puts needle demons in the role of advisors to more powerful demons and even as the true powers behind manipulated puppets. However, their hunger for watching foes fight one another often gets the better of them, and they are rarely capable of more than simple deceptions.

Encounter Groups

Needle demons will join any cause that brings destruction and bloodshed, but it is never long before they turn on their allies.

Level 9 Encounter (XP 2,100)
- 1 cacklefiend hyena (level 7 brute, MM 166)
- 1 gnoll demonic scourge (level 8 brute, MM 132)
- 3 gnoll claw fighters (level 6 skirmisher, MM 132)
- 1 needle demon (level 12 controller)

Level 12 Encounter (XP 3,300)
- 1 drow arachnomancer (level 13 artillery, MM 94)
- 3 mezzodemons (level 11 soldier, MM 58)
- 1 needle demon (level 12 controller)

Neldrazu

Neldrazus hide in the shadows on the edge of a battle, then charge in to snatch enemies away. Once a neldrazu gets its target alone, it tears into it with its four savage claws.

| Neldrazu | Level 8 Lurker |
|---|---|
| Large elemental humanoid (demon) | XP 350 |
| Initiative +13 | Senses Perception +7; darkvision |
| HP 71; Bloodied 35; see also bloodied abduction | |
| AC 22; Fortitude 20, Reflex 21, Will 19 | |
| Resist 10 variable (1/encounter) | |
| Speed 8, climb 6 (spider climb) | |
| ⊕ Slashing Claw (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; +13 vs. AC; 2d6 + 5 damage. | |
| ⸸ Abduct (move; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Teleportation | |
| Reach 2; +11 vs. Reflex; targets enemies only; the neldrazu teleports the target 10 squares, and the neldrazu teleports to a space adjacent to the target. Miss: The neldrazu teleports 10 squares. | |
| ⸸ Flaying Claws (standard; usable when only one enemy is within 5 squares of the neldrazu; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; +13 vs. AC; 4d6 + 5 damage, and ongoing 5 damage (save ends). | |
| Bloodied Abduction (free, when first bloodied; encounter) ✦ Teleportation | |
| The neldrazu teleports an enemy adjacent to it 5 squares, and the neldrazu teleports to a space adjacent to the creature. | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil | Languages Abyssal |
| Skills Stealth +14 | |

| Con 17 (+7) | Int 7 (+2) Cha 11 (+4) |

Neldrazu Tactics

The neldrazu looks for a lightly armored enemy and uses abduct to bring it among the neldrazu's allies. Once the enemy is isolated, the neldrazu tears it apart with flaying claws. If attacking in groups, neldrazus teleport in different directions, spreading out their enemies as much as possible.

Neldrazu Lore

Arcana DC 14: Although difficult to control, neldrazus make excellent abductors for slavers or kidnappers that don't mind if their goods are slightly damaged.

Encounter Groups

Neldrazus are usually encountered with other demons, but take any opportunity to wreak havoc. They prefer being near places where they can keep their victims isolated, such as narrow ledges, steep slopes, or pit traps.

Level 7 Encounter (XP 1,650)

- 2 barlguras (level 8 brute, MM 53)
- 2 neldrazus (level 8 lurker)
- 1 tiefling heretic (level 6 artillery, MM 250)

FRANZ VOHWINKEL

Nycademon

Rippling with muscles and thick tendons, nycademons are winged terrors that soar over the charred landscape of the Abyss, searching for prey on the open expanses. These predators harry ground creatures for amusement, lifting their hapless victims high into the air and dropping them.

| Nycademon | Level 22 Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Large elemental humanoid (demon) | XP 4,150 |
| Initiative +21 Senses Perception +17 | |
| HP 210; Bloodied 105 | |
| AC 35; Fortitude 35, Reflex 35, Will 32 | |
| Resist 20 variable (2/encounter) | |
| Speed 6, fly 6 (hover) | |
| ⊕ Wicked Axe (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; +27 vs. AC; 2d8 + 5 damage (crit 3d8 + 21), and ongoing 5 damage (save ends). | |
| ⸸ Wicked Edges (standard; at-will) | |
| The nycademon makes two wicked axe attacks. | |
| ⸸ Snatch (standard; at-will) | |
| Before or after the attack, the nycademon flies 6 squares. Reach 2; +25 vs. Fortitude; the target is grabbed. | |
| Strong Flyer | |
| When a nycademon moves a grabbed target, it does not have to make a Strength attack. While bloodied, a nycademon can fly at full speed instead of half speed when moving a grabbed target. | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Abyssal, Common | |
| Skills Intimidate +21 | |
| Str 25 (+18) Dex 26 (+19) Wis 13 (+12) | |
| Con 26 (+19) Int 8 (+10) Cha 21 (+16) | |
| Equipment 2 greataxes | |

Nycademon Tactics

A nycademon snatches a target and then flies into the air, attacking the target with wicked edges until the creature escapes. If the creature proves particularly dangerous, the nycademon drops the enemy from a high altitude and returns to the battle to grab new prey.

Nycademon Lore

Arcana DC 24: Nycademons are nicknamed "sky demons" for their tendency to swoop down and grab their enemies, carrying them high into the sky and releasing them to fall to their deaths.

Arcana DC 29: Nycademons put great stock in their physical superiority over their foes. This belief makes them overconfident when facing enemies that don't immediately show signs of power and hesitant when facing enemies that show great strength.

Encounter Groups

Nycademons are mercenary enough to work with almost any creature in the short term, but their superiority complexes soon infuriate most allies.

Level 21 Encounter (XP 17,250)

- 1 goristro (level 19 elite brute, MM 55)
- 3 nycademons (level 22 skirmisher)
- 1 rot harbinger (level 22 artillery, MM 223)

Pod Demon

The disgusting and demented pod demon creates spawn that it uses to corner and terrorize other creatures.

| Pod Demon | Level 15 Elite Artillery |

| Detonate Minion (minor 1/round; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Poison | |
| Ranged 10; targets one podspawn; the podspawn explodes, dropping to 0 hit points and dealing 1d8 + 3 poison damage to each creature adjacent to the podspawn. | |
| Spew Podspawn (standard; at-will) ✦ Acid | |
| Close blast 3; +18 vs. Reflex; 2d6 + 5 acid damage. | |
| Generate Podspawn (standard; recharges when first bloodied) ✦ Poison | |
| Close burst 2; +18 vs. Reflex; 3d6 + 5 poison damage. Effect: If the pod demon has fewer than four podspawn, it spawns podspawn into unoccupied squares within the burst, bringing its total number of minions to four. | |
| Fling Podspawn (standard; at-will) ✦ Acid | |
| Area burst 1 within 10; +18 vs. Reflex; 2d6 + 5 acid damage. | |
| Combat Advantage | |
| A pod demon's attack deals 2d6 extra damage to any target granting combat advantage to it. | |
| Spawn | |
| If a pod demon has fewer than four podspawn at the start of its turn, it spawns one podspawn within 2 squares of it. | |
| Transfer Essence (move; at-will) | |
| The pod demon swaps positions with a podspawn within 10 squares of it. | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages Abyssal, Common |

| Con 21 (+12) | Int 5 (+4) | Cha 15 (+9) |

Pod Demon Tactics

A pod demon prefers to enter combat with four minions. It sends minions out to grant combat advantage to itself and its allies. Then it uses detonate minion before creating more minions, always attempting to have four minions alive at a time.

Pod Demon Lore

Arcana DC 18: Pod demons are demons of madness that spawn tiny versions of themselves from their backs. A pod demon can psychically transfer its consciousness to any of its spawn, transforming that spawn's body into a new pod demon while its former body shrinks to podspawn form.

Arcana DC 23: The madness that possesses pod demons seems related to the Chained God, and some pod demons carry or wrap themselves in chains as a symbol of their allegiance.

Encounter Groups

Pod demons work with any demon that promises them the chance to terrorize the weak and fearful with their podspawn.

Level 16 Encounter (XP 7,200)
- ✦ 1 immolith (level 15 controller, MM 56)
- ✦ 1 pod demon (level 15 elite artillery)
- ✦ 4 podspawn (level 15 minion skirmisher)
- ✦ 2 red slaads (level 15 soldier, MM 238)

Runespiral Demon Tactics

A runespiral demon circles the periphery of a battlefield while attacking with focused strike and charged lightning burst. It shifts away from opponents to get the most out of arcane arc.

Runespiral Demon Lore

Arcana DC 16: A runespiral demon has a thick shell carved deeply with arcane runes that give it mastery over lightning energy.

Arcana DC 21: Although lightning-powered runespiral demons are the most common, those using other types of energy exist, each bearing a different style of runes.

Encounter Groups

Other demons muster runespiral demons to their cause with a mixture of threats and promises of carnage.

Level 5 Encounter (XP 1,200)
- ✦ 2 evistros (level 6 brute, MM 54)
- ✦ 1 human hexer (level 7 controller)
- ✦ 2 runespiral demons (level 5 artillery)

Rupture Demon

Symbiotic demons composed of evil sludge, rupture demons slink through all layers of the Abyss, following behind more powerful demons and consuming the remains of their kills.

| Rupture Demon | Level 5 Minion Soldier |
|---|---|
| Small elemental magical beast (demon) | XP 50 |
| Initiative +8 Senses Perception +4; low-light vision | |
| HP 1; a missed attack never damages a minion; see also demonic infestation. | |
| AC 20; Fortitude 16, Reflex 18, Will 16 | |
| Speed 6, spider climb 3 | |
| ⊕ Slimy Extrusion (standard; at-will) | |
| +12 vs. AC; 5 damage. | |
| ⸸ Enveloping Embrace (standard; encounter) | |
| No attack roll; the target is restrained (save ends), and the rupture demon drops to 0 hit points. | |
| Demonic Infestation (when the rupture demon drops to 0 hit points) ✦ Healing | |
| The rupture demon erupts in a gory explosion of ichor and tentacles that latch on to a demon within 5 squares of the rupture demon and of level 10 or lower. That demon regains 5 hit points and gains a +2 bonus to melee damage rolls until the end of the encounter. This bonus is cumulative with other demonic infestation bonuses (maximum +10). | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil Languages Abyssal | |
| Str 15 (+4) Dex 18 (+6) Wis 15 (+4) | |
| Con 11 (+2) Int 4 (-1) Cha 4 (-1) | |

Rupture Demon Tactics

A rupture demon possesses little sense of self and virtually no sense of self-preservation. It wades into melee, attacking any creatures that attack it. It uses enveloping embrace when it causes maximum destruction or when a more powerful or intelligent demon demands it.

Rupture Demon Lore

Arcana DC 12: Rupture demons are oily demons made of liquefied evil. Barely sentient, rupture demons never work for themselves or have their own plans. In any place where a rupture demon is found, it's certain that a more powerful demon lurks nearby.

Arcana DC 17: Rupture demons are the weakest spawns of Juiblex, the demon lord of ooze and slime. Sages speculate that the rupture demons' aiding of other demons through their deaths must be part of some scheme by the enigmatic demon lord.

Encounter Groups

As servitors of Juiblex, rupture demons are found among other slimes and oozes.

Level 6 Encounter (XP 1,250)
- ✦ 1 black pudding (level 8 elite brute)
- ✦ 1 evistro (level 6 brute, MM 54)
- ✦ 6 rupture demons (level 5 minion soldier)

Yochlol

Yochlols are the handmaidens of Lolth, feared by drow and other creatures as the Spider Queen's spies. These horrific fiends combine the subtle cruelty of drow with the savagery of demons.

| Yochlol Tempter | Level 17 Controller |
|---|---|
| Medium elemental humanoid (demon, shapechanger) | XP 1,600 |
| Initiative +14 | Senses Perception +18; darkvision |

| AC 31; Fortitude 27, Reflex 29, Will 30 | |
| Resist 10 poison | |
| Speed 6, climb 8 (spider climb) | |
| Demon Form Powers | |
| The yochlol tempter has the following powers in demon form. | |
| Tentacle (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; +22 vs. AC; 1d4 + 4 damage. | |
| Amorphous Flurry (standard; at-will) | |
| The yochlol tempter makes four tentacle attacks. A target hit by two or more tentacle attacks takes a –4 penalty to Will (save ends). | |
| Maddening Web (standard; recharge ⚁ ⚂ ⚃ while bloodied) ✦ Psychic | |
| Area burst 2 within 10; targets enemies; +21 vs. Reflex; the target is immobilized and takes ongoing 5 psychic damage (save ends both). | |
| Drow Shape (minor; at-will) ✦ Polymorph | |
| A yochlol tempter can alter its physical form to take on the appearance of a unique female drow. | |
| Drow Form Powers | |
| The yochlol tempter has the following powers in drow form. | |
| Spider Touch (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison | |
| +21 vs. Reflex; 1d6 + 5 damage, and ongoing 10 poison damage (save ends). | |
| Venom Bolt (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison | |
| Ranged 10; +21 vs. Reflex; 1d6 + 5 damage, and the target is slowed and takes ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends both). | |
| Seductive Glare (minor 1/round; recharges when the target saves) ✦ Charm, Reliable | |
| Ranged 10; +23 vs. Will; the target is dazed (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target is stunned (save ends). Second Failed Saving Throw: The target is dominated (save ends). | |
| Demon Shape (minor; at-will) ✦ Polymorph | |
| A yochlol tempter can alter its physical form to resume its demon form. | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil | Languages Abyssal, Common, Elven |
| Skills Bluff +20, Intimidate +20, Religion +17, Stealth +19 | |
| Str 18 (+12) | Dex 23 (+14) Wis 21 (+13) |
| Con 14 (+10) | Int 19 (+12) Cha 24 (+15) |

Yochlol Tactics

Typically starting a fight in drow form, a yochlol shifts between its forms in battle, and it uses venom bolt and spider touch to weaken its enemies. When pressed into melee, it adopts its true form and unleashes amorphous flurry. If the flurry reduces a foe's Will, it shifts back into drow form to use seductive glare.

Yochlol Lore

Arcana DC 13: Yochlols are among the most favored of Lolth's servants, and the Spider Queen sends her handmaidens to attend priests that have gained her favor.

Arcana DC 20: A yochlol can adopt two forms. In its true form, it is a strange, oozelike creature similar to a heap of filth, with several tentacles and a red, baleful eye. In its other form, it appears as an attractive female drow.

Arcana DC 25: Yochlols are so skilled at infiltrating drow society that they might operate undetected for years at a time, even attaining positions of great power.

Encounter Groups

Yochlols work within drow societies, driving Lolth's mortal servants to commit horrific acts of cruelty and evil in the Spider Queen's name. They can usually be found in the company of Lolth's priests and templars.

Level 16 Encounter (XP 7,600)

- 2 drow arachnomancers (level 13 artillery, MM 94)
- 1 drow blademaster (level 13 elite skirmisher, MM 94)
- 1 drow priest (level 15 controller, MM 95)
- 2 yochlol tempters (level 17 controller)

CHIPPY

In ages long past, benevolent angels took it upon themselves to descend to the world in mortal form. Now their spirits are perpetually reincarnated as mortal devas, creatures driven to bring light to the world—or corrupted by material influences to oppose the goals of their kind.

Deva Knight-Errant

A deva knight-errant travels the world as a champion of holy causes. A knight-errant might prove a worthy ally to a party of adventurers. However, a holy champion can be a deadly adversary if the party's motives are less than pure.

Deva Knight-Errant Level 11 Soldier (Leader)
Medium immortal humanoid XP 600

Initiative +7 Senses Perception +8
HP 111; Bloodied 55
AC 27; Fortitude 24, Reflex 22, Will 22 (+1 to all defenses against bloodied enemies)
Resist 10 necrotic, 10 radiant
Speed 5

⊕ Broadsword (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+18 vs. AC; 2d10 + 2 damage, and the target is marked until the end of the deva knight-errant's next turn.

⸸ Rejuvenating Smite (standard; recharges after hitting with a broadsword attack) ✦ Healing, Weapon
+18 vs. AC; 2d10 + 2 damage, and the deva knight-errant regains hit points equal to half the damage dealt.

⌖ Martyr's Cry (standard; recharge ⚅) ✦ Implement, Psychic
Close burst 3; targets enemies; +16 vs. Will; 2d6 + 4 psychic damage, and the target is marked (save ends).

Inner Radiance ✦ Radiant
Any attack a deva knight-errant makes can instead deal radiant damage. In addition, a knight-errant can take a -2 penalty to an attack roll to deal 4 extra radiant damage on the attack.

Health Transfer (minor; encounter) ✦ Healing
The deva knight-errant takes up to 25 damage, and one ally within 10 squares of it regains the same number of hit points. The knight-errant can then transfer one condition from the ally to itself.

Memory of a Thousand Lifetimes (free, when the deva knight-errant makes an attack roll, a skill check, or an ability check and dislikes the result; encounter)
The knight-errant adds 1d6 to the triggering roll.

Alignment Good Languages Common
Skills History +16, Insight +14, Religion +16
Str 21 (+10) Dex 10 (+5) Wis 16 (+8)
Con 15 (+7) Int 18 (+9) Cha 18 (+9)
Equipment plate armor, heavy shield, broadsword, holy symbol

Deva Zealot

Deva zealots wield their belief as well as their weapons in the battle against evil.

Deva Zealot Level 14 Skirmisher
Medium immortal humanoid XP 1,000

Initiative +15 Senses Perception +15
HP 135; Bloodied 67
AC 28; Fortitude 25, Reflex 27, Will 25 (+1 to all defenses against bloodied enemies)
Resist 10 necrotic, 10 radiant
Speed 6

⊕ Falchion (standard; at-will) ✦ Radiant, Weapon
+19 vs. AC; 4d4 + 5 damage (crit 8d4 + 21) plus 1d6 radiant damage.

⸸ Path of Virtue (standard; encounter)
The deva zealot shifts half its speed and makes one falchion attack against each enemy within reach during the move.

Dazzling Soul (minor; recharge ⚃ ⚄ ⚅)
The deva zealot gains concealment until the start of its next turn, and any other square within 6 squares of the zealot is illuminated by bright light. Any square within 12 squares of the zealot is illuminated by dim light.

Radiant Retribution (free, when an enemy hits the deva zealot on the zealot's turn; at-will) ✦ Radiant
The triggering enemy takes half the attack's damage as radiant damage.

Memory of a Thousand Lifetimes (free, when the deva zealot makes an attack roll, a skill check, or an ability check and dislikes the result; encounter)
The zealot adds 1d6 to the triggering roll.

Skirmish ✦ Radiant
If a deva zealot ends its move at least 4 squares from the square where it started the move, its attacks deal 1d6 extra radiant damage until the start of its next turn.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common
Skills Acrobatics +18, Religion +16, Stealth +18
Str 20 (+12) Dex 22 (+13) Wis 16 (+10)
Con 15 (+9) Int 14 (+9) Cha 20 (+12)
Equipment leather armor, falchion

Deva Fallen Star

A deva fallen star manipulates the field of battle, reshaping fate to suit its corrupt plans.

Deva Fallen Star Level 26 Artillery
Medium immortal humanoid XP 9,000

Initiative +15 Senses Perception +19
HP 188; Bloodied 94; see also vile rebirth
AC 38; Fortitude 37, Reflex 37, Will 38 (+1 to all defenses against bloodied enemies)
Resist 15 necrotic, 15 radiant
Speed 6, fly 8 (clumsy)

⊕ Rebuking Rod (standard; at-will) ✦ Implement, Psychic, Radiant
+31 vs. Will; 2d8 + 8 psychic and radiant damage, and the deva fallen star makes a secondary attack against the target. Secondary Attack: +31 vs. Fortitude; the fallen star gains total concealment against the target (save ends).

Fateful Transposition (immediate interrupt, when an enemy attacks the deva fallen star; encounter) ✦ Teleportation
Ranged 10; +31 vs. Will; the target swaps positions with the deva fallen star. The triggering enemy's attack deals half damage to the fallen star, and the target takes damage equal to half the attack's damage.

Forgetting Ray (standard; at-will) ✦ Charm, Psychic
Ranged 20; +31 vs. Reflex; 3d6 + 8 psychic damage, and the target can use only basic attacks and at-will powers during its next turn.

Soul Scourge (standard; recharges when first bloodied) ✦ Necrotic, Radiant
Area burst 2 within 15; targets enemies; +31 vs. Will; 1d6 + 8 radiant damage, and the target takes ongoing 15 necrotic damage (save ends).

Fate Manipulation (free; recharges when first bloodied)
The deva fallen star adds 1d8 to or subtracts 1d8 from an attack roll, ability check, or saving throw made by itself or any creature within 10 squares of it.

Vile Rebirth (when the deva fallen star is reduced to 0 hit points by non-necrotic damage) ✦ Healing
The fallen star does not die and instead remains at 0 hit points until the start of its next turn, when it regains 25 hit points, loses resistance to radiant damage, and gains the undead keyword. This power recharges, and the triggering damage type changes to nonradiant damage.

Alignment Evil Languages Common, Supernal

STEVE PRESCOTT

Deva Lore

Religion DC 16: A deva transforms spontaneously from bodiless soul to physical form, awakening as an adult already in possession of the skills required to defend the world against evil. With strong ties to fate, devas take the role of born heroes, leaders—or villains.

Religion DC 21: The life cycle of the deva parallels that of the rakshasa (MM 217)—a spirit constantly reincarnating to mortal form. When a deva gives in to iniquity to become a fallen star, its soul is corrupted. If it dies in that state, it returns to combat as an undead; if finally slain by radiant damage, it carries its wickedness into its next life and becomes a rakshasa—a fate that even evil devas revile.

Encounter Groups

Deva zealots and knights-errant are most often found leading or assisting creatures dedicated to a worthy cause. However, evil devas can create alliances with even the foulest creatures.

Level 27 Encounter (XP 58,000)
- ✦ 2 deva fallen stars (level 26 artillery)
- ✦ 2 efreet karadjins (level 28 soldier, MM 100)
- ✦ 2 efreet pyresingers (level 25 controller, MM 99)

Devils rebelled against the gods and were banished to the Nine Hells, where they forever bicker and plot. Devious and nefarious, devils find no scheme too convoluted.

Assassin Devil

Murder looms large as a tactic in the plots of devils, and for the purpose of murder, they have no better tool than the assassin devil. Shrouded in a cloak of shadows, this devil is a consummate killer.

| Assassin Devil | Level 24 Lurker |
|---|---|
| Medium immortal humanoid (devil) | XP 6,050 |
| Initiative +25 | Senses Perception +23; darkvision |
| HP 167; Bloodied 83 | |
| AC 38; Fortitude 34, Reflex 38, Will 36 | |
| Resist 25 fire | |
| Speed 12 | |
| ⨺ Shadow Sword (standard; at-will) ✦ Necrotic, Weapon | |
| +27 vs. Fortitude; 3d6 + 5 necrotic damage, and ongoing 5 damage (save ends). | |
| ✲ Shadow Net (standard; recharges when the assassin devil uses shadow cloak) ✦ Necrotic | |
| Area burst 2 within 10; +26 vs. Reflex; the target is restrained, is weakened, and takes ongoing 10 necrotic damage (save ends all). While a target is affected by shadow net, the assassin devil cannot use its shadow cloak power. | |
| Dangerous Shadows | |
| An assassin devil's shadow sword attack deals 4d6 extra necrotic damage against any target granting combat advantage to it. | |
| Shadow Cloak (standard; recharges when no creatures are affected by shadow net) ✦ Illusion | |
| The assassin devil is invisible until it hits or misses with an attack. | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages Common, Supernal |
| Skills Stealth +27 | |
| Str 21 (+17) Dex 28 (+21) Wis 25 (+19) | |
| Con 17 (+15) Int 17 (+15) Cha 13 (+13) | |
| Equipment leather armor, sword | |

Assassin Devil Tactics

An assassin devil uses shadow net on as many enemies as it can, and then attacks with shadow sword amplified by dangerous shadows. When too many unrestrained enemies threaten it, an assassin devil uses its shadow cloak to hide and position itself for another shadow net attack.

Assassin Devil Lore

Religion DC 24: Rarely the masterminds of any plot, assassin devils fulfill the evil will of others, taking great pride in their lethal occupation.

Religion DC 29: Many assassin devils report directly to Asmodeus, covertly feeding him the secrets of their patrons. Devils that discover this treachery rarely respond with accusations and attacks. Instead, they attempt to dispose of the treacherous servants or manipulate them into giving Asmodeus favorable information.

Encounter Groups

Assassin devils prefer to work alone because other devils get in their way. When they face a tough opponent, they rely on war devils and other melee combatants to distract the enemy while they move in for the kill.

Level 22 Encounter (XP 23,200)
- ✦ 2 assassin devils (level 24 lurker)
- ✦ 1 human diabolist (level 20 artillery)
- ✦ 2 war devils (level 22 brute, MM 67)

Erinyes

Furies of vengeance and rage, erinyes exist for battle. Although they are not the most powerful warriors in the Nine Hells, their combat skills inspire allies.

| Erinyes | Level 13 Soldier (Leader) |
|---|---|
| Medium immortal humanoid (devil) | XP 800 |
| Initiative +10 | Senses Perception +9; darkvision |
| Blade Shield aura 3; each ally within the aura gains a +2 bonus to AC. | |
| HP 131; Bloodied 65; see also bloody spiral | |
| AC 29; Fortitude 25, Reflex 23, Will 23 | |
| Speed 5 | |
| ⨺ Compelling Strike (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| +20 vs. AC; 2d10 + 3 damage, and one ally within 5 squares of the erinyes gains 8 temporary hit points. | |
| ⸸ Flitting Blade (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| Targets one, two, or three creatures; +18 vs. AC; 1d10 + 3 damage. | |
| ⟡ Bloody Spiral (immediate reaction, when first bloodied; encounter) ✦ Weapon | |
| Close burst 1; +18 vs. Reflex; 5 damage, and the target is knocked prone. If two or more enemies are knocked prone, each ally within 5 squares of the erinyes gains 10 temporary hit points. | |
| Devastating Opportunist | |
| An erinyes gains a +3 bonus to attack rolls when making opportunity attacks, and if an opportunity attack hits, it shifts 1 square as a free action. | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages Supernal |
| Skills Diplomacy +15, Endurance +15, Intimidate +15 | |
| Str 22 (+12) Dex 19 (+10) Wis 16 (+9) | |
| Con 19 (+10) Int 14 (+8) Cha 18 (+10) | |
| Equipment plate armor, light shield, bastard sword | |

Erinyes Tactics

An erinyes starts combat with a compelling strike. It then attempts to engage as many foes as possible using flitting blade. When an ally loses its temporary hit points, the erinyes switches back to compelling strike. Multiple erinyes aid one another with positioning, opting to hem in and engage a group of foes rather than moving to flank them.

(Left to right) infernal armor animus, erinyes, and shocktroop devil

Erinyes Lore

Religion DC 18: Masters of sword and shield, erinyes inspire allies with the carnage they inflict. Mortal warriors have been known to sell their souls to train with these demons.

Religion DC 23: Erinyes act as arbiters of justice among the devils and on behalf of their interests. Those who break a contract with infernal powers should not be surprised to find a host of erinyes on their heels.

Encounter Groups

Groups led by erinyes frequently include bearded devils, chain devils, legion devil hellguards, and a wide variety of mortal creatures.

Level 12 Encounter (XP 3,550)

- 3 erinyes (level 13 soldier)
- 2 chain devils (level 11 skirmisher, MM 62)
- 5 legion devil hellguards (level 11 minion, MM 64)

Gorechain Devil

These shambling hulks careen through the hells and the world's hellish charnel fields, wrapping their soon-to-be-dead foes in gore-encrusted spiked chains and controlling them like puppets.

| Gorechain Devil | Level 12 Elite Brute |
|---|---|
| Large immortal humanoid (devil) | XP 1,400 |
| Initiative +10 | Senses Perception +8 |
| Grasping Chains aura 3; any enemy that starts its turn within the aura must make a DC 21 Athletics check or Acrobatics check in order to leave the aura. If the check fails, the enemy cannot attempt to leave the aura again until the start of its next turn. | |
| HP 298; Bloodied 149 | |
| AC 24; Fortitude 23, Reflex 21, Will 21 | |
| Resist 10 fire | |
| Saving Throws +2 | |
| Speed 5 | |
| Action Points 1 | |
| ⊕ Gorechain Strike (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| Reach 3; +15 vs. AC; 2d12 + 4 damage. | |
| ⸸ Gorechain Flail (standard; recharge ⚅) | |
| The gorechain devil makes a gorechain strike attack against each enemy within reach. | |
| ⸸ Gorechain Takeover (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Charm | |
| Reach 3; +15 vs. Fortitude; 3d6 + 5 damage, and the target is dominated (save ends). The dominated condition ends if the target is more than 3 squares away from the gorechain devil at the start of the target's turn. | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages Supernal |
| Str 22 (+12) | Dex 19 (+10) Wis 15 (+8) |
| Con 19 (+10) | Int 15 (+8) Cha 13 (+7) |

Gorechain Devil Tactics

Gorechain devils aim gorechain takeover attacks at the strongest-looking targets while concentrating their other attacks on enemies that look like controllers or leaders.

CHRIS SEAMAN

Gorechain Devil Lore

Religion DC 16: Larger and more powerful than chain devils, gorechain devils use their chains to control their foes.

Religion DC 21: Chain devils act as jailers among devils; gorechain devils behave more like bounty hunters.

Encounter Groups

Gorechain devils are more likely than other devils to consort with undead.

Level 12 Encounter (XP 3,800)

- 2 gorechain devils (level 12 elite brute)
- 1 skeleton tomb guardian (level 10 brute, MM 235)
- 1 skull lord (level 10 artillery, MM 236)

Infernal Armor Animus

Through an evil ritual, a devil can invest a suit of armor with a mortal soul. The tortured spirit within provides military support for its devil overlords. When its physical form is ruined, the soul bursts free, only to be consumed by the nearest devil.

Although it doesn't speak, an infernal armor animus understands Common and Supernal.

| Infernal Armor Animus | Level 3 Minion Soldier |
|---|---|
| Medium immortal animate (devil, undead) | XP 38 |
| Initiative +5 | Senses Perception +1; darkvision |
| Bloodlust aura 2; each nonminion devil within the aura gains a +1 bonus to damage rolls. Multiple boodlust auras grant a cumulative bonus. | |
| HP 1; a missed attack never damages a minion; see also essence transference. | |
| AC 19; Fortitude 16, Reflex 15, Will 14 | |
| Resist 5 fire | |
| Speed 6 | |
| ⨺ Short Sword (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| +8 vs. AC; 5 damage. | |
| Essence Transference (when the infernal armor animus drops to 0 hit points) ✦ Healing | |
| The nearest nonminion devil within 5 squares of the animus regains 15 hit points. | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages – |
| Str 19 (+5) | Dex 14 (+3) Wis 10 (+1) |
| Con 15 (+3) | Int 8 (+0) Cha 11 (+1) |
| Equipment heavy shield, short sword | |

Infernal Armor Animus Tactics

Infernal armor animuses hurl themselves into the fray, flanking foes when possible and moving to keep as many powerful devils in their auras as they can.

Infernal Armor Animus Lore

Religion DC 10: Infernal armor animuses are mortal souls bound to suits of armor to serve as caches of life energy for devils.

Religion DC 15: When it dies, an infernal armor animus heals a nearby devil, so it is often the best tactic to destroy all animuses before attacking other devils.

Encounter Groups

Infernal armor animuses are most effective when massed with more powerful devils.

Level 5 Encounter (XP 1,054)

- 8 infernal armor animuses (level 3 minion soldier)
- 2 spined devils (level 6 skirmisher, MM 66)
- 1 tiefling heretic (level 6 artillery, MM 250)

Misfortune Devil

The misfortune devil gathers souls for the Nine Hells by enticing mortals. It lures mortals into taking increasingly larger risks—risks that ultimately lead to the moment when the devil owns the mortals' souls.

| Misfortune Devil | Level 15 Artillery |
|---|---|
| Medium immortal humanoid (devil) | XP 1,200 |
| Initiative +10 | Senses Perception +12; darkvision, truesight 10 |
| HP 115; Bloodied 57 | |
| AC 27; Fortitude 26, Reflex 28, Will 27 | |
| Speed 6, fly 6 (hover) | |
| ⨺ Lucky Maneuver (standard; at-will) ✦ Psychic, Teleportation | |
| +18 vs. Will; 1d8 + 7 psychic damage, and the misfortune devil teleports 4 squares. | |
| ⤳ Ray of Distortion (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) | |
| Ranged 20; +18 vs. Reflex; 4d8 + 7 damage. The target can choose to take 5 damage and redirect the damage of this attack to the ally with the most current hit points. The full damage is then rerolled and applied to that ally. | |
| Roll the Bones (immediate interrupt, when the misfortune devil is hit by a melee or ranged attack; encounter) | |
| The triggering attack targets a creature of the devil's choice within 5 squares of the devil. | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages Supernal, Common |
| Skills Bluff +20, Diplomacy +20, Insight +22, Intimidate +20 | |
| Str 14 (+9) | Dex 17 (+10) Wis 20 (+12) |
| Con 19 (+11) | Int 23 (+13) Cha 16 (+10) |

Misfortune Devil Tactics

The misfortune devil lets its allies engage first and then moves to the safest spot within range, attacking foes with ray of distortion. It saves roll the bones for a dangerous or hampering attack, particularly one scoring a critical hit.

(Left to right) misfortune devil, withering devil, gorechain devil, and assassin devil

ZOLTAN BOROS & GABOR SZIKSZAI

Misfortune Devil Lore

Religion DC 18: Misfortune devils encourage others to take unreasonable risks by preying on their inner desires. They delight in promoting addictive habits and exhorting the passionate into folly.

Religion DC 23: Misfortune devils enjoy using their silver tongues to trick others into making poor decisions. If the physical appearance of a misfortunate devil would frighten away a prospective mark, it uses underlings to deliver the message, or magic to disguise itself in the form of a trusted friend.

Encounter Groups

Misfortune devils tend to attach themselves to legions of devils on some infernal errand, hoping to warp probability in Hell's favor.

Level 13 Encounter (XP 4,750)

- 2 erinyes (level 13 soldier)
- 5 legion devil hellguards (level 11 minion, MM 64)
- 2 misfortune devils (level 15 artillery)

Shocktroop Devil

Shocktroop devils slam into enemy ranks like metal battering rams, delivering brutal attacks that throw their enemies off balance.

| Shocktroop Devil | Level 16 Soldier |
|---|---|
| Large immortal humanoid (devil) | XP 1,400 |
| Initiative +15 | Senses Perception +9; darkvision |
| HP 155; Bloodied 77 | |
| AC 33; Fortitude 27, Reflex 26, Will 26; see also Asmodeus's shield | |
| Speed 6, fly 8 | |
| ⨺ Sword and Shield (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| Reach 2; +23 vs. AC; 2d8 + 6 damage, and the shocktroop devil makes a secondary attack. Secondary Attack: Reach 2; +20 vs. Fortitude; the target is pushed 2 squares and dazed until the end of the shocktroop devil's next turn. | |
| ⨺ Shocktroop Attack (standard; recharges when the shocktroop devil has full hit points) | |
| The devil makes three sword and shield attacks, each against a different target. | |
| Asmodeus's Shield | |
| While a shocktroop devil is not bloodied, it gains a +2 bonus to all defenses against divine attack powers. While bloodied, it takes a -2 penalty to all defenses against divine attack powers. | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages Common, Supernal |
| Str 22 (+14) | Dex 20 (+13) Wis 13 (+9) |
| Con 19 (+12) | Int 10 (+8) Cha 20 (+13) |
| Equipment plate armor, heavy shield, longsword | |

Shocktroop Devil Tactics

The shocktroop devil starts combat with its shocktroop attack, using sword and shield whenever possible to daze and push enemies out of the way. Later in a fight, if shocktroop devils have forces to screen for them and the fight appears to be going against them, they might retreat. They then rest, regroup, and make a new lightning-fast assault.

Shocktroop Devil Lore

Religion DC 20: Shocktroop devils are front-line soldiers for hell's armies. They break up enemy charges, shatter enemy formations, and can single-handedly slaughter a great number of the enemy.

Religion DC 25: It is important to hurt shocktroop devils as quickly as possible. A shocktroop devil fighting at full strength is a terrible foe.

Encounter Groups

Shocktroop devils work for anyone who promises incessant battle and threatens rigid discipline.

Level 16 Encounter (XP 7,000)
- 1 bone devil (level 17 controller, MM 62)
- 1 misfortune devil (level 15 artillery)
- 3 shocktroop devils (level 16 soldier)

Withering Devil

Withering devils harvest souls for the Nine Hells by sapping the vitality out of all that they meet. By tempting or tricking mortals into apathy and depression, withering devils cause famine, plague, and strife.

| Withering Devil | Level 14 Controller |
|---|---|
| Medium immortal humanoid (devil) | XP 1,000 |
| Initiative +8 | Senses Perception +8; darkvision |
| Aura of Exhaustion (Charm) aura 3; each enemy within the aura is weakened. | |
| HP 138; Bloodied 69 | |
| Resist 15 fire | |
| AC 28; Fortitude 24, Reflex 25, Will 26 | |
| Speed 6 | |
| ⊕ Staff of Weariness (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon +19 vs. AC; 2d8 + 6 damage. | |
| ⊰ Draining Ray (standard; at-will) ✦ Psychic Ranged 20; +18 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 6 psychic damage, and the target is immobilized until the end of the withering devil's next turn. | |
| ⊰ Gaze of Apathy (minor; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Charm, Gaze Ranged 10; +17 vs. Will; the target is slowed (save ends). | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages Common, Supernal |
| Skills Bluff +18, Insight +13 | |
| Str 11 (+7) | Dex 12 (+8) Wis 13 (+8) |
| Con 18 (+11) | Int 20 (+12) Cha 23 (+13) |
| Equipment quarterstaff | |

Withering Devil Tactics

A withering devil uses its draining ray on ranged attackers, and then it closes the distance to keep such attackers within its aura. Withering devils position themselves near enemy melee combatants in order to affect them with aura of exhaustion.

Withering Devil Lore

Religion DC 18: Withering devils tempt and trick others into not caring for each other or their duties. They destroy individuals and groups by encouraging apathy and the lack of empathy.

Religion DC 23: Although their natural appearance is hideous, withering devils show extraordinary aptitude at disguising themselves as other humanoids. Some find and use magic to aid these attempts, but a heavy cloak and a dark room can prove just as effective.

Encounter Groups

Withering devils cooperate with those that have similar goals, but won't hesitate to abandon their allies if the situation looks grim.

Level 13 Encounter (XP 4,000)
- 2 bearded devils (level 13 soldier, MM 60)
- 4 legion devil hellguards (level 11 minion, MM 56)
- 1 withering devil (level 14 controller)
- 1 yuan-ti malison sharp-eyes (level 13 artillery, MM 269)

Level 15 Encounter (XP 6,600)
- 1 shadow snake (level 16 skirmisher, MM 240)
- 3 yuan-ti abominations (level 14 soldier, MM 270)
- 1 yuan-ti malison incanter (level 15 artillery, MM 269)
- 1 withering devil (level 14 controller)

DIMENSIONAL MARAUDER

These clever, skulking predators travel the planes and the world in search of easy prey. They are especially fond of places where mortals gather.

| Dimensional Marauder | Level 4 Lurker |
|---|---|
| Medium aberrant magical beast | XP 175 |

Dimensional Marauder Tactics

Dimensional marauders are cowardly creatures that prefer to lie in ambush or stalk foes from the shadows. A dimensional marauder waits until adversaries are engaged in combat before moving in for opportunistic bite attacks. It enters planephase form when first hit in combat, then strikes with reality warp to isolate an opponent.

Dimensional Marauder Lore

Dungeoneering DC 17: Dimensional marauders have powers of teleportation and phasing. Some dimensional marauders seek easy prey, and can be found near cities and other areas of high population.

Encounter Groups

Many extraplanar civilizations use dimensional marauders as guards and hunters. However, these creatures' predatory instincts sometimes inspire them to jump into a battle simply because one side or the other looks weak.

Level 3 Encounter (XP 850)
- ✦ 2 dimensional marauders (level 4 lurker)
- ✦ 2 ettercap fang guards (level 4 soldier, MM 107)
- ✦ 1 gnome arcanist (level 3 controller, MM 134)

DIREGUARD

Tireless and driven by dark covenants, undead direguards possess powerful magic and the skills of battle retained from their past lives.

Direguard Lore

Religion DC 16: A direguard is a skeletal undead imbued with powerful magic. Foul rituals transform willing warriors into direguards, but at a price. If a direguard does not meet a specific quota of killing, it is destroyed by the dark pact that grants its power.

Religion DC 21: Liches and death knights perform the ritual that turns a living ally into a direguard tied to their wills. A deathbringer might be assigned to kill a certain number of sentient beings, or an assassin to kill members of a specific race.

Direguard Deathbringer

The skeletal deathbringer uses its blazing claws against its enemies as its force armor deflects attacks.

DJINN

Ingenious engineers of the fabulous, djinns work with that most transitory of elements—air—to create effects more enduring than the life spans of many worldly empires. Carving gigantic floating cities from the Elemental Chaos, djinns build shining palaces gleaming with treasures beyond mortal imagination.

Allying with the primordials in the struggle against the gods, the djinns paid a high price for their defeat. Many are still imprisoned in towers, mirrors, lamps, and other lowly relics, and the few that roam free in the world possess only a fraction of their former power.

Djinn Thunderer

This elemental shakes the battle with blasts of thunder, brandishing a jeweled scepter.

Djinn Stormsword Tactics

Protection of artillery and controllers is the djinn stormsword's first priority. A stormsword uses come to me every round to keep targets away from its allies, punishing foes with spinning vortex and scimitar attacks.

Djinn Skylord

A djinn skylord directs its allies in combat, confusing its enemies with powerful storms.

| Djinn Skylord | Level 25 Controller (Leader) |

Djinn Skylord Tactics

A djinn skylord tries to seize advantageous ground for its allies, swooping to the center of the battlefield and blasting foes with sandstorm. From the edge of the zone, it uses mystic hail and elemental command until it needs to defend itself with storm shout.

Djinn Lore

Arcana DC 24: Djinns are native to the Elemental Chaos, but as punishment for their role in the war against the gods, they were scattered after their defeat. Many djinns were imprisoned in worldly objects or had their powers severely curtailed.

Arcana DC 29: Those djinns that are free seek to regain their lost might and reclaim the relics and outposts of their old empires, many of which now lie in the world. Characters who aid a djinn in a quest to reclaim a cloud palace or locate an artifact can expect great reward. Creatures that oppose the ambition of the djinns are certain to earn their eternal enmity.

FRANZ VOHWINKEL

Encounter Groups

Djinns prefer to ally with their own kind, but they can often be found in the company of other creatures of the air. A djinn has no interest in leading other creatures, and all djinns rankle at the thought of taking orders from lesser beings. As a result, any alliance with a djinn is short-lived at best.

Level 22 Encounter (21,400 XP)
- ✦ 1 djinn stormsword (level 24 soldier)
- ✦ 2 djinn thunderers (level 20 artillery)
- ✦ 1 djinn windbow (level 22 skirmisher)
- ✦ 2 rimefire griffons (level 20 skirmisher, MM 147)

Level 26 Encounter (54,950 XP)
- ✦ 1 djinn skylord (level 25 controller)
- ✦ 1 djinn thunderer (level 20 artillery)
- ✦ 3 djinn stormswords (level 24 soldier)
- ✦ 3 storm gorgons (level 26 skirmisher, MM 143)

Dragons are widely renowned as some of the most powerful monsters in the world. Metallic dragons give fealty to Bahamut in his role as the Platinum Dragon. However, even the most equitable of these great creatures do not hesitate to use their might to crush opponents.

Despite their relatively benign nature, many metallic dragons engage in cruelty. All metallic dragons are fierce when protecting their treasures.

Metallic Dragon Lore

Nature DC 15: Metallic dragons love learned discourse, but they also have a keen sense of insight and are quick to sense deception. Those who seek to rob or deceive a metallic dragon are shown no mercy.

Nature DC 20: Metallic dragons can be found in a wide range of climes and locales, preferring to sequester themselves inside ancient sites of great learning. They are as likely to be found in the heart of a living city as in some ancient ruin.

Nature DC 25: Metallic dragons do not make pacts with other groups of creatures, but an individual dragon is very likely to have gathered a wide variety of lesser creatures around it. Metallic dragons treat such creatures as students and wards rather than as slaves. In return, these creatures act as the dragons' servants and guards, and are deeply loyal to their dragon lieges.

Metallic Dragon Encounters

Many metallic dragons guard great works of magic or items of historical significance. As a dragon ages and grows in power, it gathers more precious objects. A metallic dragon is often found with a large number of lesser creatures, which help protect the dragon's lair and the treasures the dragon guards.

Adamantine Dragon

Adamantine dragons are tacticians that supplement their melee abilities with blasts of thunderous power. They can be found anywhere, but prefer to lair in huge underground caverns.

Adamantine Dragon Tactics

An adamantine dragon favors frontal assaults against a single target that it can take down quickly. When working with a group of allies, an adamantine dragon doesn't hesitate to bear the brunt of enemies' attacks. When fighting alone, an adamantine dragon attempts to isolate weaker foes first and finish them off quickly.

Copper Dragon

The most covetous and miserly of the metallic dragons, copper dragons are nonetheless social creatures. They breathe destructive blasts of acid and make their lairs in dry, rocky uplands and mountains.

Copper Dragon Tactics

Copper dragons lair in locations that let them exploit their excellent mobility. A copper dragon favors repeated flyby attacks while maneuvering to make the greatest use of blocking terrain. It is careful to limit its exposure to ranged attacks, and uses its breath weapon against multiple foes. With the right terrain and careful positioning, a copper dragon can avoid most of its opponents' attacks.

Copper Dragon Lore

Nature DC 20: Copper dragons lair among dry hills and mountains. They are willing to engage in prolonged battles, harrying their prey over long periods of time.

Nature DC 25: A copper dragon is covetous by nature; despite its pleasant demeanor, it seldom leaves a situation without gaining some benefit. Copper dragons breathe streams of acid and are among the swiftest of all dragons.

Encounter Groups

Copper dragons recruit creatures as fast and agile as they are, allowing them to conduct running skirmishes against their enemies. Hippogriffs, kenkus, rocs, and sphinxes are often found with copper dragons. Copper dragons sometimes hire human and elf cavalry to help run down their enemies.

Gold Dragon

Gold dragons breathe torrents of flame, and as they age, their scales grow bright with radiant energy. They lair in a variety of climes, favoring plains and rolling hills where they can easily survey the land. Gold dragons are renowned above all other children of Io, and few creatures dare to test the might of the oldest of them.

Gold Dragon Tactics

Gold dragons seek to control the flow of battle. A gold dragon opens battle by catching as many foes as possible with its breath weapon, then scattering them using frightful presence. Once its foes are separated, the gold dragon pounces on the weakest.

Gold Dragon Lore

Nature DC 20: Gold dragons often lair in plains or hills, but their terrain preference is secondary to the goal of influencing a society or protecting a magic secret. Gold dragons often assume leadership of a group of lesser creatures. Gold dragons breathe powerful gouts of flame.

Nature DC 25: Gold dragons are usually honest and forthright, but they show little interest in the concerns of other creatures. Societies led by a gold dragon sometimes find themselves at the mercy of its long-term plans.

Nature DC 30: Some gold dragons know a ritual that allows them to assume humanoid forms. A gold dragon divests itself of this disguise when threatened.

Encounter Groups

Gold dragons that have selfish or evil tendencies recruit minotaurs, ogres, and trolls as disposable shock troops. Other gold dragons might be defended by members of the societies they lead.

LARS GRANT-WEST

Iron Dragon

Quick and deceptive by nature, iron dragons hunt from the shadows, striking when and where they choose. Iron dragons prefer to lair in regions of low hills and deep forests, or other environments that offer good concealment for a large predator.

Iron Dragon Tactics

Iron dragons prefer to strike from ambush. An iron dragon's lair features an extensive series of chambers, each with multiple entrances and exits. The dragon stations traps or minions in each of these chambers, waiting until its foes are distracted by more obvious threats before it strikes.

Iron Dragon Lore

Nature DC 20: Savage and surly, iron dragons are reclusive and prefer to strike from ambush. Iron dragons breathe blasts of lightning.

Nature DC 25: As iron dragons age, they become more impervious to attack. A battle with an older iron dragon promises to be a prolonged affair.

Encounter Groups

As befits their sly nature, iron dragons do not have allies so much as dupes. They lure dwarves, hobgoblins, minotaurs, and other greedy humanoids into working for them in return for a promise of easy loot. An iron dragon dispatches its "friends" to ambush intruders. Once the fighting starts, the dragon watches for a few moments. If its intercession can win the battle, it attacks. If its allies seem likely to be defeated, an iron dragon flees rather than risk its own hide.

Silver Dragon

Silver dragons are the knights-errant of dragonkind, frequently traveling the world in order to be at the flashpoint of interesting conflicts. Although they breathe cones of icy destruction, they favor melee combat over the use of their breath weapon.

Silver Dragon Tactics

Silver dragons are straightforward and enthusiastic combatants. They move directly to confront as many foes as possible, attacking with tooth, claw, and tail. As they age, silver dragons become even more capable of shaking off hindering effects, and are among the most formidable of the dragons in face-to-face confrontation.

Silver Dragon Lore

Nature DC 20: Silver dragons travel widely, but prefer to inhabit the cool heights of mountains or cloud castles. Silver dragons breathe blasts of cold, and they also have significant melee abilities.

Nature DC 25: Silver dragons are susceptible to flattery and are highly intolerant of aggression or arrogance in others. They are slower in the air than most other dragons.

Encounter Groups

A silver dragon prefers to be in the front line of a battle. A silver dragon's idealism and crusading temperament lead it to recruit allies who share its sensibilities. Dwarves, dragonborn, angels, devas, and any other creatures that place ideals above profit might be found fighting alongside silver dragons.

Drake

Aggressive and wild reptiles, drakes hunt in all reaches of the world. Enterprising individuals capture and domesticate drakes, especially those that aren't able to fly. Captured drakes can be trained, but they always possess a wild side.

Bloodseeker Drake

A bloodseeker drake is an aggressive hunter that enters a frenzy when it smells blood.

Bloodseeker Drake Level 4 Soldier
Medium natural beast (reptile) XP 175

Initiative +8 Senses Perception +7 (+12 when tracking bloodied creatures)

Immune fear (while within 2 squares of an ally)
Speed 6

⊕ Bite (standard; at-will)
+11 vs. AC; 1d10 + 4 damage.

Blood Frenzy
A bloodseeker drake can make an opportunity attack against any adjacent bloodied creature that shifts.

Bloodthirsty
A bloodseeker drake gains a +3 bonus to damage rolls against bloodied targets.

Alignment Unaligned Languages –

| Con 13 (+3) | Int 2 (-2) | Cha 13 (+3) |

Bloodseeker Drake Lore

Nature DC 12: Bloodseeker drakes are prized by hunters and patrols for their tracking abilities. They are hard to control, however, especially in conditions thick with the stench of blood.

Horned Drake

In the wild, a pack of horned drakes can bring down much larger prey. A trained horned drake retains the instinct to fight as a team.

Horned Drake Level 5 Skirmisher
Medium natural beast (reptile) XP 200

Initiative +6 Senses Perception +3; low-light vision
HP 63; Bloodied 31

Speed 6

⊕ Bite (standard; at-will)
+10 vs. AC; 2d8 + 2 damage, and the horned drake shifts 2 squares.

Goring Horns (standard; at-will)
+11 vs. AC; 3d8 + 2 damage, and the target is knocked prone.

Pack Movement (immediate reaction, when an enemy adjacent to the horned drake is hit by a melee attack; at-will)
The drake shifts 2 squares.

Alignment Unaligned Languages –

Horned Drake Lore

Nature DC 12: Horned drakes spend the day sleeping in the sun, preferring to hunt at night or in the early hours of morning.

Scytheclaw Drake

Predatory cunning makes this drake dangerous. Roving through forests and grasslands in small familial units, a scytheclaw drake is a study in devious pack hunting.

Scytheclaw Drake Level 10 Skirmisher
Medium natural beast (reptile) XP 500

Initiative +12 Senses Perception +12
HP 105; Bloodied 52
AC 24; Fortitude 21, Reflex 23, Will 20
Speed 10

⊕ Scytheclaw (standard; at-will)
+15 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage, and the target is knocked prone. If the scytheclaw drake hits a prone target, it instead deals 2d8 + 5 damage, and ongoing 5 damage (save ends); see also springing step.

Overwhelming Attacker (opportunity, when an enemy adjacent to the scytheclaw drake stands up; at-will)
The drake makes an opportunity attack against the triggering enemy. On a hit, the attack deals no damage, and the enemy remains prone.

Springing Step (free, when the scytheclaw drake hits with scytheclaw attack; recharge ⚁ ⚂ ⚃)
The drake jumps 8 squares and uses scytheclaw. The jump does not provoke an opportunity attack from the target of the triggering attack.

Alignment Unaligned Languages –
Skills Athletics +13, Stealth +15

| Str 16 (+8) | Dex 21 (+10) | Wis 15 (+7) |
| Con 17 (+8) | Int 3 (+1) | Cha 6 (+3) |

Scytheclaw Drake Lore

Nature DC 16: Scytheclaw drakes are more intelligent than other drakes, and they reveal it by using tactics of distraction. If you can see one scytheclaw, chances are good that another two or three hide nearby.

Fang Titan Drake Lore

Nature DC 20: Although they are rare, fang titans hunt in huge territories, killing or chasing out other large predators. Creatures that can escape the drakes' notice benefit from their unwitting protection.

Encounter Groups

Because they are wild hunters, it is rare to find these creatures working with creatures outside their own species. Although domesticated drakes are common, only the most powerful creatures can domesticate a fang titan.

Level 3 Encounter (XP 750)
- ✦ 2 bloodseeker drakes (level 4 brute)
- ✦ 2 poisonscale magi lizardfolk (level 2 artillery)
- ✦ 1 poisonscale collector lizardfolk (level 3 lurker)

DRAKKOTH

Stalking the jungles and forests of the world, drakkoths are draconic creatures that share the intelligence and cunning of their distant dragon kin. Drakkoths have adopted a culture and weaponry similar to those of humanoid races. Fiercely devoted to their own kind, drakkoths form warrior tribes that aggressively defend their territories.

Drakkoth Ambusher

The drakkoth ambusher fights in concert with soldier and brute allies, making surprise attacks whenever possible.

Drakkoth Ambusher Tactics

At the beginning of combat, an ambusher attempts to hit three or more enemies with sudden rush. Throughout combat, the ambusher prefers to attack with combat advantage and is constantly on the move, attacking with reach against prone targets while avoiding spaces adjacent to enemies.

Drakkoth Ambusher Level 13 Skirmisher
Medium natural humanoid (reptile) XP 800

Initiative +13 Senses Perception +15; low-light vision

⊕ Glaive (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison, Weapon
Reach 2; +18 vs. AC; 4d4 damage plus 5 poison damage.

↯ Sudden Rush (move; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞)
The drakkoth ambusher shifts its speed and makes an attack against each enemy it moves adjacent to during the move: +16 vs. Reflex; the target is knocked prone.

⇢ Venomous Hiss (minor; recharges when first bloodied) ✦ Poison
Close blast 2; +16 vs. Reflex; 3d6 + 5 poison damage, and the target takes ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends).

Combat Advantage
A drakkoth ambusher deals 2d6 extra damage against any target granting combat advantage to it.

Drakkoth Rage (while bloodied)
Once per round when the drakkoth ambusher hits with an attack, it gains 10 temporary hit points.

Drakkoth Rager

A drakkoth rager charges into battle, oblivious to attacks against it in its single-minded fury.

Drakkoth Rager Tactics

The drakkoth rager charges haphazardly into combat, provoking opportunity attacks if necessary in order to hit three targets with raging cleave. The rager uses venom hiss as soon as it can target two or more creatures. If its foes are not clustered together, the rager focuses its attacks on the biggest threat.

Drakkoth Venomshot

The drakkoth venomshot supports its allies from the edge of the fray with longbow attacks.

Drakkoth Venomshot Tactics

If a venomshot has a clear shot at a target engaged in melee, it will use its longbow attack to enhance its allies' poison attacks. Once bloodied, a venomshot will shift away from foes, try to hit a nearby enemy with its longbow, then follow up with a venomshot hiss in order to gain temporary hit points from drakkoth rage.

Drakkoth Venomshot Level 16 Artillery
Medium natural humanoid (reptile) XP 1,400

Initiative +13 Senses Perception +13; low-light vision
HP 125; Bloodied 63; see also drakkoth rage
AC 28; Fortitude 29, Reflex 28, Will 28
Speed 7

Longsword (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+23 vs. AC; 2d8 + 4 damage.

Longbow (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Ranged 20/40; +23 vs. AC; 2d10 + 5 damage, and the target gains vulnerable 10 poison (save ends).

Venomshot Hiss (minor; recharges at the start of its turn while the drakkoth venomshot is bloodied) ✦ Poison
Close blast 3; +21 vs. Reflex; 1d10 poison damage, and the target takes ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends).

Drakkoth Rage (while bloodied)
Once per round when the drakkoth venomshot hits with an attack, it gains 10 temporary hit points.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common, Draconic

Equipment leather armor, longsword, longbow, 30 arrows

Drakkoth Lore

Nature DC 18: Drakkoths are a race of draconic creatures sometimes called dracotaurs because of their similarity in form to centaurs. Unlike dragons and dragonspawn, but similar to dragonborn, drakkoths have developed an advanced tribal culture. Drakkoths are nomadic, and the shifting boundaries of their lands can encompass vast swaths of forest or jungle.

Nature DC 23: Some drakkoth tribes are devoted to Tiamat and serve her with a bloodthirsty devotion. Others care little for the god of greed, choosing instead to honor a dragon patron (most often an elder or ancient green). A dragon that knows of this practice might seek drakkoth worshipers, inspiring (or tricking) a tribe into its service.

Encounter Groups

Drakkoths keep to themselves, although they sometimes make short-term alliances to challenge powerful targets. Additionally, they train creatures to serve them as guards and hunters.

Level 14 Encounter (XP 5,900)
- ✦ 1 drakkoth rager (level 15 elite brute)
- ✦ 2 drakkoth venomshots (level 16 artillery)
- ✦ 1 viscera devourer (level 12 controller, MM 68)

Level 16 Encounter (XP 7,200)
- ✦ 3 drakkoth ambushers (level 13 skirmisher)
- ✦ 2 drakkoth venomshots (level 16 artillery)
- ✦ 1 roc (level 14 elite skirmisher, MM 220)

DUERGAR

Distant kin to dwarves, duergar carry the taint of a long association with infernal forces. Although they share a love of mining and metalwork with their steadfast dwarf cousins, duergar are uniformly treacherous and cruel.

Duergar Guard

Wielding a fiery warhammer, a duergar guard flings poisoned quills at its enemies.

Duergar Hellcaller

Bristling with lethal quills, the hellcaller can also summon a lesser devil to battle its foes.

Duergar Hellcaller Level 12 Artillery
Medium natural humanoid, dwarf (devil) XP 700

Initiative +10 Senses Perception +13; darkvision
HP 96; Bloodied 48
AC 24; Fortitude 23, Reflex 23, Will 25
Resist 10 fire, 10 poison
Speed 5

Mace (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+19 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage.

Infernal Quills (standard; at-will) ✦ Fire, Poison
Ranged 10; +19 vs. AC; 1d8 + 3 fire and poison damage, and the target takes ongoing 5 fire and poison damage and a -2 penalty to attack rolls (save ends both).

Quick Quill Strike (minor; encounter)
The duergar hellcaller makes an infernal quills attack.

Asmodeus's Ruby Curse (standard; encounter) ✦ Fear, Psychic
Close blast 5; targets enemies; +16 vs. Will; 3d8 + 5 psychic damage, and the duergar hellcaller slides the target to the nearest space outside the blast. This forced movement provokes opportunity attacks.

Quill Storm (standard; encounter) ✦ Fire, Poison
Area burst 2 within 10; +17 vs. Reflex; 1d8 fire and poison damage, and the target takes ongoing 10 fire and poison damage and a -2 penalty to attack rolls (save ends both).

Devilish Sacrifice (immediate interrupt, when an enemy makes a melee attack roll against the duergar hellcaller; encounter)
The hellcaller shifts to the nearest space beyond the triggering enemy's reach. A legion devil hellguard (MM 64) appears in the hellcaller's former space and becomes the target of the enemy's attack. The devil acts immediately after the hellcaller's initiative count.

Alignment Evil Languages Common, Deep Speech, Dwarven
Skills Arcana +11, Dungeoneering +13, Religion +11

Duergar Blackguard

The heavily armored blackguard relentlessly pursues one enemy across the field of battle, pounding it with repeated waraxe attacks.

Duergar Blackguard Level 13 Elite Soldier
Medium natural humanoid, dwarf (devil) XP 1,600

Initiative +8 Senses Perception +8; darkvision
HP 260; Bloodied 130
AC 29; Fortitude 27, Reflex 25, Will 25
Resist 10 fire, 10 poison
Saving Throws +2
Speed 5
Action Points 1

Blighted Warhammer (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison, Weapon
+20 vs. AC; 2d10 + 3 damage, and the duergar blackguard makes a secondary attack against the target. Secondary Attack: +16 vs. Fortitude; the target takes ongoing 5 poison damage and a -2 penalty to attack rolls (save ends both).

Darkfire Mark (minor 1/round; at-will) ✦ Fire, Necrotic
Close burst 10; targets one enemy; until the end of the duergar blackguard's next turn, the target is marked and gains no benefit from any concealment. In addition, if the target ends its next turn farther from the blackguard than it began the turn, or if it does not make an attack roll against the blackguard during its next turn, the target takes 10 fire and necrotic damage.

Quill Burst (minor; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃) ✦ Poison
Close burst 3; targets one enemy; +18 vs. AC; 1d8 + 4 damage, and the target takes ongoing 5 poison damage and a -2 penalty to attack rolls (save ends both).

Infernal Footwork (immediate reaction, when an enemy adjacent to the duergar blackguard moves or shifts away from it; at-will)
The blackguard shifts 2 squares and must end the shift in a space adjacent to the triggering enemy. If the triggering enemy is marked by the duergar blackguard, the blackguard then uses blighted warhammer against the target as a free action.

Alignment Evil Languages Common, Deep Speech, Dwarven
Skills Dungeoneering +15, Intimidate +15, Religion +13
Str 22 (+12) Dex 11 (+6) Wis 14 (+8)

Equipment plate armor, heavy shield, warhammer

Duergar Blasphemer

Infernal priests of Asmodeus, duergar blasphemers punish unbelievers with poison and fire.

Duergar Blasphemer Level 14 Controller (Leader)
Medium natural humanoid, dwarf (devil) XP 1,000

Initiative +9 Senses Perception +13; darkvision
Crush Nonbelievers (Fire, Poison) aura sight; the duergar blasphemer and each ally within the aura can score critical hits on rolls of 19-20 against prone targets and deal 10 extra fire and poison damage on critical hits against prone targets.
HP 140; Bloodied 70
AC 28; Fortitude 25, Reflex 25, Will 26
Resist 10 fire, 10 poison
Speed 5

Greatclub (standard; at-will) ✦ Fire, Necrotic, Weapon
+19 vs. AC; 2d4 + 3 damage, and ongoing 5 fire and necrotic damage (save ends).

Sinner's Slip (immediate interrupt, when an enemy marked by the duergar blasphemer makes an attack roll against it; encounter) ✦ Psychic
Targets the triggering enemy; +18 vs. Will; the enemy's attack instead targets the ally of the attacker nearest to it. If no target is available, the attacker is knocked prone and takes 3d6 + 6 psychic damage.

Eyes of Asmodeus (standard; at-will)
Ranged 10; +18 vs. Fortitude; the target is weakened and marked until the end of the duergar blasphemer's next turn. Aftereffect: The target is slowed (save ends). Miss: The target is slowed (save ends).

Infernal Quills (standard; at-will) ✦ Fire, Poison
Ranged 10; +19 vs. AC; 1d8 + 4 fire and poison damage, and the target takes ongoing 5 fire and poison damage and a -2 penalty to attack rolls (save ends both).

Quick Quill Strike (minor; encounter)
The duergar blasphemer makes an infernal quills attack.

Preach Submission (minor 1/round; at-will)
Close burst 10; targets one creature; +19 vs. Will; the target is marked (save ends). If the target is already marked by the duergar blasphemer, it is knocked prone.

Duergar Lore

Nature DC 10: Duergar are kin to dwarves, but their long association with infernal powers has given them strange abilities and a thirst for blood. Their devilish nature leads duergar to prefer volcanic areas of the Underdark.

Nature DC 16: Long ago, duergar were members of a great clan of dwarves that delved deep into the Underdark and fell to a mind flayer assault. They endured uncounted years as slaves before fighting their way to freedom. Those duergar that escaped gained a perverse education from their captivity, becoming as corrupt as their former masters.

Nature DC 21: Believing that Moradin abandoned them during their enslavement, the duergar turned instead to the worship of devils. Most now take Asmodeus as their patron deity, and devilish power flows in their veins. Within their settlements, blood rites to infernal beings are common. Woe to the slave that has outlived its usefulness or angered a capricious duergar master.

Encounter Groups

Duergar raid, pillage, and take prisoners when it suits them, using captives as slave labor and sacrifices for their infernal altars. For their raiding parties, they summon devils and employ troglodytes, orcs, ogres, and other wicked races.

Level 4 Encounter (XP 901)
- 2 duergar guards (level 4 soldier)
- 1 duergar scout (level 4 lurker)
- 1 duergar theurge (level 5 controller)
- 4 orc drudges (level 4 minion, MM 203)

EVA WIDERMANN

Eladrin Bladesinger

A whirling blur in battle, an eladrin bladesinger forms a bond with allies and enemies alike, making each fight personal.

Eladrin Bladesinger Level 11 Skirmisher
Medium fey humanoid XP 600

Initiative +12 Senses Perception +6; low-light vision
HP 114; Bloodied 57
AC 25; Fortitude 23, Reflex 24, Will 23
Saving Throws +5 against charm effects
Speed 8; see also wyvern strike

⊕ Brilliant Blade (standard; at-will) ✦ Radiant, Weapon
+16 vs. AC; 2d8 + 3 radiant damage, and the target takes a –3 penalty to attack rolls against the eladrin bladesinger until the end of the bladesinger's next turn.

⨺ Crippling Strike (standard; encounter) ✦ Weapon
The eladrin bladesinger shifts 3 squares before and after making the attack. +14 vs. Fortitude; the target is weakened and slowed (save ends both). Miss: The target is slowed (save ends).

⨺ Dance of Brilliance (standard; at-will) ✦ Radiant, Weapon
+16 vs. AC; 1d8 + 4 radiant damage, and the eladrin bladesinger shifts 3 squares and uses brilliant blade against a different target.

⨺ Wyvern Strike (standard; encounter) ✦ Poison, Weapon
The eladrin bladesinger flies 8 squares and does not provoke opportunity attacks. At any point during the move, the bladesinger makes an attack: +14 vs. Fortitude; 1d8 + 4 damage, and ongoing 10 poison damage (save ends).

Combat Shift (minor; requires combat advantage against a target adjacent to the eladrin bladesinger; at-will)
The bladesinger shifts 1 square to a space adjacent to the target.

Fey Step (move; encounter) ✦ Teleportation
The eladrin bladesinger teleports 5 squares.

Con 18 (+9) Int 15 (+7) Cha 18 (+9)
Equipment chainmail, longsword

Eladrin Bladesinger Lore

Arcana DC 21: Eladrin bladesingers are highly skilled warriors equally versed in the arts of magic and combat. Bladesingers epitomize grace on the battlefield, but they are equally dedicated to honor. They treat foes with respect, and they despise those that would slaughter the helpless.

Encounter Groups

Eladrin warriors such as the arcane archer and the bladesinger most often seek the company of other eladrin. Coures of mischief and strife can ally themselves with any creature, although rarely for long.

Level 10 Encounter (XP 2,650)
- ✦ 3 eladrin bladesingers (level 11 skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 eladrin twilight incanter (level 8 controller, MM 102)
- ✦ 1 will-o'-wisp (level 10 lurker)

Coure of Mischief and Strife

This winsome eladrin keeps to the shadows, lips curled in a wicked smile.

Coure of Mischief and Strife Level 17 Lurker
Medium fey humanoid, eladrin XP 1,600

Initiative +19 Senses Perception +11; low-light vision
HP 129; Bloodied 64
AC 31; Fortitude 28, Reflex 30, Will 28
Resist 20 radiant; Vulnerable necrotic (a coure of mischief and strife that takes necrotic damage is slowed until the end of its next turn)
Saving Throws +5 against charm effects
Speed 6, teleport 6

⊕ Rapier (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+22 vs. AC; 2d8 + 6 damage.

Spark of Strife (standard; usable only while invisible; at-will) ✦ Charm, Psychic
Ranged 10; +20 vs. Will; 2d10 + 5 psychic damage, and the target is dazed until the end of its next turn. At the start of the target's next turn, it charges its nearest ally or makes a basic attack against its nearest ally as a free action. If the target's attack hits, the coure of mischief and strife uses spark of strife against the attacked creature as a free action.

Winds of Luck's Mischief (standard; encounter)
Close burst 3; +20 vs. Will; the target misses with an attack that has an odd number on the attack roll (save ends).

Invisibility (standard; at-will) ✦ Illusion
The coure of mischief and strife becomes invisible until it misses with an attack or takes damage.

Fey Step (move; encounter) ✦ Teleportation

Skills Bluff +18, Insight +16, Stealth +20
Str 14 (+10) Dex 24 (+15) Wis 16 (+11)
Con 21 (+13) Int 12 (+9) Cha 21 (+13)
Equipment leather armor, rapier

Coure of Mischief and Strife Lore

Arcana DC 20: Like "bralani" and "ghaele," the term "coure" is a title of nobility. Any rank associated with such a title varies among different eladrin lands and clans. However, all eladrin that attain such ranks adopt spheres of influence and are invested with powers pertaining to those spheres.

Arcana DC 25: Noble rank in eladrin society is rarely a matter of inheritance. Eladrin politics is a complex mix of popularity and mysticism beyond the comprehension of nonfey. Eladrin that attain the title of coure of mischief and strife are experts in their chosen art of discord.

Elementals roil across the Elemental Chaos in infinite variety. Some occupy roles in that plane's varied environments similar to those of beasts in the world. Others pursue alien interests in their own societies.

Chillfire Destroyer

A chillfire destroyer is a mass of raging fire held in check by a shell of elemental ice. As the creature fights, the shell slowly weakens, exposing the inferno within.

| Chillfire Destroyer | Level 14 Brute |
|---|---|
| Large elemental magical beast (cold, fire) | XP 1,000 |

Initiative +12 Senses Perception +12
Leaking Firecore (Fire) aura 2; while the chillfire destroyer is bloodied, each creature that starts its turn within the aura takes 10 fire damage.
HP 173; Bloodied 86; see also firecore breach
AC 26; Fortitude 26, Reflex 25, Will 25
Immune disease, poison; Resist 10 cold, 10 fire
Speed 5

⊕ Freezing Slam (standard; at-will) ✦ Cold
Reach 2; +17 vs. AC; 1d12 + 6 damage plus 1d12 cold damage.

Trample (standard; at-will) ✦ Cold
The chillfire destroyer moves its speed and can move through enemies' spaces. The destroyer makes an attack: +15 vs. Reflex; 1d10 + 6 damage plus 1d10 cold damage, and the target is knocked prone.

Firecore Breach (when the chillfire destroyer drops to 0 hit points) ✦ Fire
The destroyer does not die until the start of its next turn. Until then, the destroyer can take no actions. At the start of the destroyer's next turn, it makes an attack: close burst 3; +15 vs. Reflex; 4d10 + 6 fire damage.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Primordial

| Con 23 (+13) | Int 5 (+4) | Cha 12 (+8) |

Chillfire Destroyer Lore

Arcana DC 18: A chillfire destroyer combines the power of fire with the strength of elemental ice. This dangerous mix results in a deadly explosion when the creature is slain. Both fire archons and ice archons seek to recruit chillfire destroyers for their forces, sometimes coming into conflict as a result.

Dust Devil

A living mote of elemental air, a dust devil is a destructive creature that sends its enemies flying.

| Dust Devil | Level 3 Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Small elemental magical beast (air, earth) | XP 150 |
| Initiative +7 | Senses Perception +0 |
| HP 47; Bloodied 23 | |
| AC 18; Fortitude 14, Reflex 16, Will 14 (-2 to all defenses while slowed or immobilized) | |
| Immune disease, poison | |
| Speed 8 | |
| ⊕ Grasping Winds (standard; at-will) | |
| +8 vs. Reflex; 1d10 + 3 damage, and the dust devil slides the target 2 squares. | |
| ⸸ Gale Blast (move; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞) | |
| The dust devil shifts 5 squares and attacks each enemy it moves adjacent to (one attack per creature): +8 vs. Fortitude; the target is knocked prone. | |
| ✧ Stinging Sands (standard; encounter) | |
| Close burst 3; +8 vs. Fortitude; 3d6 + 3 damage, and the target is blinded until the end of the dust devil's next turn. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Primordial |
| Skills Stealth +10 | |
| Str 8 (+0) | Dex 18 (+5) Wis 8 (+0) |
| Con 15 (+3) | Int 5 (-2) Cha 15 (+3) |

Dust Devil Lore

Arcana DC 15: A dust devil is a creature of wind and earth, flighty and impulsive. Because of its dependence on movement, any attack that slows a dust devil weakens it significantly.

Flamespiker

Formed of air, earth, and fire, flamespikers are front-line warriors under the command of more powerful beings of the Elemental Chaos.

| Flamespiker | Level 5 Soldier |
|---|---|
| Medium elemental magical beast (air, earth, fire) | XP 200 |
| Initiative +6 | Senses Perception +4 |
| HP 66; Bloodied 33 | |
| AC 21; Fortitude 18, Reflex 16, Will 16 | |
| Immune disease, petrification, poison; Resist 10 fire | |
| Speed 7 | |
| ⊕ Stonespike (standard; at-will) ✦ Fire | |
| Reach 2; +12 vs. AC; 1d8 damage plus 1d6 fire damage, and the target gains vulnerable 5 fire and is marked until the end of the flamespiker's next turn. | |
| ⊛ Spikebolt (standard; at-will) | |
| Ranged 5/10; +12 vs. AC; 1d10 + 5 damage. | |
| ⸸ Thunderfire Thrust (immediate reaction, when an enemy within 2 squares of the flamespiker shifts; recharge ⚄ ⁞⁞) ✦ Fire, Thunder | |
| The flamespiker uses stonespike against the triggering enemy. On a hit, the flamespiker makes a secondary attack against the same target. Secondary Attack: +10 vs. Fortitude; 5 thunder damage, and the target is stunned (save ends). | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Primordial |
| Str 13 (+3) | Dex 15 (+4) Wis 15 (+4) |
| Con 18 (+6) | Int 6 (+0) Cha 8 (+1) |

Flamespiker Lore

Arcana DC 12: A flamespiker is a living shell of stone with a hollow core of roiling flame. It blasts foes with burning shards of stone, rendering targets more susceptible to subsequent fire-based attacks.

Geonid

An elemental of rock and earth, the geonid lurks in the Underdark waiting for creatures to stumble across it. When dormant, it looks like a large boulder. Only when prey draws near does it reveal its true form.

| Geonid | Level 6 Lurker |
|---|---|
| Large elemental magical beast (earth) | XP 250 |
| Initiative +10 | Senses Perception +11; darkvision |
| HP 56; Bloodied 28 | |
| AC 20; Fortitude 18, Reflex 17, Will 17 | |
| Immune disease, petrification, poison | |
| Speed 4 | |
| ⊕ Tentacle (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; +11 vs. AC; 2d6 + 4 damage. | |
| ⸸ Capturing Grab (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; +11 vs. AC; 1d6 + 4 damage. Effect: The geonid makes one more attack against the same target. If both attacks hit, the target is grabbed. | |
| ✧ Shell Slam (standard; at-will) | |
| Close burst 2; +9 vs. Fortitude; the target is knocked prone. Effect: The geonid closes its shell. While the geonid's shell is closed, its speed is 0, it gains a +5 bonus to all defenses, and it does not have line of effect to any creature other than a creature it has grabbed. The geonid slides a creature it has grabbed into its space. The grabbed creature has line of sight and line of effect only to the geonid. The geonid does not gain its bonus to defenses against the grabbed creature. If the grabbed creature escapes, it appears in a space adjacent to the geonid. The geonid can open its shell as a minor action. | |
| Shell Form | |
| A geonid with its shell closed resembles a boulder. A creature can recognize the geonid as a beast by succeeding on a DC 28 Perception check. | |

| Str 19 (+7) | Dex 16 (+6) Wis 17 (+6) |
| Con 14 (+5) | Int 6 (+1) Cha 9 (+2) |

Geonid Lore

Arcana DC 17: During the war between the gods and the primordials, geonids served as guardians and watchers along the hidden pathways that honeycombed the world. Secret caches of weapons, treasure, and sleeping primordial war beasts still lurk in such places, forgotten by all but the geonids that still guard them.

Mud Lasher

A creature of elemental earth and water, the mud lasher is a vicious brute that delights in drowning its foes.

| Mud Lasher | Level 4 Brute |
|---|---|
| Medium elemental magical beast (earth, water) | XP 175 |
| Initiative +4 | Senses Perception +9; low-light vision |

| ⊁ Mud Ball (standard; at-will) | |
| Ranged 10; +5 vs. Reflex; the target is slowed (save ends). If the target is already slowed, it is instead immobilized (save ends). | |
| Amorphous Body (immediate reaction, when hit by a melee attack; encounter) | |
| The mud lasher shifts 3 squares. | |
| Relentless Assault | |
| A mud lasher gains a +2 bonus to attack rolls against slowed or immobilized creatures. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Primordial |
| Skills Stealth +9 | |
| Str 18 (+6) | Dex 15 (+4) Wis 15 (+4) |
| Con 13 (+3) | Int 8 (+1) Cha 11 (+2) |

Mud Lasher Lore

Arcana DC 12: A mud lasher buries a victim in shallow mud, then rests atop this crude grave to feast on the slowly rotting corpse. These creatures have no interest in gold, gems, and other riches, but treasure is sometimes interred with their victims.

Rockfist Smasher

Rockfist smashers take great pleasure in knocking foes to their knees.

| Rockfist Smasher | Level 10 Brute |
|---|---|
| Large elemental magical beast (earth) | XP 500 |
| Initiative +7 | Senses Perception +11 |

ZOLTAN BOROS & GABOR SZIKSZAI

Rockfist Smasher Lore

Arcana DC 16: Capricious and stupid, a rockfist smasher fights its way across a battlefield at random, focusing on a specific target only after it bloodies that foe.

Arcana DC 21: More intelligent creatures of the Elemental Chaos often gather a number of rockfist smashers and keep them in chambers as traps.

Shardstorm Vortex

Shardstorms arise in the Elemental Chaos like blizzards, hurling cutting slices of stone instead of snow. Among these storms lurk shardstorm vortices.

The shardstorm vortex is a scavenger, feeding on the destruction left behind by the battles of its more powerful elemental kin.

Shardstorm Vortex Level 7 Skirmisher
Medium elemental magical beast (air, earth) XP 300
Initiative +9 Senses Perception +6

Str 12 (+12) Dex 27 (+19) Wis 22 (+17)
Con 24 (+18) Int 5 (+8) Cha 6 (+9)

Shardstorm Vortex Lore

Arcana DC 14: The shardstorm vortex is a scavenger from the Elemental Chaos. Though it is rarely the first creature to enter a fight, its potent slam attack makes it a dangerous foe.

Stormstone Fury

A stormstone fury is a hulking creature of stone and thunder, both of which it unleashes at the slightest threat.

Stormstone Fury Level 14 Artillery
Medium elemental magical beast (air, earth) XP 1,000
Initiative +12 Senses Perception +9

↝ Hurtling Thunderstone (standard; at-will) ✦ Thunder
Ranged 20; +21 vs. AC; 2d8 + 6 damage. Miss: Half damage. Effect: One square the target currently occupies becomes the origin square of a burst 2 attack that occurs at the start of the stormstone fury's next turn: +19 vs. Fortitude; 1d10 + 6 thunder damage.
↭ Shrapnel Burst (minor; recharge ⚃ ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Thunder
Close burst 2; +21 vs. AC; 1d6 + 6 damage plus 1d6 thunder damage, and the stormstone fury pushes the target 2 squares.
Meld to Ground (when first bloodied; requires the stormstone fury to be on the ground; encounter) ✦ Teleportation
The fury disappears, and no creatures have line of sight or line of effect to it. At the start of its next turn, the fury appears within 10 squares of its previous space.
Alignment Unaligned Languages Primordial
Str 16 (+10) Dex 20 (+12) Wis 15 (+9)
Con 23 (+13) Int 6 (+5) Cha 20 (+12)

Stormstone Fury Lore

Arcana DC 18: Stormstone furies are creatures of stone and living thunder. A stormstone fury has no compunction about catching allies with its attacks, so these creatures fight best alongside those resistant to thunder. Dwarves covet thundering weapons crafted from the stone of a stormstone fury's body.

Tempest Wisp

A tempest wisp seeks out other creatures it can coerce to its side of a fight, using them as shields as it targets weaker foes.

| Tempest Wisp | Level 13 Controller |
|---|---|
| Medium elemental magical beast (air) | XP 800 |
| Initiative +10 Senses Perception +10 | |
| HP 134; Bloodied 67 | |

| Con 22 (+12) Int 9 (+5) Cha 14 (+8) | |

Tempest Wisp Lore

Arcana DC 18: A tempest wisp becomes solid when bloodied. Unlike many elementals, tempest wisps actively ally themselves with other creatures, hoping to stay behind them in battle.

Windfiend Fury

A cyclone of mist and lightning, the windfiend fury arcs through the air like a predator.

| Windfiend Fury | Level 12 Controller |
|---|---|
| Large elemental magical beast (air, water) | XP 700 |
| Initiative +11 Senses Perception +10 | |
| Forceful Zephyr aura 3; the windfiend fury slides each creature that starts its turn within the aura 1 square. | |

Windfiend Fury Lore

Arcana DC 16: As an opponent, the windfiend fury is difficult to pin down. If surrounded in melee, it explodes in a thunderous burst, then re-forms in another place farther away from its foes.

Arcana DC 21: Windfiend furies often accidentally cross the boundaries between planes. Swept up into a great storm on one plane, a windfiend fury can be pulled into a dangerous tempest that rages in another plane. Some archons know a way to imprison windfiend furies within magic vessels, which they then pilot to other planes using the elementals' power.

Windstriker

Windstrikers whirl out of nowhere to hammer foes with potent blasts of thunderous cold.

Their lethal fury comes in fits and starts as their winds seek to enwrap targets before the windstrikers blast them.

| Windstriker | Level 9 Lurker |

Windstriker Lore

Arcana DC 14: A windstriker targets a specific foe with its attacks, trusting its defenses to protect it from opportunity attacks as it whirls across the battlefield.

Encounter Groups

Elementals fight most commonly alongside their own kind, or with other creatures of the Elemental Chaos. Outside that plane, elementals are found as guardians of tombs and treasure-houses, or at locations where they have been summoned by powerful magic.

Level 4 Encounter (XP 875)
- ✦ 2 clay scouts (level 2 lurker, MM 156)
- ✦ 3 dust devils (level 3 skirmisher)

Fell Taint

Insubstantial alien predators from a twisted realm of madness, fell taints kill by generating insanity and despair in their victims. These unnatural horrors slip between worlds where and when the boundaries thin. Their presence alone opens any gap a bit wider, allowing more dreadful entities to pass through.

Fell Taint Lasher

A twisting knot of predatory tentacles, a fell taint lasher seizes its prey to feed on the madness it inspires.

Fell Taint Lasher Level 1 Soldier
Small aberrant magical beast XP 100

Initiative +3 Senses Perception +8
HP 20; Bloodied 10
AC 15; Fortitude 12, Reflex 12, Will 14
Resist insubstantial; Vulnerable 5 psychic
Speed 1, fly 6 (hover)

⊕ Tendril Caress (standard; at-will) ✦ Psychic
+5 vs. Reflex; 1d6 + 4 psychic damage.

Tendrils of Stasis (standard; at-will) ✦ Psychic
+5 vs. Will; 1d4 + 4 psychic damage, and the target is immobilized until the end of the fell taint lasher's next turn.

Fell Taint Feeding (standard; at-will) ✦ Healing
Targets a helpless or unconscious creature; the fell taint lasher loses insubstantial and its fly speed until the end of its next turn, and it makes a coup de grace against the target. If the lasher kills the target, it regains all of its hit points.

Flowing Tendrils (free, when the fell taint lasher makes an opportunity attack; at-will)
The lasher shifts 1 square.

Fell Taint Lasher Tactics

A fell taint lasher quickly closes and focuses on one victim. It begins with tendrils of stasis, hoping to use its mind-ravaging tendrils on a target that has been immobilized. It uses flowing tendrils to gain and maintain flanking.

Fell Taint Pulsar

A fell taint pulsar is an ambush hunter that attempts to disable its prey with a quick attack.

Fell Taint Pulsar Level 1 Artillery

Fell Taint Warp Wender Tactics

A fell taint warp wender attacks foes with psychic transposition, keeping as many dazed as possible. If sorely pressed, the warp wender uses a move action to fly up after dazing a foe, making for a bruising fall for an enemy that fails its saving throw.

Fell Taint Lore

Dungeoneering DC 10: Fell taints are strange, aberrant predators that kill by inflicting madness, feeding on the thoughts and emotions they steal from their foes.

Dungeoneering DC 15: The alien fell taints are only partially real. Although some aspect of them exists in the world, the rest is formed by the minds of those who view them.

Fell taints can live indefinitely without eating. They simply go dormant until a prospective meal comes near.

Fell taints come in a variety of types. Lashers must close to attack. Pulsars lurk in the shadows of high places, unleashing a flurry of mind-wrecking light rays from their eyes when prey is near. Thought eaters freeze their victims, consuming them at their leisure.

Dungeoneering DC 17: Fell taints originate in the alien Far Realm. There they are relatively weak predators, comparable to foxes in the world. They slip through weak points in the planar boundaries, seemingly finding them through instinct. When they come to the world or to other planes, they act as beacons for more deadly beings from their dread home. Their presence alone thins the barriers between planes.

Encounter Groups

Fell taints usually work only with their kind and other aberrant creatures of the Far Realm. Occasionally they are found with nonintelligent beings or undead. These alliances of convenience feature little cooperation and no communication.

Level 1 Encounter (XP 525)
- ✦ 1 fell taint thought eater (level 2 controller)
- ✦ 1 fell taint pulsar (level 1 artillery)
- ✦ 3 fell taint lashers (level 1 soldier)

Fey Lingerer Lore

Arcana or Religion DC 20: Fey lingerers are eladrin knights and wizards who refuse to die. They are not the gracious and mannered eladrin of the fey court, but are twisted and depraved, withdrawn from elven grace. When younger, more vibrant foes challenge the lingerers' strength, they retaliate furiously.

Arcana or Religion DC 25: Fey lingerer knights pine to relive past glories; incanters seek to rediscover lost rituals and spells. When they are destroyed, fey lingerers transform into vengeful incorporeal spirits.

Encounter Groups

Fey lingerers are encountered with other undead, and even with living eladrin loyal to them.

Level 18 Encounter (XP 11,600)
- ✦ 2 lingerer knights (level 16 elite soldier)
- ✦ 1 lingerer fell incanter (level 18 elite artillery)
- ✦ 1 bralani of autumn winds (level 19 controller, MM 102)

Firbolg

Large, fierce humanoids of the Feywild, firbolgs live for the hunt. They value independence, courage, and the middle ground between good and evil. They are agents of destiny, death, and the unforgiving wild.

Firbolg Hounder

A firbolg hounder openly attacks prey to distract it from the threat posed by the rest of its hunting band.

| Firbolg Hounder | Level 11 Soldier |
|---|---|
| Large fey humanoid | XP 600 |

Initiative +11 Senses Perception +9; low-light vision
HP 113; Bloodied 56
Regeneration 5
AC 28; Fortitude 24, Reflex 23, Will 23
Vulnerable necrotic (if the firbolg hounder takes necrotic damage, its regeneration does not function on its next turn)
Saving Throws +2 against charm effects, immobilized, restrained, and slowed
Speed 8

⊕ Battleaxe (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; +18 vs. AC; 1d12 + 7 damage.

Drive Prey (standard; recharges when first bloodied) ✦ Fear, Weapon
Reach 2; +17 vs. Fortitude; 2d8 + 7 damage, and the firbolg hounder slides the target 2 squares. The hounder makes a secondary attack. Secondary Attack: +15 vs. Will; the target must move or shift away from the hounder with its first action on its next turn or be dazed until the end of that turn.

Hounding Strike (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; +18 vs. AC; 1d12 + 7 damage, and the firbolg hounder slides the target 2 squares.

Handaxe (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Ranged 5/10; +17 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage, and the target is knocked prone.

Moonfire (minor 1/round; recharge ⚅)
Ranged 10; +16 vs. Will; until the end of the firbolg hounder's next turn, the target is marked and cannot benefit from invisibility or concealment.

Hunter's Leap
A firbolg hounder doesn't provoke opportunity attacks while jumping.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common, Elven
Skills Athletics +15, Intimidate +11, Nature +14, Stealth +14
Str 21 (+10) Dex 18 (+9) Wis 18 (+9)
Con 17 (+8) Int 11 (+5) Cha 12 (+6)
Equipment scale armor, light shield, battleaxe, 3 handaxes

Firbolg Hounder Tactics

Opening with moonfire, the firbolg uses drive prey to maneuver a foe into danger. It pursues the enemy, using hunter's leap if necessary. The hounder then keeps the battle moving and its allies in advantageous position using hounding strike. It throws a handaxe only to bring down elusive prey. If severely wounded, the firbolg hounder might use drive prey to disengage and flee.

Firbolg Hunter

The firbolg hunter specializes in stalking prey, leaping from hiding to attack after sturdier allies have engaged the enemy.

| Firbolg Hunter | Level 12 Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Large fey humanoid | XP 700 |

Initiative +14 Senses Perception +16; low-light vision

Regeneration 5
AC 26; Fortitude 22, Reflex 25, Will 24
Vulnerable necrotic (if the firbolg hunter takes necrotic damage, its regeneration does not function on its next turn)
Saving Throws +2 against charm effects, immobilized, restrained, and slowed
Speed 8

⊕ Spear (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; +17 vs. AC; 1d10 + 6 damage.

Javelin (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Ranged 10/20; +18 vs. AC; 1d8 + 7 damage.

Crippling Strike (standard; recharges when first bloodied)
The firbolg hunter makes a spear attack or a javelin attack. On a hit, the attack deals 2d6 extra damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends). Aftereffect: The target is slowed (save ends).

Mobile Attack (standard; at-will)
The firbolg hunter moves 8 squares and makes a spear attack or a javelin attack at any point during the move. The hunter doesn't provoke opportunity attacks when moving away from its target or when making the ranged attack.

Moonfire (minor 1/round; recharge ⚅)
Ranged 10; +16 vs. Will; until the end of the firbolg hunter's next turn, the hunter's attacks against the target deal 1d6 extra damage, and the target cannot benefit from invisibility or concealment.

Hunter's Leap
A firbolg hunter doesn't provoke opportunity attacks while jumping.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common, Elven
Skills Athletics +15, Intimidate +12, Nature +16, Stealth+17
Str 18 (+10) Dex 22 (+12) Wis 20 (+11)
Con 19 (+10) Int 12 (+7) Cha 13 (+7)
Equipment leather armor, spear, 3 javelins

Firbolg Hunter Tactics

The firbolg hunter uses moonfire to enhance the effectiveness of its crippling strike attack. It uses hunter's leap to escape its enemies and maneuver for combat advantage.

Firbolg Moon Seer

When battle is joined, the firbolg moon seer calls down darkest fate on the enemy.

Firbolg Moon Seer Level 14 Controller
Large fey humanoid XP 1,000

Initiative +11 Senses Perception +18; low-light vision
HP 141; Bloodied 70
Regeneration 5
AC 28; Fortitude 26, Reflex 24, Will 27

Saving Throws +2 against charm effects, immobilized, restrained, and slowed
Speed 8

⊕ Moon Mace (standard; at-will) ✦ Radiant, Weapon
Reach 2; +18 vs. Reflex; 1d10 + 7 radiant damage, and the target is blinded until the start of its next turn.

↛ Ban of the Raven (standard; encounter) ✦ Necrotic, Radiant
Ranged 10; +18 vs. Fortitude; 3d8 + 6 necrotic damage, attack rolls against the target can score critical hits on rolls of 18-20, and the target takes 10 extra necrotic damage from a critical hit (save ends both). Aftereffect: Attack rolls against the target can score critical hits on rolls of 19-20 (save ends).

↛ Moonfire (minor 1/round; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃)
Ranged 10; +18 vs. Will; until the end of the firbolg moon seer's next turn, the target grants combat advantage to the moon seer and cannot benefit from invisibility or concealment.

✧ Moonstrike (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚃) ✦ Charm, Psychic
Close burst 5; targets one enemy affected by moonfire; +18 vs. Will; 2d8 + 6 psychic damage, and the target is dominated until the end of the firbolg moon seer's next turn.

✧ Spirit Hounds (standard; recharges when first bloodied)
Close blast 5; targets enemies; +17 vs. Reflex; 2d6 + 6 damage, and the target is slowed and cannot teleport (save ends both).

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common, Elven
Skills Arcana +14, Athletics +15, Nature +18, Religion +14
Str 17 (+10) Dex 18 (+11) Wis 23 (+13)
Con 21 (+12) Int 14 (+9) Cha 15 (+9)
Equipment leather armor, mace, moon mask

Firbolg Moon Seer Tactics

When battle is joined, the firbolg moon seer targets one foe with moonfire, then makes that enemy more vulnerable with ban of the raven. The members of the firbolg hunt focus melee attacks on opponents affected by ban of the raven. The moon seer targets the largest number of enemies possible with a spirit hounds attack. It uses moonstrike late in battle—often to force the target to provide cover for the moon seer's escape.

Firbolg Bloodbear

With the ability to transform into the shape of a fearsome beast, the firbolg bloodbear is a reckless and savage opponent.

Firbolg Bloodbear Level 15 Elite Brute
Large fey humanoid XP 2,400

Initiative +12 Senses Perception +18; low-light vision
HP 240; Bloodied 120; see also bloodbear form
Regeneration 5 (10 while in bloodbear form)
AC 27; Fortitude 28, Reflex 25, Will 28
Vulnerable necrotic (if the firbolg bloodbear takes necrotic damage, its regeneration does not function on its next turn)
Saving Throws +2 (+4 against charm effects, immobilized, restrained, and slowed)
Speed 8
Action Points 1

⊕ Slam (standard; at-will)
Reach 2; +18 vs. AC; 2d8 + 9 damage.

⊕ Claw (standard; usable only while in bloodbear form; at-will)
Reach 2; +18 vs. AC; 2d12 + 9 damage.

⸸ Double Attack (standard; at-will)
The firbolg bloodbear makes two melee basic attacks. If the bloodbear hits with both attacks, it makes a secondary attack against the target. Secondary Attack: +17 vs. Fortitude; the target is grabbed.

⸸ Bloodbear Maul (standard; recharges when bloodied)
Reach 2; targets a creature grabbed by the firbolg bloodbear; no attack roll; 4d10 + 9 damage, and if the bloodbear is in bloodbear form, it makes a bite attack against the target as a free action.

⸸ Bite (standard; usable only while in bloodbear form; at-will)
+18 vs. AC; 3d12 + 9 damage, and if the target is granting combat advantage to the firbolg bloodbear, the target takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends).

↛ Moonfire (minor; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃)
Ranged 10; +15 vs. Will; until the end of the firbolg bloodbear's next turn, the target cannot benefit from invisibility or concealment.

Bloodbear Form (when first bloodied; encounter) ✦ Healing, Polymorph
The firbolg bloodbear takes the form of a humanoid-bear hybrid. It regains all of its hit points, gains regeneration 10, and gains bite and claw attacks. When the bloodbear is bloodied a second time, it reverts to its normal form until the end of the encounter.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common, Elven
Skills Athletics +19, Intimidate +13, Nature +18
Str 24 (+14) Dex 20 (+12) Wis 22 (+13)
Con 20 (+12) Int 12 (+8) Cha 13 (+8)
Equipment hide armor, bear helmet

Firbolg Bloodbear Tactics

Diving into the middle of combat, the firbolg bloodbear concentrates on one foe, attempting to grab that enemy for a bloodbear maul in the next round. The firbolg is reckless until it can transform into its bloodbear form. Then it acts like a berserk dire bear—only stronger and tougher—doing its best to use bloodbear maul again before it is forced out of bloodbear form.

Firbolg Ghostraven

From on high, this firbolg shapechanger glides into battle in its terrifying spectral form.

| Firbolg Ghostraven | Level 16 Elite Lurker |

Reach 2; +21 vs. AC; 1d12 + 7 damage (crit 2d12 + 19).

Double Attack (standard; at-will)
The firbolg ghostraven makes two heavy war pick attacks. If the ghostraven hits two targets with the attacks, one of the targets of the ghostraven's choice is blinded (save ends).

Moonfire (minor 1/round; recharge ⚁ ⚂ ⚃)
Ranged 10; +19 vs. Will; until the end of the firbolg ghostraven's next turn, the target cannot benefit from invisibility or concealment.

Ghostraven Form (minor; at-will) ✦ Polymorph
Until the firbolg ghostraven attacks, it gains insubstantial and phasing and gains a fly (clumsy) speed equal to its walk speed. While in dim light or darkness, it has concealment while in this form.

Ghostraven Strike
When the firbolg ghostraven hits a target that couldn't see the ghostraven at the start of the ghostraven's turn, the attack deals 2d8 extra damage.

Hunter's Flight
A firbolg ghostraven doesn't provoke opportunity attacks while jumping or when moving at half speed while flying.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common, Elven
Skills Athletics +18, Nature +18, Stealth +19
Str 20 (+13) Dex 23 (+14) Wis 21 (+13)
Con 17 (+11) Int 13 (+9) Cha 15 (+10)
Equipment leather armor, raven helmet, heavy war pick

Firbolg Ghostraven Tactics

The ghostraven employs double attack against two foes, hoping to blind one. It aims at least one attack per round at a blinded target in order to take advantage of ghostraven strike. Failing that, it uses ghostraven form to retreat into hiding to prepare another stealthy attack.

Firbolg Master of the Wild Hunt

The firbolg master of the Wild Hunt pursues one foe relentlessly across the field of battle.

| Firbolg Master of the Wild Hunt | Level 22 Elite Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Large fey humanoid | XP 8,300 |

Initiative +22 Senses Perception +24; low-light vision
HP 404; Bloodied 202
Regeneration 10
AC 36; Fortitude 33, Reflex 35, Will 34
Vulnerable necrotic (if the firbolg master of the Wild Hunt takes necrotic damage, its regeneration does not function on its next turn)
Saving Throws +2 (+4 against charm effects, immobilized, restrained, and slowed)
Speed 8, fly 8 (clumsy)
Action Points 1

Spear of the Hunt (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; +27 vs. AC; 2d10 + 7 damage.

Spear the Prey (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Ranged 10/20; +27 vs. AC; 2d10 + 7 damage. Effect: The firbolg master of the Wild Hunt's spear returns after the master makes the attack.

Double Attack (standard; at-will)
The firbolg master of the Wild Hunt makes two spear of the hunt attacks.

Mortal Strike (standard; recharges when first bloodied)
The firbolg master of the Wild Hunt makes a spear of the hunt attack or a spear the prey attack against a bloodied enemy. On a hit, the attack becomes a critical hit and deals 6d6 extra damage. If the attack reduces the target to 0 hit points or fewer, the master gains 1 action point.

Moonfire (minor 1/round; at-will)
Ranged 10; +25 vs. Will; until the end of the firbolg master of the Wild Hunt's next turn, the target is marked, grants combat advantage to the master, and cannot benefit from invisibility or concealment.

Moonhunter
A firbolg master of the Wild Hunt's attacks deal 2d6 extra damage to a creature affected by moonfire.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common, Elven
Skills Acrobatics +25, Athletics +23, Nature +24, Stealth +25
Str 24 (+18) Dex 28 (+20) Wis 26 (+19)
Con 18 (+15) Int 15 (+13) Cha 18 (+15)
Equipment light shield, stag helmet, longspear

Firbolg Master of the Wild Hunt Tactics

A firbolg master of the Wild Hunt places moonfire upon a foe quickly so that it loses no chance to take advantage of moonhunter. It then directs all efforts toward bloodying that foe in order to create the opportunity for a mortal strike. A firbolg master of the Wild Hunt can fly, and it does so mostly to avoid dangerous terrain and hazards.

Firbolg Lore

Arcana DC 20: Firbolgs are hunters of the Feywild, the creators and keepers of the Wild Hunt. Small settlements dot firbolg territory in the deep wilderness of the Feywild, perched on precarious heights, dangerous terrain, or floating motes of rock for greater defensibility.

Firbolg society is made up of clans led by the mightiest warriors, usually masters of the Wild Hunt. Clan and family ties are strong among firbolgs.

Arcana DC 25: The firbolgs' religion is centered on three deities: the Maiden (Sehanine), the Mother (Melora), and the Crone (the Raven Queen). As a people, they follow the Maiden's demands that they walk a middle road between good and evil.

Firbolg priests, who are usually female, are called moon seers and are treated with great respect. Seers and elite warriors dedicated to the deities wear masks or helmets that cover their features.

Arcana DC 30: Firbolgs love trophies and treasure, but they value other creatures' promises more than wealth. Firbolgs call a hunt to pursue oath breakers. It is said that a dark ritual can be used to call firbolgs to the world to hunt one who has broken a vow made to the ritual's performer or those the performer represents.

Encounter Groups

Firbolgs respect strength and forthrightness, endurance and skill. Numerous firbolgs serve other fey and mighty nonfey. They also allow others to join in Wild Hunts, which often include firbolg hounders, hunters, and moon seers. The most frightful Wild Hunts are composed of all sorts of fey led by a master of the Wild Hunt and his hounds.

Level 13 Encounter (XP 4,300)
- 2 centaur hunters (level 12 artillery)
- 2 firbolg hounders (level 11 soldier)
- 1 firbolg hunter (level 12 skirmisher)
- 1 firbolg moon seer (level 14 controller)

Level 22 Encounter (XP 22,700)
- 1 firbolg bloodbear (level 15 elite brute)
- 2 firbolg ghostravens (level 16 elite lurker)
- 1 firbolg master of the Wild Hunt (level 22 elite skirmisher)
- 2 Wild Hunt hounds (level 21 skirmisher, MM 161)

FOMORIAN

When the Feywild was young, it mirrored many aspects of the world, both foul and benign. Fomorians arose as dark reflections of the massive titans. To this day, these twisted giants continue to inhabit the Underdark of the Feywild. Their beautiful caverns house numerous eladrin slaves, cyclops followers, and other fey that have been turned to evil ways.

Fomorian Ghost Shaman

Generating a mist of darkness, the fomorian ghost shaman manipulates its foes like puppets.

| Fomorian Ghost Shaman | Level 16 Elite Controller |
|---|---|
| Huge fey humanoid (giant) | XP 2,800 |

Initiative +11 Senses Perception +10; darkvision, truesight 6
Aura of Eyes aura 3; each enemy within the aura takes a -3 penalty to attack rolls against the fomorian ghost shaman and cannot shift or charge.
HP 312; Bloodied 156
AC 30; Fortitude 28, Reflex 26, Will 30
Saving Throws +2
Speed 8
Action Points 1

Death's Touch (standard; at-will)
Reach 3; +20 vs. Fortitude; 4d4 + 5 necrotic damage, and the target is slowed (save ends).

Evil Eye (minor 1/round; at-will)
Ranged 5; +20 vs. Reflex; the target gains ongoing 10 necrotic damage (save ends).

Spirits of Possession (standard; at-will) ✦ Charm
Close blast 3; targets creatures that have ongoing necrotic damage; +20 vs. Will; the target is dominated (save ends).

Darksoul Mist (standard; recharge ⚅) ✦ Zone
Area burst 2 within 10; +20 vs. Fortitude; 2d8 + 7 necrotic damage, and the target is slowed (save ends). Effect: The burst creates a zone of darkness that lasts until the end of the encounter. The zone blocks line of sight for any creature without darkvision.

Alignment Evil Languages Elven
Str 13 (+9) Dex 17 (+11) Wis 15 (+10)
Con 20 (+13) Int 16 (+11) Cha 24 (+15)

Fomorian Ghost Shaman Tactics

A fomorian ghost shaman lurks just behind the front-line warriors, using its evil eye on its foes and then dominating them with spirits of possession.

Fomorian Cackler

A fomorian cackler is a sly assassin that finds evil glee in sinking its daggers into an enemy's heart.

| Fomorian Cackler | Level 17 Elite Lurker |
|---|---|
| Huge fey humanoid (giant) | XP 3,200 |

Initiative +17 Senses Perception +17; truesight 6
Cackling Depravity aura 1; each enemy within the aura takes a -2 penalty to Will.
HP 262; Bloodied 131
AC 31; Fortitude 30, Reflex 28, Will 27
Saving Throws +2
Speed 8
Action Points 1

Disembowel (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 3; +22 vs. AC; 2d8 + 7 damage.

Evil Eye (minor; at-will)
Ranged 5; +20 vs. Will; the target treats the fomorian cackler as invisible (save ends).

Fomorian ghost shaman

JASON A. ENGLE (2)

Heartseeking Daggers (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Ranged 10; targets one or two creatures; +22 vs. AC; 2d8 + 7 damage. Effect: The daggers return to the fomorian cackler after it makes the attack.

Invisible Mania
A fomorian cackler's attacks deal 4d6 extra damage against a creature that cannot see the cackler.

Size Alteration (minor; at-will)
The fomorian cackler changes its size to Medium and the cackler's reach for disembowel becomes 1. The cackler can use a minor action to return to its normal size and regain its normal reach.

Alignment Evil Languages Elven
Skills Bluff +14, Stealth +18
Str 24 (+15) Dex 21 (+13) Wis 19 (+12)
Con 23 (+14) Int 15 (+10) Cha 13 (+9)
Equipment 2 daggers

Fomorian Cackler Tactics

A fomorian cackler prefers to ambush enemies from places where a fomorian could not normally fit. It uses evil eye to render itself invisible to one or two targets, then concentrates its attacks on those foes to take advantage of invisible mania.

Fomorian Totemist

Festooned with a chain of severed heads, a fomorian totemist wields evil magic on the battlefield.

Fomorian Totemist Level 18 Elite Skirmisher
Huge fey humanoid (giant, undead) XP 4,000
Initiative +17 Senses Perception +14; truesight 6
HP 352; Bloodied 176
AC 32; Fortitude 31, Reflex 29, Will 29
Saving Throws +2
Speed 8
Action Points 1

Chain of Skulls (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 4; +23 vs. AC; 2d8 + 3 damage, and ongoing 5 necrotic damage (save ends).

Voodoo (minor 1/round; at-will)
Reach 4; +21 vs. Will; 2d6 psychic damage, and the fomorian totemist chooses one of the following three effects.
Glorious Head: The target is blinded (save ends).
Wasting Head: The target is weakened (save ends).
Bewildering Head: The target must make a melee basic attack against an ally adjacent to it.
Effect: The totemist shifts 1 square after the attack.

Evil Eye (minor; at-will)
Ranged 5; +21 vs. Will; 10 necrotic damage, and the target takes a -2 penalty to saving throws until the end of the fomorian totemist's next turn.

Fresh Rage
A fomorian totemist's first successful attack during its turn deals 5 extra damage.

Alignment Evil Languages Elven
Str 27 (+17) Dex 22 (+15) Wis 21 (+14)
Con 24 (+16) Int 15 (+11) Cha 23 (+15)
Equipment chain strung with skulls

(Left to right) fomorian butcher and cackler

(Top to bottom) fomorian blinder and totemist

Fomorian Totemist Tactics

A fomorian totemist never stays still. It uses evil eye on the most capable foes, to prevent them from saving against its voodoo attacks. If any fey are among its opponents, it focuses its attacks on them.

Fomorian Blinder

The fomorian blinder uses the power of its evil eye to debilitate its foes.

| Fomorian Blinder | Level 20 Elite Artillery |
|---|---|
| Huge fey humanoid (giant) | XP 5,600 |
| Initiative +11 | Senses Perception +18; truesight 6 |
| HP 296; Bloodied 148 | |
| AC 32; Fortitude 31, Reflex 33, Will 31 | |
| Saving Throws +2 | |
| Speed 8 | |
| Action Points 1 | |
| ⊕ Quarterstaff (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| Reach 3; +27 vs. AC; 1d12 + 10 damage. | |
| Evil Eye (minor; at-will) | |
| Ranged 10; +25 vs. Fortitude; the target is affected by the fomorian's evil eye (save ends). While the target is affected by evil eye, whenever the fomorian blinder's attack damages a creature other than the target, the target takes an equal amount of damage. The effect ends if the blinder uses evil eye against a different target. | |
| Acid Eye (standard; at-will) ✦ Acid, Necrotic | |
| Ranged 10; targets one or two creatures; +25 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 9 acid and necrotic damage, and the target cannot use encounter or daily attack powers until the end of the target's next turn. | |
| Shower of Ichor (minor; encounter) ✦ Acid, Necrotic | |
| Area burst 2 within 10; +23 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 9 acid and necrotic damage, and ongoing 10 acid and necrotic damage (save ends). | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages Elven |
| Str 23 (+16) | Dex 12 (+11) Wis 16 (+13) |
| Con 22 (+16) | Int 26 (+18) Cha 23 (+16) |
| Equipment quarterstaff | |

Fomorian Blinder Tactics

A fomorian blinder uses evil eye against foes it thinks are most likely to attack it, especially spellcasters. It uses acid eye every round, spending an action point to catch bloodied foes within shower of ichor.

Fomorian Butcher

Brutal and relentless, a fomorian butcher fixates on one opponent, trying to hack the creature to death with its falchion.

ZOLTAN BOROS & GABOR SZIKSZAI

| Fomorian Butcher | Level 22 Elite Brute |
|---|---|
| Huge fey humanoid (giant) | XP 8,300 |

Initiative +15 Senses Perception +16; truesight 6
HP 514; Bloodied 257
AC 34; Fortitude 36, Reflex 32, Will 33
Saving Throws +2
Speed 8
Action Points 1

(+) Falchion (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 3; +25 vs. AC; 4d4 + 14 (crit 12d4 + 24) damage.

Evil Eye (minor; at-will)
Ranged 5; +23 vs. Will; the target is restrained (save ends). The effect ends if the fomorian butcher uses evil eye against a different target.

Fomorian Brutality
When the fomorian butcher scores a critical hit against a target affected by its evil eye, it makes a falchion attack against the same target as a free action.

Fomorian Butchery
A fomorian butcher's falchion attack deals 2d12 + 11 extra damage against a creature that the butcher has hit since the start of the butcher's last turn.

Alignment Evil Languages Elven

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Str 27 (+20) | Dex 19 (+15) | Wis 10 (+11) |
| Con 27 (+20) | Int 11 (+11) | Cha 20 (+16) |

Equipment hide armor, falchion

Fomorian Butcher Tactics

A fomorian butcher charges the most physically dangerous-looking foe, hewing wildly with its massive falchion. It then uses its evil eye to prevent the enemy from escaping. It spends an action point to make another falchion attack when that opponent becomes bloodied. It concentrates on one foe, trying to do as much damage as possible with fomorian butchery.

Fomorian Lore

Arcana DC 14: Fomorians have a peculiar obsession with the other denizens of the Feywild. They loathe them passionately, but desire their subjugation, not their destruction. In their minds, the ideal Feywild is one in which each fomorian lives as royalty, ruling over all other creatures. For this reason, they wage an eternal war with the eladrin and other fey, forever seeking to achieve this impossible goal.

Arcana DC 22: Ghost shamans enslave the spirits of those they kill. They use these spirits in combat, but also keep them as sources of amusement, forcing them to dance or play out haunting shadow plays. These evil giants make frequent forays into the Shadowfell to discover its secrets.

The totemist takes heads from those it slays and adds them to its chain of heads. Once it imbues the heads with necromantic power, its attacks with the chain of heads can have a different result depending on which head strikes the foe. Fomorian totemists often prefer a certain type of head and can become obsessive about their collections. One might favor eladrin heads, while another might prefer dwarves for their long beards. Some totemists select future victims years before coming to claim their heads, patiently waiting for their chosen targets to "mature" and adopt the appearance they can see with their prescient evil eyes.

Cacklers laugh like mad fools almost constantly, but a cackler's manic air belies its fiendish mind. Cacklers are silent only when they seek to be hidden, and they have extraordinary stealth for their massive height and weight. Due to their ability to change size, cacklers sometimes adopt magic disguises to travel among lesser creatures. When they adopt the disguise of another creature, they easily take on its mannerisms. Their madness allows them to assume these other personalities with ease. However, such personalities remain with the cackler and sometimes emerge unbidden at later times.

Foul formorian blinders take the eyes of other creatures and use them to attack foes. They delight in carrying these tiny trophies of their victims. Blinders know the most about fomorians and their culture, acting as the sages and scholars of their race. It's said that if any possess the secret to a defense against the evil eye, a blinder surely knows it.

Arcana DC 27: Fomorian butchers are the most sadistic among fomorians and have been known to cut slaves in half simply for the joy of it. Their simple-minded pleasure in slaughter makes them frequent targets for recruitment and manipulation by other creatures. Fomorian butchers often work with devils, greedily trading their souls and some mysterious afterlife for the power they desire in the Feywild and beyond.

Encounter Groups

The fomorians work with other sinister forces of the Feywild, and with the drow.

Level 15 Encounter (XP 6,600)
- 1 drow arachnomancer (level 13 artillery, MM 94)
- 1 drow blademaster (level 13 elite skirmisher, MM 94)
- 1 fomorian ghost shaman (level 16 elite controller)
- 8 Lolthbound goblin slaves (level 12 minion skirmisher)

Level 21 Encounter (XP 16,300)
- 1 fomorian butcher (level 22 elite brute)
- 1 fomorian cackler (level 17 elite lurker)
- 1 fomorian painbringer (level 19 elite controller, MM 110)

Level 22 Encounter (XP 23,200)
- 1 fomorian blinder (level 20 elite artillery)
- 2 fomorian totemists (level 18 elite skirmisher)
- 3 fomorian warriors (level 17 elite soldier, MM 110)

Genasi

A proud race of humanoids infused with the energy of the Elemental Chaos, genasi vary in appearance and personality. At home strolling through the corridors of churning energy of the Elemental Chaos, they also delight in the verdant forests of the Feywild and the quaint cities of the world. Among the genasi are hot-blooded fireblades, adventuring skyspies, taciturn stoneshields, and elemental dervishes, which tap the energy of their elemental heritage.

Genasi Elemental Dervish

A graceful master of the double sword, a genasi elemental dervish is equally capable of reaching a foe on land, through water, or in the air.

Genasi Elemental Dervish Level 18 Elite Skirmisher
Medium elemental humanoid (air, earth, fire, water) XP 4,000

Initiative +17 Senses Perception +13
HP 344; Bloodied 172
AC 32; Fortitude 30, Reflex 32, Will 30
Resist 10 cold, 10 fire, 10 lightning
Saving Throws +3
Speed 6, fly 6 (hover), swim 6
Action Points 1

⊕ Double Sword (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon; Varies
+23 vs. AC; 1d8 + 7 damage, and ongoing 5 damage (save ends) of the type determined by elemental manifestation.

↓ Double Attack (standard; at-will)
The genasi elemental dervish makes two double sword attacks.

↓ Fiery Riposte (immediate reaction, when the genasi elemental dervish is hit by an enemy adjacent to it; at-will) ✦ Fire
Targets the triggering enemy; +21 vs. Reflex; the target takes ongoing 10 fire damage (save ends). If the target is already taking ongoing fire damage, that damage increases by 10.

↓ Primordial Storm (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Weapon
The genasi elemental dervish shifts 6 squares and can move through enemies' spaces. During its movement, the dervish makes the following three attacks in order, each against a different target.
Promise of Storm (Thunder): +21 vs. Fortitude; 1d8 + 5 thunder damage, and the target gains vulnerable 5 thunder (save ends).
Earth Shock: +21 vs. Fortitude; 1d8 + 5 damage, and the target is dazed until the end of its next turn.
Lightning Cut (Lightning): +21 vs. Reflex; 1d8 + 5 lightning damage, and the target gains ongoing 10 lightning damage (save ends).

Elemental Manifestation
At the start of a genasi elemental dervish's turn, it chooses fire, lightning, or thunder damage. The dervish's double sword attack deals that type of damage until the start of its next turn, when it can choose a different damage type.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common, Primordial
Skills Acrobatics +20, Athletics +21, Endurance +21, Intimidate +16, Nature +20
Str 19 (+13) Dex 24 (+16) Wis 18 (+13)
Con 20 (+14) Int 16 (+12) Cha 15 (+11)
Equipment hide armor, double sword

Genasi Elemental Dervish Tactics

The genasi elemental dervish adapts to its enemies' vulnerabilities. It uses promise of storm and lightning cut against defenders, and it employs earth shock against strikers or mobile foes.

Genasi Fireblade

The genasi fireblade rushes into combat, swinging its flaming blade at the nearest enemies.

Genasi Fireblade Level 11 Brute
Medium elemental humanoid (fire) XP 600

Initiative +6 Senses Perception +7
HP 139; Bloodied 69
AC 23; Fortitude 25, Reflex 22, Will 21
Resist 10 fire
Speed 6

⊕ Falchion (standard; at-will) ✦ Fire, Weapon
+14 vs. AC; 2d4 + 6 damage (crit 4d4 + 14), and ongoing 5 fire damage (save ends).

↓ Fiery Riposte (immediate reaction, when the genasi fireblade is hit by an enemy adjacent to it; at-will) ✦ Fire
Targets the attacker; +13 vs. Reflex; the target takes ongoing 5 fire damage (save ends). If the target is already taking ongoing fire damage, that damage increases by 5.

⇢ Fan the Flames (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Fire
Close burst 1; +12 vs. Reflex; the target takes ongoing 5 fire damage (save ends), and the target takes a -2 penalty to saving throws against ongoing fire damage until the end of the encounter.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common, Primordial
Skills Endurance +18, Intimidate +10
Str 22 (+11) Dex 13 (+6) Wis 15 (+7)
Con 19 (+9) Int 17 (+8) Cha 11 (+5)
Equipment hide armor, falchion

Genasi Fireblade Tactics

The genasi fireblade positions itself among several enemies and uses fan the flames to give enemies penalties to saving throws against fire. It uses fiery riposte at each opportunity. If an enemy has resistance to fire, the genasi fireblade seeks other, more susceptible targets.

Genasi Hydromancer

The genasi share a bond with the essence of elemental matter. The hydromancer learns to manipulate that bond, using magic to transform itself into a being of pure water and then back to solid form.

| Genasi Hydromancer | Level 8 Controller |
|---|---|
| Medium elemental humanoid (water) | XP 350 |

Initiative +7 Senses Perception +5
HP 91; Bloodied 45
AC 22; Fortitude 21, Reflex 20, Will 20
Speed 6, swim 8
Saving Throws +2 against ongoing damage

Scimitar (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+13 vs. AC; 2d8 + 4 damage (crit 1d8 + 20).

Wave Bolt (standard; at-will)
Ranged 5; +13 vs. AC; 2d6 + 4 damage, and the genasi hydromancer slides the target 3 squares.

Drowning Touch (standard; recharges when the target saves against this attack's ongoing damage or when it drops to 0 hit points or fewer) +12 vs. Fortitude; the target is dazed and takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends both).

Whirling Vortex (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅)
Close burst 2; targets enemies; +12 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 6 damage, and the genasi hydromancer slides the target 3 squares.

Liquid Body (immediate interrupt, when hit by an enemy's attack; recharges when first bloodied)
The genasi hydromancer takes half damage from the triggering attack.

Swift Current (move; encounter)
The genasi hydromancer shifts 6 squares. During its movement, the hydromancer can move through enemy-ocupied spaces, move across liquid, and ignore difficult terrain and hazardous terrain effects.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common, Primordial
Skills Acrobatics +12, Arcana +10, Stealth +12
Str 14 (+6) Dex 16 (+7) Wis 13 (+5)
Con 19 (+8) Int 13 (+5) Cha 17 (+7)
Equipment robes, scimitar

Genasi Hydromancer Tactics

Genasi hydromancers rely on swift current and liquid body to allow them to dart into the middle of a group of enemies before unleashing whirling vortex to scatter foes. The hydromancer saves drowning touch for its deadliest foe, channeling water into the target's lungs to slay him or her.

Genasi Skyspy

A genasi skyspy uses its ability to fly for short distances to engage in hit-and-run attacks, doing as much damage as possible with its short swords before retreating to attack again elsewhere.

| Genasi Skyspy | Level 7 Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Medium elemental humanoid (air) | XP 300 |

Initiative +9 Senses Perception +9
HP 78; Bloodied 39
AC 20; Fortitude 19, Reflex 20, Will 17
Resist 5 cold
Speed 6; see also sky jaunt

Short Sword (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+12 vs. AC; 1d6 + 4 damage, and the genasi skyspy shifts 1 square.

Swiftwind Strike (standard; requires combat advantage against the target; at-will)
The genasi skyspy makes two short sword attacks against one target.

Manifest Whirlwind (standard; encounter)
Close burst 2; +10 vs. Reflex; 2d6 + 3 damage, and the target is pushed 1 square and knocked prone.

Feather-Footed
A genasi skyspy has a +2 bonus to AC against opportunity attacks.

Sky Jaunt (minor; recharge ⚁ ⚄ ⚅)
Until the end of its turn, the genasi skyspy gains a fly speed equal to its speed and can hover.

Genasi Skyspy Tactics

The genasi skyspy engages targets and then retreats before becoming mired in combat. It capitalizes on combat advantage by moving in and striking twice with its short swords before shifting away. A skyspy that becomes locked in combat uses manifest whirlwind to knock enemies back, creating opportunities for escape.

Genasi Stoneshield

Immovable defender of its allies, the genasi stoneshield strides among its enemies, dealing blows with its heavy war pick.

Genasi Stoneshield Tactics

The genasi stoneshield enters combat with mighty bull rush and then marks its enemies on subsequent turns with its heavy war pick attacks. The stoneshield pursues fleeing enemies, or knocks enemies down with earth shock.

Genasi Lore

Arcana DC 10: Genasi have five types of manifestation: airsoul, earthsoul, firesoul, thundersoul, and watersoul. A genasi can usually manifest only one type. Each manifestation bestows different powers and resistances.

Genasi share personality traits based on their manifestations. Typically, airsouls are fickle and capricious, earthsouls are stoic and cautious, firesouls are temperamental and impulsive, thundersouls are bold and proud, and watersouls are amenable and friendly.

Arcana DC 16: Some genasi can change their elemental manifestations or manifest multiple elements. Genasi can channel their elemental manifestations through their weapons, creating blades of fire, ice, or lightning.

Arcana DC 21: Genasi were originally servants of djinns, efreets, and other primordials. In the Elemental Chaos, many genasi still serve primordials. During the war between the deities and the primordials, genasi rebelled and gained freedom. The primordials created archons to replace them.

Encounter Groups

Genasi sometimes accompany other natives of the Elemental Chaos: archons, djinns, efreets, and elementals. Otherwise, they roam far and wide.

Level 8 Encounter (XP 1,800)
- 3 genasi skyspies (level 7 skirmisher)
- 3 hippogriff dreadmounts (level 5 soldier, MM 146)
- 1 shardstorm vortex (level 7 skirmisher)

Level 10 Encounter (XP 2,700)

- 2 genasi elemental dervishes (level 18 elite skirmisher)
- 1 storm archon squallshield (level 17 soldier)
- 1 storm archon tempest weaver (level 21 artillery)

LARS GRANT-WEST

GHOST LEGIONNAIRE

SLAIN IN LONG-AGO BATTLES, these soldiers fight for forgotten causes, distant memories, or a fierce loyalty to each other. Although they appear as separate soldiers, their spirits have fused into a single entity that lives and dies as a single soul. Enemies that know of the battles ghost legionnaires once fought can use that knowledge to their own advantage.

GHOST LEGIONNAIRE LORE

Religion DC 18: The ghost legionnaire has the power to possess others and force them to relive the ghost's last few moments on the battlefield. While possessed, the target can see, hear, and feel everything the ghost legionnaire experienced. The possessed creature even appears to have the same wounds that the ghost legionnaire suffered.

Religion DC 23: When wounded, legionnaires display wounds and battle damage from the fight that killed them originally, no matter what type of damage they currently take.

ENCOUNTER GROUPS

Ghost legionnaires are occasionally recruited by other undead, particularly if they fell in the same battle.

⨺ Battle Visions (standard; encounter) ✦ Psychic, Reliable
Ranged 10/20; +16 vs. Will; 2d8 + 6 psychic damage, and the target is deafened and dominated (save ends both). While the target is dominated, the ghost legionnaire merges with the target, disappearing from sight. The legionnaire cannot attack or be attacked during this time. When the target saves, the legionnaire appears in a square adjacent to the target. Until the end of the encounter, the target gains a +5 bonus to History checks for call of history.

Soul Link
At the start of the encounter, ghost legionnaires' hit points combine into one sum. Damage to a legionnaire deducts from that total. When that total is reduced to 0, all legionnaires are destroyed simultaneously.

Call of History
Any character can make a DC 25 History check as a minor action to attempt to learn more about the ghost legionnaire. If the check succeeds, the legionnaire gains vulnerable 10 to that character's next attack.

RALPH HORSLEY

Giants inhabit the various climates of the world and elsewhere. From the tallest peak to the frozen tundra, from the Feywild to the Shadowfell, these hulking creatures thrive.

Eldritch Giant

Eldritch giants come from a different time—an earlier age when the primordials made the world. Although fashioned from fire, stone, and storm, the primordials' wondrous creation was heavily invested with magic, and the eldritch giants aided their primordial lords in the world's formation. Although their powers have ebbed since those days, eldritch giants remember their ancient mastery of magic and forever seek to regain it.

Eldritch Titan Tactics

An eldritch titan bathes an area in eldritch field at the start of a fight, then makes a force hammer attack to knock as many of its foes prone as it can. It uses its eldritch fury attacks as often as possible.

FRANCIS TSAI

Eldritch Giant Lore

Arcana DC 20: Eldritch giants dwell near fonts of magical power. They guard such places jealously, leaving them only to seek out more magical power, such as an artifact or a piece of lost knowledge. Eldritch titans lord over their lesser kin, jealously guarding the greatest items and secrets of magic for themselves.

Arcana DC 25: An eldritch giant's skin is tattooed with magical patterns that protect it and allow it to absorb conjurations and zones to bolster its attacks. These patterns also grant the giant the ability to teleport on flows of arcane energy. A particular eldritch giant or titan might have access to other magical powers, as well as rituals and magic items.

Encounter Groups

Eldritch giants can occasionally be found with other magic users, but they are unreliable allies. They prefer magical servants and delight in enslaving weaker creatures.

Frost Titan Tactics

Initially, a frost titan unleashes blast of winter. It then uses cold-blooded kick and icy greataxe attacks to drive foes before it. A frost titan prefers melee, and it uses ice bolts and its Fimbulwinter breath aura to prevent foes from escaping.

Frost Giant Lore

Arcana DC 22: In their arctic lands, frost giants dwell in glacial caves or crude fortresses carved of stone and ice. From these holds, frost giants hunt game and raid for slaves and plunder. The mightiest frost giant in a clan, called a jarl, leads weaker giants though intimidation and violence.

Ice shapers, the frost giants' seers, gain respect from their kind for their augeries and wisdom. They engender fear with their cruelty and ferocity.

Arcana DC 27: A few frost giants have magical powers and can use runes, sorcery, and foul rituals. Such powers give a giant influence in its clan, if not outright leadership.

Encounter Groups

Frost giants enslave or ally with other creatures that prefer the cold. When they raid more temperate climes, they come by other sorts of slaves. Mammoths, remorhazes, white dragons, and similar creatures are found with frost giants.

Level 19 Encounter (XP 12,000)

(Left to right) stone giant, stone titan, and stone giant runecarver

Stone Giant

Atop forbidding peaks and in the deep reaches of mountain ranges dwell stone giants. These rockbound beings show little concern for smaller creatures, and they distrust strangers. A stone giant aroused to violence can be as startling and pitiless as an avalanche.

Stone Giant Lore

Arcana DC 25: Stone giants move slowly and quietly among the mountains and within their rocky cave homes, blending with the terrain so well that they can easily waylay foes or go unnoticed. Brooding and contemplative, stone giants can rest in thought for years, sitting like statues. With weapons and thrown stones, they are expert hunters. When roused to anger, a stone giant is able to move its bulk with precision and quickness.

Particularly at night and during thunderstorms, stone giants play by throwing rocks at each other—the losing side is the one hit more often. During such contests, the giants seldom watch out for unexpected passersby. Such heedless "games" give stone giants a rougher reputation than they might deserve.

Arcana DC 30: Stone giants are artistic and craft-oriented, especially with stone. Runecarvers use arcane lore to craft runes of ancient magic upon surfaces. With these spells set in stone, they smite foes. The art of rune magic might have originated with ancient stone giants, although dwarf artificers surely disagree.

Stone Giant Tactics

A stone giant hides among the cliffs and ambushes approaching enemies with hurled rocks. It then rushes in with staggering sweep to drive foes back. It stays in melee until opponents retreat, then goes back to hurling rocks until any threat is out of range.

Stone Titan Tactics

Displaying speed, agility, and stealth, a stone titan uses launch quakestone from hiding, continuing to toss boulders until enemies come close enough for a quick rush into melee. Next, the titan moves to catch numerous foes with an avalanche stomp attack. It then lays about with its massive fists until it has a chance to use launch quakestone again. The stone titan continues to launch ranged attacks against retreating adversaries until those foes are out of range.

Encounter Groups

Stone giants keep pets and, rare among their kin, have ties other than those of master and slave with galeb duhrs and azers. Sometimes giants with non-evil ways can be found among stone giants. Evil stone giants might ally with other evil giants.

Level 15 Encounter (XP 6,400)
- 3 stone giants (level 14 soldier)
- 1 stone giant runecarver (level 16 controller)
- 1 nabassu gargoyle (level 18 lurker, MM 115)

Level 18 Encounter (XP 11,200)
- 2 stone titans (level 18 elite soldier)
- 1 azer taskmaster (level 17 controller, MM 23)
- 4 azer warriors (level 17 minion, MM 22)

Gnolls honor chaos and carnage above all else. Their devotion to the demon lord Yeenoghu drives them to commit acts of butchery.

Deathpledged Gnoll

A deathpledged gnoll vows to die destroying the enemies of Yeenoghu. Its dark oath and a thirst for blood make this creature a frightful foe.

| Deathpledged Gnoll | Level 5 Brute |
|---|---|

Deathpledged Gnoll Lore

Nature DC 12: In return for its vow to its demon lord Yeenoghu, a deathpledged gnoll can temporarily shrug off death with potent demonic powers.

Fang of Yeenoghu

Gnolls are known for their rituals honoring the demon lord Yeenoghu. The fangs of Yeenoghu are the shamans that lead these rites.

| Fang of Yeenoghu | Level 7 Skirmisher (Leader) |
|---|---|
| Medium natural humanoid | XP 300 |
| Initiative +9 | Senses Perception +3; low-light vision |
| HP 77; Bloodied 38 | |

| Speed 8 | |
| ⊕ Cudgel of Bloody Teeth (standard; at-will) ✦ Disease, Weapon | |
| +12 vs. AC; 1d10 + 6 damage (1d10 + 8 while bloodied), and the fang of Yeenoghu makes a secondary attack against the same target. Secondary Attack: +10 vs. Fortitude; the target is exposed to level 6 slavering canker (see below). | |
| ⊕ Relentless Push (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| The fang of Yeenoghu shifts 2 squares before the attack: +12 vs. AC; 1d10 + 6 damage (1d10 + 8 while bloodied), and the fang of Yeenoghu pushes the target 1 square. Effect: One ally within 5 squares of the fang of Yeenoghu shifts 1 square as a free action. | |
| Howl of the Demon (standard; recharge ⁞⁞) | |
| Close burst 5; targets each ally of level 10 or lower in the burst; the target makes a melee basic attack as a free action. | |
| Pack Attack | |
| A fang of Yeenoghu's melee attacks deal 5 extra damage against an enemy that has two or more gnoll allies adjacent to it. | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil | Languages Abyssal, Common |
| Skills Insight +8, Intimidate +11, Religion +8 | |
| Str 16 (+6) | Dex 19 (+7) Wis 11 (+3) |
| Con 13 (+4) | Int 10 (+3) Cha 16 (+6) |
| Equipment hide armor, cudgel of bloody teeth (greatclub) | |

Fang of Yeenoghu Lore

Nature DC 14: Fangs of Yeenoghu earn their place in the demon lord's ranks by capturing slaves and sending them to serve Yeenoghu in the Abyss.

Nature DC 19: A cudgel of bloody teeth is a gruesome greatclub studded with teeth and crusted with blood. While a fang of Yeenoghu fights, its cudgel of bloody teeth continually oozes fresh blood and spittle. Once its wielder is killed, the cudgel quickly rots away.

Nature DC 21: Those gnolls that serve as fodder for the gnoll gorger are rewarded for their sacrifice by the fang of Yeenoghu. A gnoll slain by a gorger has its teeth added to the cudgel of bloody teeth, allowing it to taste the blood of its enemies even in death.

| Slavering Canker | Level 6 Disease | Endurance improve DC 23, maintain DC 19, worsen DC 18 or lower |
|---|---|---|
| The target is cured. | ◀ Initial Effect: The target takes a –1 penalty to attack rolls and damage rolls. | ◀▶ The target takes a –2 penalty to attack rolls and damage rolls, and regains 5 fewer than the normal number of hit points from healing effects. | ▶ Final State: The target is weakened, and must rest for twice as long as normal to gain the benefit of a short rest or an extended rest. |

Gnoll Gorger

All gnolls devour the flesh of sentients, but gorgers gain strength in battle by feasting on their own kind.

| Gnoll Gorger | Level 7 Brute |
|---|---|
| Medium natural humanoid | XP 300 |
| Initiative +6 | Senses Perception +3; low-light vision |
| HP 96; Bloodied 48 | |
| AC 19; Fortitude 20, Reflex 18, Will 18 | |
| Speed 7 | |
| ⊕ Bite (standard; at-will) | |
| +10 vs. AC; 2d6 + 8 damage (2d6 + 10 while bloodied). | |
| Gorge (minor 1/round; at-will) ✦ Healing | |
| The gnoll gorger feeds upon an ally adjacent to it. The ally takes 5 damage, and the gorger regains 10 hit points. | |
| Pack Attack | |
| A gnoll gorger's melee attacks deal 5 extra damage against an enemy that has two or more gnoll allies adjacent to it. | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil | Languages Abyssal, Common |
| Skills Intimidate +11, Stealth +11 | |
| Str 20 (+8) | Dex 17 (+6) | Wis 11 (+3) |
| Con 16 (+6) | Int 9 (+2) | Cha 17 (+6) |
| Equipment leather armor | |

Gnoll Gorger Tactics

A gnoll gorger recklessly charges into combat, laying into foes with its bite attack. It uses its gorge power each round, focusing on the most robust allies available.

Gnoll Gorger Lore

Nature DC 14: Gnoll gorgers draw strength from the blood of their kin. They feast on the flesh of allies in combat to restore vigor, inspiring themselves to greater savagery.

Encounter Groups

Gnoll packs often include demons, slave troops, and beasts trained for war. Gnolls are sometimes encountered in the service of others, acting as shock troops for giants and other powerful monsters.

Level 4 Encounter (XP 925)
- ✦ 2 deathpledged gnolls (level 5 brute)
- ✦ 1 corruption corpse (level 4 artillery, MM 274)
- ✦ 1 gnoll demonic scourge (level 8 brute, MM 132)

Level 7 Encounter (XP 1,600)
- ✦ 1 fang of Yeenoghu (level 7 skirmisher)
- ✦ 3 gnoll gorgers (level 7 brute)
- ✦ 1 beholder gauth (level 5 elite artillery)

GNOME

All gnomes share a connection to the Feywild, but that connection can manifest itself in starkly different ways. Some gnomes are naturally adept at channeling arcane currents, while others use the power of the beast within them.

Gnome Mistwalker

Gnomes are masters of illusion magic. A mistwalker combines this expertise with melee prowess to ambush or harass enemies.

| Gnome Mistwalker | Level 5 Lurker |
|---|---|
| Small fey humanoid | XP 200 |
| Initiative +9 | Senses Perception +3; low-light vision |
| HP 51; Bloodied 25 | |
| AC 20; Fortitude 16, Reflex 17, Will 16 | |
| Speed 5 | |
| ⊕ War Pick (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| +10 vs. AC; 1d8 + 4 damage (crit 1d8 + 12). | |
| Mistwalker's Strike (standard; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃) ✦ Illusion | |
| The gnome mistwalker becomes invisible until the end of its next turn. In addition, it shifts 2 squares and makes a war pick attack. | |
| Combat Advantage | |
| A gnome mistwalker deals 1d6 extra damage against any creature granting combat advantage to it. | |
| Fade Away (immediate reaction, when the gnome mistwalker takes damage; encounter) ✦ Illusion | |
| The gnome mistwalker becomes invisible until after it hits or misses with an attack or until the end of its next turn. | |
| Reactive Stealth | |
| If the gnome mistwalker has cover or concealment when it rolls initiative at the start of an encounter, it can make a Stealth check to become hidden. | |
| Blur of Movement (immediate reaction, when the gnome mistwalker is hit by an enemy; at-will) ✦ Teleportation | |
| The mistwalker teleports 1 square. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Common, Elven |
| Skills Stealth +10 | |
| Str 10 (+2) | Dex 16 (+5) Wis 13 (+3) |
| Con 15 (+4) | Int 11 (+2) Cha 14 (+4) |
| Equipment hide armor, war pick | |

Gnome Mistwalker Tactics

Mistwalkers flash across the battlefield to impale foes upon their picks. They rely on blur of movement to escape their enemies and to use mistwalker's strike.

Gnome Mistwalker Lore

Nature DC 12: Mistwalkers are gnome warrior-mages and brigands. These robbers build warrens of tunnels around forest roads, cloak them with illusions, and use them to ambush caravans laden with goods useful to spellcasters.

Gnome Entropist

Gnome entropists see the potential for change in all things, and they use the power of chaos to hinder and debilitate their foes.

| Gnome Entropist | Level 8 Artillery |
|---|---|
| Small fey humanoid | XP 350 |
| Initiative +7 | Senses Perception +3; low-light vision |
| HP 71; Bloodied 35 | |
| AC 20; Fortitude 19, Reflex 19, Will 21 (+2 to all defenses against ranged attacks) | |
| Speed 5 | |
| ⊕ Acid Dagger (standard; at-will) ✦ Acid, Weapon | |
| +15 vs. AC; 1d4 damage plus 1d6 + 4 acid damage. | |
| Entropic Arc (standard; at-will) | |
| Ranged 10; +13 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 4 damage (crit 2d8 + 20). | |
| Primordial Yell (standard; recharges when first bloodied) ✦ Thunder | |
| Close blast 3; +13 vs. Fortitude; 2d10 + 4 thunder damage, and the target is deafened and cannot take immediate actions or opportunity actions until the end of the gnome entropist's next turn. | |
| Chaos Flare (standard; encounter) | |
| Area burst 1 within 15; +13 vs. Will; 3d8 + 5 damage, and the target is blinded (save ends). | |
| Fade Away (immediate reaction, when the gnome entropist takes damage; encounter) ✦ Illusion | |
| The entropist becomes invisible until after it hits or misses with an attack or until the end of its next turn. | |
| Reactive Stealth | |
| If the gnome entropist has cover or concealment when it rolls initiative at the start of an encounter, it can make a Stealth check to become hidden. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Common, Elven |
| Skills Arcana +10, Bluff +14, Stealth +12 | |
| Str 10 (+4) | Dex 17 (+7) Wis 8 (+3) |
| Con 17 (+7) | Int 12 (+5) Cha 20 (+9) |
| Equipment dagger, robes | |

Gnome Entropist Tactics

A gnome entropist announces its presence to enemies with a chaos flare, then stays on the fringe of combat making entropic arc attacks. It uses primordial yell to elude foes trying to force it into close combat, falling back on acid dagger attacks only if cornered.

Gnome Entropist Lore

Nature DC 14: Gnome entropists target their foes with power channeled from the Elemental Chaos. Their innate ties to the magic of the Feywild interfere with this extraplanar power, driving some mad.

Gnome Wolverine

Though small in stature, a gnome wolverine is as fierce in combat as its namesake.

| Gnome Wolverine | Level 9 Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Small fey humanoid | XP 400 |
| Initiative +9 | Senses Perception +10; low-light vision |
| HP 95; Bloodied 47 | |
| AC 23 (26 against opportunity attacks); Fortitude 22, Reflex 20, Will 20 | |
| Speed 5 (7 when charging) | |
| ⨺ Waraxe (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| +14 vs. AC; 1d12 + 6 damage. | |
| ⨽ Shrieking Strike (standard; recharges when first bloodied) ✦ Weapon | |
| +14 vs. AC; 2d12 + 5 damage, and one enemy adjacent to the target takes 1d12 damage. Effect: The gnome wolverine gains a +3 bonus to all defenses until the start of its next turn. Special: When charging, the wolverine can use this power in place of a melee basic attack. | |
| ⨽ Unbalancing Swipe (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| +12 vs. Reflex; 1d12 + 6 damage, and the gnome wolverine slides the target 2 squares. On a critical hit, the target is also knocked prone. | |
| Fade Away (immediate reaction, when the gnome wolverine takes damage; encounter) ✦ Illusion | |
| The wolverine becomes invisible until after it hits or misses with an attack or until the end of its next turn. | |
| Reactive Stealth | |
| If a gnome wolverine has cover or concealment when it rolls initiative at the start of an encounter, it can make a Stealth check to become hidden. | |
| Vicious Fury (when the gnome wolverine bloodies an enemy or reduces an enemy to 0 hit points or fewer; at-will) | |
| The wolverine shifts 5 squares and gains a +3 bonus to damage rolls until the end of its next turn. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Common, Elven |
| Skills Athletics +14, Intimidate +12, Stealth +12 | |
| Str 20 (+9) | Dex 17 (+7) | Wis 12 (+5) |
| Con 15 (+6) | Int 10 (+4) | Cha 17 (+7) |
| Equipment hide armor, waraxe | |

Gnome Wolverine Tactics

The gnome wolverine throws itself into battle with shrieking strike, then wades through foes with unbalancing swipe attacks. It reserves fade away to reposition itself if cornered, or to set up another shrieking strike attack once it is bloodied.

Gnome Wolverine Lore

Nature DC 14: A gnome wolverine has a fierceness that belies the stature and reputation of its race. A berserker fury drives a wolverine in battle, and its power increases with each foe it drops.

(Top to bottom) gnome entropist and wolverine

Encounter Groups

Gnomes most often work with their own kind and with other creatures of the Feywild. However, a gnome's capricious nature means that such alliances are typically brief.

Level 8 Encounter (XP 1,850)
- ✦ 1 gnome entropist (level 8 artillery)
- ✦ 2 gnome wolverines (level 9 skirmisher)
- ✦ 2 spriggan giantsouls (level 8 brute)

Level 10 Encounter (XP 2,600)
- ✦ 3 gnome entropists (level 8 artillery)
- ✦ 2 phase spiders (level 8 skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 satyr piper (level 8 controller, MM 228)
- ✦ 1 will-o'-wisp (level 10 lurker)

CHIPPY

Goblins are often subservient to the devotees of dark gods and other powerful masters. Such leaders appeal to the goblins' hostile and barbarous natures.

Bugbear Wardancer

Like all bugbears, the wardancer is full of bluster and purpose. These warriors are a force to be reckoned with as they sow destruction across the battlefield.

Bugbear Wardancer Tactics

A bugbear wardancer relishes punishing as many enemies as possible, and so prefers to choose a different target each round. It will attack a foe within reach first, and if it hits it uses its move action to get into position to attack a new foe, setting up a flanking position with an ally that can then attack and similarly move.

Bugbear Wardancer Lore

Nature DC 12: A bugbear wardancer leaps and howls as it arcs its vicious flail through the ranks of its foes. Its wide-reaching attacks and single-minded fury make it a dangerous foe.

Nature DC 17: Wardancers dedicate themselves to particular exarchs of Bane, forming small sects whose members create their own rival forms of battle dance.

Nature DC 19: More intelligent goblins who lead bugbear wardancers train them thoroughly, teaching them how to avoid harming their allies in combat. Through strict conditioning, hobgoblins sometimes plant command words in wardancers' minds to control them when they get out of hand.

| Bugbear Wardancer | | Level 6 Skirmisher |
|---|---|---|
| Medium natural humanoid | | XP 250 |
| Initiative +9 | Senses Perception +5; low-light vision | |

ZOLTAN BOROS & GABOR SZIKSZAI

Goblin Acolyte of Maglubiyet

Maglubiyet, goblin exarch of Bane, inspires the radical devotion of a sect of combatants seeking to mold themselves in his image.

Goblin Acolyte of Maglubiyet Level 1 Controller
Small natural humanoid XP 100

Initiative +0 Senses Perception +3; low-light vision
Life Scourge aura 2; each creature within the aura cannot regain hit points.
HP 29; Bloodied 14
AC 15; Fortitude 12, Reflex 12, Will 14
Speed 6

⊕ Slashing Shroud (standard; at-will) ✦ Illusion, Weapon
+6 vs. AC; 1d10 + 3 damage, and the goblin acolyte of Maglubiyet becomes invisible to the target until the end of the acolyte's next turn.

↛ Hand of Maglubiyet (standard; at-will) ✦ Force
Ranged 10; +5 vs. Fortitude; 1d6 + 5 force damage, and the goblin acolyte of Maglubiyet chooses either to slide the target 3 squares or to immobilize the target until the end of the acolyte's next turn.

↛ Maglubiyet's Fists (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅)
The goblin acolyte of Maglubiyet makes two hand of Maglubiyet attacks, each against a different target.

Goblin Tactics (immediate reaction, when the goblin acolyte of Maglubiyet is missed by a melee attack; at-will)
The acolyte shifts 1 square.

Alignment Evil Languages Common, Goblin
Skills Diplomacy +6, Intimidate +6
Str 11 (+0) Dex 10 (+0) Wis 16 (+3)
Con 13 (+1) Int 13 (+1) Cha 13 (+1)
Equipment battleaxe

Goblin Acolyte of Maglubiyet Tactics

A goblin acolyte moves freely across the battlefield, using hand of Maglubiyet to keep foes away from its allies or to hold more powerful combatants in place. It makes slashing shroud attacks with abandon, sticking close to badly wounded foes so that its life scourge aura prevents them from healing.

Goblin Acolyte of Maglubiyet Lore

Nature DC 5: Acolytes of Maglubiyet devote their lives to the goblin exarch of Bane, modeling themselves in his image and drawing power from their faith.

Nature DC 10: An acolyte of Maglubiyet seeks signs of its patron's favor in all it does, such as thunder rolling at an auspicious moment or a bird of prey landing on a nearby tree. Such symbols can drive superstitious acolytes to fight against impossible odds, and an unfavorable sign can just as easily make them flee a fight before it even begins.

Lolthbound Goblin

Centuries spent as slaves to the drow have driven some goblins to a mad devotion to the dark elves and their demon queen.

Lolthbound Goblin Level 3 Soldier
Small natural humanoid XP 150

Initiative +6 Senses Perception +3; darkvision
HP 45; Bloodied 22
AC 19; Fortitude 15, Reflex 16, Will 15; see also drow inspiration
Speed 6

⊕ War Pick (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+10 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage (crit 1d8 + 13), and the target is marked until the end of the Lolthbound goblin's next turn.

⸸ Stinging Blow (standard; encounter) ✦ Poison, Weapon
+10 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 poison damage (crit 1d8 + 13), and if the target is taking ongoing poison damage, that ongoing damage increases by 5.

✧ Lolthbound Shriek (standard; encounter) ✦ Thunder
Close blast 5; targets creatures that are not drow, spiders, or goblins; +8 vs. Fortitude; 2d10 thunder damage.

Drow Inspiration (while within 5 squares of a drow ally)
The Lolthbound goblin gains a +2 bonus to attack rolls and all defenses.

Drow Protector (immediate interrupt, when a drow ally adjacent to the Lolthbound goblin is targeted by an attack; at-will)
The triggering attack targets the goblin instead.

Goblin Tactics (immediate reaction, when the Lolthbound goblin is missed by a melee attack; at-will)
The goblin shifts 1 square.

Alignment Evil Languages Common, Elven, Goblin
Str 14 (+3) Dex 17 (+4) Wis 14 (+3)
Con 13 (+2) Int 8 (+0) Cha 9 (+0)
Equipment leather armor, war pick

Lolthbound Goblin Slave Level 12 Minion Skirmisher
Small natural humanoid (goblin) XP 175

Initiative +13 Senses Perception +10; darkvision
HP 1; a missed attack never damages a minion.
AC 26; Fortitude 24, Reflex 25, Will 24; see also drow inspiration
Speed 6

⊕ Stinging Pick (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison, Weapon
+17 vs. AC; 7 poison damage, and if the target is affected by ongoing poison damage, that ongoing damage increases by 5.

⊕ Hand Crossbow (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Ranged 10/20; +17 vs. AC; 5 damage (7 if the Lolthbound goblin slave moved 3 or more squares during its turn).

Drow Inspiration (while within 5 squares of a drow ally)
The Lolthbound goblin slave gains a +2 bonus to attack rolls and all defenses.

Goblin Tactics (immediate reaction, when missed by a melee attack; at-will)
The Lolthbound goblin slave shifts 1 square.

Alignment Evil Languages Common, Elven, Goblin
Str 19 (+10) Dex 21 (+11) Wis 19 (+10)
Con 14 (+8) Int 8 (+5) Cha 9 (+5)
Equipment leather armor, war pick, hand crossbow, case with 10 bolts

Lolthbound Goblin Tactics

Lolthbound goblins are dedicated to protecting their drow masters, fighting close to them to take advantage of drow inspiration and drow protector powers. A Lolthbound goblin uses stinging blow to maximize ongoing poison damage dealt by allies, reserving its Lolthbound shriek until surrounded.

Lolthbound Goblin Slave Lore

Nature DC 16: Lolthbound goblin slaves are goblins brutalized by the drow. They are granted the power to fight in the name of the Spider Queen, but they have no will of their own.

Hobgoblin Fleshcarver

Defined by its specialized weapons, the hobgoblin fleshcarver is dedicated to perfecting the art of battle.

| Hobgoblin Fleshcarver | Level 6 Elite Controller |

| Con 17 (+6) | Int 12 (+4) Cha 16 (+6) |
| Equipment chain armor, glaive, 10 poisoned darts | |

Hobgoblin Fleshcarver Tactics

A fleshcarver uses its glaive flurry for multiple purposes: to knock enemies back toward groups of allies, to drive foes into positions where they are flanked, or pull foes back if they try to get away. Until it becomes bloodied, a fleshcarver is aggressive and keeps enemies near it if possible. It becomes more defensive once bloodied and uses its dart powers more frequently.

Hobgoblin fleshcarvers aren't afraid to call a retreat when a battle appears unwinnable. They coordinate their movement so that they stay adjacent to allies as they retreat, to benefit from phalanx soldier. By using toxic dart, they try to keep enemies from pursuing them at full speed.

Hobgoblin Fleshcarver Lore

Nature DC 12: A hobgoblin fleshcarver carries a jagged glaive and poisoned darts. Each glaive is crafted by a fleshcarver and perfectly shaped and weighted to match that hobgoblin's fighting style. The poison used on the fleshcarver's darts is harvested from serpents the fleshcarver hunts as a part of its training.

Nature DC 17: Fleshcarvers pride themselves on their martial ability, and welcome challenges from other weapon users. Still, pride won't draw a fleshcarver away from the thick of combat.

Goblin Encounter Groups

Goblins can be encountered in almost any context: as an invading horde, mercenaries in the pay of other villains, or slaves beholden to dangerous masters.

Level 1 Encounter (XP 550)
- 1 goblin acolyte of Maglubiyet (level 1 controller)
- 3 goblin warriors (level 1 skirmisher, MM 137)
- 1 Lolthbound goblin (level 3 soldier)

Level 6 Encounter (XP 1,200)
- 2 bugbear wardancers (level 6 skirmisher)
- 2 bugbear warriors (level 5 brute, MM 135)
- 1 barghest battle lord (level 7 controller)

Level 6 Encounter (XP 1,350)
- 1 hobgoblin fleshcarver (level 6 elite controller)
- 3 hobgoblin soldiers (level 3 soldier, MM 139)
- 2 dire wolves (level 5 skirmisher, MM 264)

Level 13 Encounter (XP 4,100)
- 4 Lolthbound goblin slaves (level 12 minion skirmisher)
- 1 drow priest (level 15 controller, MM 95)
- 2 blade spiders (level 10 brute, MM 246)
- 2 drow warriors (level 11 lurker, MM 94)

GOLEM

Created to guard their masters and their masters' secrets, golems have no sense of self and follow orders without question.

Bone Golem

Built from the bones of many creatures, these massive conglomerations stab their foes with sharpened bone. They serve well those who seek to disorient their enemies through pain, or those who are partial to macabre trappings.

| Bone Golem | Level 12 Elite Brute |
|---|---|
| Large natural animate (construct) | XP 1,400 |
| Initiative +11 | Senses Perception +9; darkvision |
| Bone Spikes aura 1; each enemy that enters the aura takes 5 damage. | |
| HP 302; Bloodied 151; see also bone death | |
| AC 24; Fortitude 25, Reflex 24, Will 22 | |
| Immune disease, poison, sleep | |
| Saving Throws +2 | |
| Speed 6 (cannot shift) | |
| Action Points 1 | |
| ⊕ Bone Spur (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; +15 vs. AC; 2d8 + 9 damage. | |
| ⸸ Double Spurs (standard; at-will) | |
| The bone golem makes two bone spur attacks, each against a different target. If both attacks hit, the targets are dazed until the end of the golem's next turn. | |
| ✧ Bone Volley (standard; recharge ⁞⁞) | |
| Close burst 3; +13 vs. Reflex; 4d8 + 6 damage, and the target is dazed (save ends). | |
| ⸸/✧ Bone Death (free, when first bloodied and again when the bone golem drops to 0 hit points) | |
| The golem uses bone volley if the power is not expended; otherwise, it makes a bone spur attack. | |
| Osseous Retaliation | |
| A creature that makes an opportunity attack against a bone golem takes 2d6 damage. | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages – |
| Str 22 (+12) | Dex 20 (+11) Wis 17 (+9) |
| Con 21 (+11) | Int 3 (+2) Cha 3 (+2) |

Bone Golem Lore

Arcana or Nature DC 21: Bone golems are constructs created by dark-hearted mages and priests to serve as guardians. Although they look like undead, they are merely animated matter.

Encounter Groups

Like many golems, bone golems are constructed by arcane magic wielders for protection or enforcement.

Level 13 Encounter (XP 4,200)
- ✦ 1 bone golem (level 12 elite brute)
- ✦ 4 horde ghouls (level 13 minion)
- ✦ 1 human lich wizard (level 14 elite controller, MM 176)

Chain Golem

Imbued with magic, these humanoid conglomerations of metal links enwrap foes in crushing chains. They specialize in pounding enemies, pulling them close, and immobilizing them.

| Chain Golem | Level 22 Elite Soldier |
|---|---|
| Huge natural animate (construct) | XP 8,300 |
| Initiative +19 | Senses Perception +19; darkvision |
| Entangling Chains aura 3; each enemy that starts its turn within the aura is slowed until the end of its turn. | |
| HP 418; Bloodied 209 | |
| AC 38; Fortitude 35, Reflex 32, Will 34 | |
| Immune disease, poison, sleep | |
| Saving Throws +2 | |
| Speed 8 (cannot shift) | |
| Action Points 1 | |
| ⊕ Chain (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 3; +29 vs. AC; 2d8 + 9 damage, and the chain golem pulls the target 2 squares. | |
| ⸸ Berserk Attack (immediate reaction, when the chain golem is damaged by an attack while bloodied; at-will) | |
| The golem makes a chain attack against a target adjacent to it. | |
| ⸸ Chain Smash (standard; at-will) | |
| The chain golem makes two chain attacks, each against a different target. | |
| ✧ Chain Grab (standard; at-will) | |
| Close burst 2; +27 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 9 damage, and the target is pulled 1 square and grabbed. While the target is grabbed by the chain golem, the golem can move away from the target without ending the grab. When the golem ends its move, it must slide the target into a space adjacent to it or the grab ends. | |
| Stable Footing | |
| A chain golem ignores difficult terrain. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages – |
| Str 28 (+20) | Dex 22 (+17) Wis 26 (+19) |
| Con 25 (+18) | Int 3 (+7) Cha 3 (+7) |

Chain Golem Tactics

The job of the chain golem is to keep melee combatants and skirmishing characters occupied at the center of the battlefield. It accomplishes this goal with its chain and chain grab attacks, then lays about with chain smash.

Chain Golem Lore

Arcana or Nature DC 21: Modeled after chain devils, chain golems often act as guardians over prisoners. Chain golems draw their foes in by wrapping them in chains, then pummel them mercilessly.

Clay Golem

The ponderous-looking clay golem has surprising speed. These brutes are favored by those who seek to inflict significant, sometimes unmendable, damage.

| Clay Golem | Level 15 Elite Brute |
|---|---|
| Large natural animate (construct) | XP 2,400 |
| Initiative +15; see also hasty reaction | Senses Perception +11; darkvision |
| Aura of Misjudgment aura 3; each enemy within the aura cannot shift. | |
| HP 368; Bloodied 184 | |
| AC 27; Fortitude 31, Reflex 25, Will 27 | |
| Immune disease, poison, sleep | |
| Saving Throws +2 | |
| Speed 6 (cannot shift) | |
| Action Points 1 | |
| ⊕ Slam (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; +19 vs. AC; 3d8 + 7 damage, and the target cannot regain hit points (save ends). | |
| ⸸ Clay Smash (standard; at-will) | |
| The clay golem makes two slam attacks, each against a different target. | |
| ⸸ Berserk Attack (immediate reaction, when the clay golem is damaged by an attack while bloodied; at-will) | |
| The golem makes a slam attack against a creature adjacent to it. | |
| Hasty Reaction | |
| A clay golem rolls initiative twice, taking the higher of the two results. | |
| Unstoppable (move; encounter) | |
| The clay golem moves 8 squares and can move through enemies' spaces. Opportunity attacks against the golem triggered by this movement take a -10 penalty to damage rolls. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages – |
| Str 26 (+15) | Dex 14 (+9) | Wis 18 (+11) |
| Con 24 (+14) | Int 3 (+3) | Cha 3 (+3) |

Clay Golem Lore

Arcana or Nature DC 23: A clay golem's partially melted form looks slow, but that appearance is deceptive. Clay golems bear a curse from their creation that sometimes prevents foes' wounds from healing.

Encounter Groups

Like all golems, clay golems serve their masters regardless of intent or motivation.

Level 15 Encounter (XP 6,200)

- ✦ 1 clay golem (level 15 elite brute)
- ✦ 1 shadar-kai gloom lord (level 14 artillery)
- ✦ 2 shadow snakes (level 16 skirmisher, MM 240)

Iron Golem

Infused with potent toxins, iron golems thunder toward foes and bash them into mush.

| Iron Golem | Level 20 Elite Soldier |
|---|---|
| Large natural animate (construct) | XP 5,600 |
| Initiative +14 | Senses Perception +10; darkvision |
| Noxious Fumes (Poison) aura 2; while the iron golem is bloodied, each creature that enters the aura or starts its turn there takes 5 poison damage. | |

| Action Points 1 | |
| ⊕ Iron Blade (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; +27 vs. AC; 2d10 + 3 damage, and the target is marked (save ends). | |
| ⸸ Cleave (standard; at-will) | |
| The iron golem makes two iron blade attacks, each against a different target. | |
| ⸸ Dazing Fist (immediate interrupt, when a creature marked by the iron golem and within its reach moves or shifts; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; targets the triggering creature; +25 vs. Fortitude; the target is dazed (save ends). | |
| ✧ Breath Weapon (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Poison | |
| Close blast 3; +25 vs. Fortitude; 3d8 + 9 poison damage, and ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends). | |
| ✧ Toxic Death (when first bloodied and again when the iron golem drops to 0 hit points) ✦ Poison | |
| Close burst 3; +25 vs. Fortitude; 2d8 + 6 poison damage, and ongoing 10 poison damage (save ends). | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages – |
| Str 27 (+18) | Dex 15 (+12) | Wis 11 (+10) |

| Con 28 (+22) | Int 3 (+9) Cha 3 (+9) |
| Equipment longsword | |

Iron Golem Lore

Arcana or Nature DC 27: Iron golems are artfully crafted giant metal warriors. Potent toxins leak from holes in their exteriors.

Encounter Groups

Although most golems begin their semblance of life at the hands of a spellcaster, they can pass through the hands of several owners during their life spans.

Level 24 Encounter (XP 34,000)
- ✦ 1 iron golem juggernaut (level 26 elite soldier)
- ✦ 1 storm gorgon (level 26 skirmisher, MM 143)
- ✦ 1 djinn skylord (level 25 controller)

Encounter Groups

Some golems remain undisturbed for centuries. Adventurers would be hard-pressed to guess their orders, much less who gave those orders in the first place.

Level 21 Encounter (XP 20,300)
- ✦ 1 chain golem (level 22 elite soldier)
- ✦ 1 dark naga (level 21 elite controller, MM 194)
- ✦ 1 iron golem (level 20 elite soldier)

GRAY RENDER

Widely feared throughout the world, a gray render kills everything in its path. This creature feeds upon flesh and terror alike, working itself into a mindless rampage.

| Gray Render | Level 19 Elite Brute |
|---|---|
| Large natural humanoid | XP 4,800 |
| Initiative +10 | Senses Perception +15; blindsight 10 |
| HP 452; Bloodied 226; see also rampage | |
| AC 31; Fortitude 34, Reflex 27, Will 28 | |
| Saving Throws +2 | |
| Speed 8 | |
| Action Points 1 | |
| ⊕ Claw (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; +22 vs. AC; 1d12 + 8 damage, and the target is grabbed. | |
| ⨽ Double Attack (standard; at-will) | |
| The gray render makes two claw attacks. If both attacks hit the same target, the target takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends). | |
| ⨽ Body Sweep (immediate reaction, when the gray render is hit by an enemy's melee attack while the gray render has a creature grabbed; requires a grabbed creature; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| The gray render uses the grabbed creature as a weapon; +22 vs. Reflex; targets the triggering enemy; 2d12 + 8 damage, and the grey render pushes the target 4 squares. The grabbed creature takes half the damage dealt by this attack. | |
| ⨽ Dismembering Bite (standard; encounter) | |
| Targets a creature grabbed by the gray render; +20 vs. Fortitude; 3d12 + 8 damage, and the target is dazed (save ends). | |
| Rampage (while bloodied) | |
| The gray render's claw attack also knocks a target prone. | |
| Alignment Chaotic evil | Languages – |
| Skills Athletics +23 | |
| Str 27 (+17) | Dex 13 (+10) Wis 15 (+11) |
| Con 26 (+17) | Int 2 (+5) Cha 10 (+9) |

Gray Render Tactics

A gray render approaches battle mindlessly and fearlessly. It moves toward the nearest opponent, attacking in a fury and attempting to grab it. Once the render has a creature grabbed, it uses dismembering bite and body sweep at the first opportunity. The gray render flies into a destructive rage when bloodied, mindlessly clawing and knocking opponents about until it is killed or until it destroys its enemies.

Gray Render Lore

Nature DC 22: Although gray renders are natural creatures that mostly inhabit the world, many scholars have come to believe that their roots can be traced back to the Elemental Chaos, where they gained their chaotic, destructive impulses.

Nature DC 27: Entropy is bound within the existence of gray renders, causing them to leave a path of wanton devastation in their wake. Renders are drawn toward footholds of civilization, such as homesteads and outlying settlements, where they unleash their destructive urges.

Encounter Groups

Gray renders are too instinctively chaotic and vicious to band with other creatures for long, but predators and scavengers follow in the wake of gray renders to exploit the destruction they cause.

Level 18 Encounter (XP 11,800)
- ✦ 1 bodak skulk (level 16 lurker)
- ✦ 1 gray render (level 19 elite brute)
- ✦ 2 guulvorg worgs (level 16 elite brute, MM 265)

Level 20 Encounter (XP 14,800)
- ✦ 1 dire bulette (level 18 elite skirmisher, MM 38)
- ✦ 1 gray render (level 19 elite brute)
- ✦ 3 nabassu gargoyles (level 18 lurker, MM 115)

HALF-ELF

Combining the best of two proud lineages, half-elves are adaptable and diplomatic. They often travel widely and seek out new experiences. Naturally gifted leaders, they frequently become quite powerful.

Half-Elf Lore

Nature DC 12: Half-elves combine the grace of elves with the drive of humans, adding their own stunning charisma to the mix. Keen-witted and free-spirited, half-elves follow their hearts wherever they lead—along bright paths or down dark roads.

Half-Elf Bandit Captain

With a flair for the dramatic to accompany a mastery of blades, the half-elf bandit captain is flamboyant in everything it does. Bold and self-reliant, a half-elf bandit captain leads through charisma and remains vigilant against treachery. The bandit captain takes enough risks in pursuit of gold; trust is one gamble too many.

| Half-Elf Bandit Captain | Level 6 Skirmisher (Leader) |
|---|---|
| Medium natural humanoid | XP 250 |
| Initiative +9 | Senses Perception +8; low-light vision |
| HP 69; Bloodied 34 | |

| ⊕/⊕ Slash and Dash (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚄ ⚅) | |
| The half-elf bandit captain makes a longsword attack, shifts 2 squares, and makes a dagger attack. | |
| ⊕ Triggering Slash (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Weapon | |
| +11 vs. AC; 1d8 + 4 damage, and one ally shifts 1 square and makes a melee basic attack as a free action. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Common, Elven |
| Skills Athletics +11, Diplomacy +11, Insight +8, Stealth +12 | |
| Str 16 (+6) | Dex 19 (+7) Wis 11 (+3) |
| Con 13 (+4) | Int 10 (+3) Cha 16 (+6) |
| Equipment leather armor, longsword, 6 daggers | |

Half-Elf Bandit Captain Tactics

The half-elf bandit captain leads with slash and dash, then uses triggering slash to enable an ally to move into flanking position.

Half-Elf Bandit Captain Lore

Nature DC 12: Half-elf leaders tend to rely on charisma to keep followers in line, and half-elf bandit captains are no different. That charm can be a liability, though, if followers believe it's been used to lie to them.

Half-Elf Con Artist

Many half-elves are diplomats and peacemakers, capable of finding the common ground between any two groups. Others use their talents for their own interests. They can find the common ground between their hands and your money pouch with disconcerting ease.

The half-elf con artist mixes audacity with personal magnetism to achieve astounding results. A few honeyed words or a smile and a shrug can set foes to fighting one another or give an enemy reason to hesitate. Yet the con artist wounds with more than words. The con artist's sleight of hand has put a blade in the back of many an erstwhile ally.

Half-Elf Con Artist Tactics

A half-elf con artist usually prefers to avoid a fight, although sometimes its schemes put it at the wrong end of a sword. If a con artist does stand and fight, it uses deceptive maneuver to force enemies into attacking each other. The con artist relies on pathetic appeal and grifter's flight to save itself when cornered.

Half-Elf Con Artist Lore

Nature DC 14: Their natural charm grants half-elves an advantage in con games and elaborate swindles, drawing many to use their charisma for selfish reasons. Half-elves with long practice at such sleight of tongue develop an almost magical ability to fool foes and use friends.

Half-Elf Baleful Thaumaturge

The wielder of dreadful magic, a half-elf baleful thaumaturge can make a battlefield a place of horror for enemies. Intelligent and wary, the half-elf thaumaturge has labored long to gain power and has gained much as a result. Of course, even with such vast powers, there are always more to be gained.

Half-Elf Baleful Thaumaturge Level 24 Artillery
Medium natural humanoid XP 6,050

Initiative +15 Senses Perception +14; low-light vision
HP 169; Bloodied 84
AC 36; Fortitude 32, Reflex 35, Will 38
Speed 6

⊕ Infernal Slam (standard; at-will) ✦ Teleportation
+29 vs. Will; 2d6 + 10 damage, and the half-elf baleful thaumaturge slides the target 3 squares and then teleports 3 squares.

⊕ Soul Bite (standard; at-will) ✦ Implement
Ranged 10; + 29 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 10 damage, and the half-elf baleful thaumaturge gains 10 temporary hit points.

Mouths of Hell (standard; encounter) ✦ Implement, Psychic, Zone
Close blast 5; +27 vs. Will; 3d12 + 9 psychic damage, and the half-elf baleful thaumaturge gains 10 temporary hit points.
Effect: The blast creates a zone filled with ghostly maws that lasts until the end of the encounter. Each creature that starts its turn within the zone takes 15 psychic damage. The thaumaturge gains 5 temporary hit points whenever the zone damages a creature.

Wall of Shadow Teeth (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Conjuration, Implement, Necrotic
Area wall 8 within 10; the half-elf baleful thaumaturge conjures a wall of shadow teeth that lasts until the end of the thaumaturge's next turn. The wall is 2 squares high and attacks each creature that starts its turn within the wall or adjacent to it: +27 vs. Fortitude; 3d8 + 9 necrotic damage, and the target is immobilized (save ends). Sustain Minor: The wall persists.

Bloody Step (minor; usable only when the half-elf baleful thaumaturge has 5 or more temporary hit points; at-will) ✦ Teleportation
The thaumaturge loses 5 temporary hit points and teleports 8 squares.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common, Elven
Skills Arcana +24, Bluff +27, Streetwise +27
Str 14 (+14) Dex 16 (+15) Wis 15 (+14)
Con 19 (+16) Int 25 (+19) Cha 30 (+22)
Equipment wand

Half-Elf Baleful Thaumaturge Tactics

The baleful thaumaturge opens with wall of shadow teeth, hoping to keep a few enemies immobilized, and then uses mouths of hell. If engaged in melee, the half-elf uses infernal slam to move enemies into the area of mouths of hell. Otherwise the half-elf uses soul bite and attempts to stay out of melee.

Half-Elf Baleful Thaumaturge Lore

Nature or Arcana DC 24: The path to the power that a baleful thaumaturge follows presents no end of difficulties and sacrifice, but thaumaturges who persevere achieve power unthinkable to most mortals. Blood sacrifices, both their own and that of others, give baleful thaumaturges access to dark forces with which the thaumaturge must cajole and bargain (something at which half-elves excel).

Encounter Groups

Half-elves travel throughout the world and are commonly found beyond its borders as well. They associate with a vast array of peoples and creatures.

Level 7 Encounter (XP 1,500)
- 1 half-elf bandit captain (level 6 skirmisher)
- 2 halfling prowlers (level 6 lurker, MM 153)
- 6 human bandits (level 2 skirmisher, MM 162)

Level 25 Encounter (XP 38,200)
- 1 eladrin lich wizard (level 24 elite controller, MM 176)
- 2 half-elf baleful thaumaturges (level 24 artillery)
- 2 slaughterstone hammerers (level 25 soldier)

HALF-ORC

Bold and brash, half-orcs combine the physical strength of orcs with the resourcefulness of humans. These cunning warriors are at home both in the city and in the wild.

Half-Orc Hunter

The half-orc hunter is a skilled tracker and a brash fighter, rushing into battle with little regard for its own safety.

| Half-Orc Hunter | Level 5 Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Medium natural humanoid | XP 200 |
| Initiative +7 | Senses Perception +8; low-light vision |
| HP 62; Bloodied 31 | |
| AC 19; Fortitude 18, Reflex 18, Will 16 | |
| Speed 6 (8 when charging) | |

| The half-orc hunter shifts 1 square before and after the attack; +10 vs. AC; 1d10 + 5 damage. | |
| Draw First Blood | |
| A half-orc hunter's melee attacks deal 1d10 extra damage against any creature that has not yet taken damage during the encounter. | |
| Furious Assault (free, when the half-orc hunter damages an enemy; encounter) | |
| The hunter's attack deals 1d10 extra damage. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Common, Giant |
| Skills Endurance +9, Nature +8 | |
| Str 16 (+5) | Dex 17 (+5) Wis 13 (+3) |
| Con 14 (+4) | Int 10 (+2) Cha 8 (+1) |
| Equipment leather armor, battleaxe, longbow, 20 arrows | |

Half-Orc Hunter Tactics

The half-orc hunter tears into unwounded foes to benefit from draw first blood, often also using furious assault on its first successful strike. The hunter then moves onto the next unhurt target, trusting its allies to finish off the wounded. When no enemies are unwounded, a hunter backs off to concentrate bow fire on the softest targets.

Half-Orc Death Mage

Some half-orcs are drawn to the service of Yurtrus, an exarch of Gruumsh who is a master of disease, misery, and death. These half-orcs master secret rites of Yurtrus. In battle, they wear white robes and carry staffs of black wood.

| Half-Orc Death Mage | Level 6 Controller |
|---|---|
| Medium natural humanoid | XP 250 |
| Initiative +7 | Senses Perception +6; low-light vision |
| HP 66; Bloodied 33 | |
| AC 19; Fortitude 17, Reflex 19, Will 18 | |
| Speed 6 | |
| Quarterstaff (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| +11 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage. | |
| Rotting Touch (standard; at-will) ✦ Necrotic | |
| +10 vs. Fortitude; 1d6 + 4 necrotic damage, and the target loses necrotic resistance or immunity and takes ongoing 5 necrotic damage (save ends both). | |
| Bolt of Putrescence (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Implement | |
| Ranged 10; +10 vs. Reflex; 2d8 + 5 damage, and the target takes a -5 penalty to all defenses until the end of the half-orc death mage's next turn. | |
| Swarm of Flies (standard; encounter) ✦ Implement, Zone | |
| Area burst 1 within 10; +10 vs. Fortitude; 2d6 + 5 damage, and the burst creates a zone of swarming flies that lasts until the end of the encounter. Each creature that starts its turn within the zone takes 5 damage and does not have line of sight to squares more than 3 squares away from it. As a minor action, the half-orc death mage can move the zone 2 squares. | |
| Furious Assault (free, when the half-orc death mage damages an enemy; encounter) | |
| The death mage's attack deals 1d10 extra damage. | |
| Death Mark (when an enemy reduces the half-orc death mage to 0 hit points) ✦ Necrotic | |
| The triggering enemy takes 2d10 + 5 necrotic damage. | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages Common, Giant |
| Skills Arcana +9, Intimidate +8, Religion +9 | |
| Str 15 (+5) | Dex 18 (+7) Wis 17 (+6) |
| Con 10 (+3) | Int 13 (+4) Cha 10 (+3) |
| Equipment robes, quarterstaff | |

Half-Orc Death Mage Tactics

A death mage remains at the rear of battle. From there, it can rain its spells upon its foes without fear of reprisal. It uses swarm of flies to force its enemies to break up, leaving them isolated and vulnerable to its orc allies. Bolt of putrescence is useful against heavily armored targets. Unlike many evil creatures, the death mage has no fear of dying for its master. If the battle goes poorly, it strides into melee to use rotting touch and eventually death mark.

Half-Orc Scarthane

As its ritual scars testify, a half-orc scarthane is a terrifying fury on the battlefield.

| Half-Orc Scarthane | Level 7 Brute |
|---|---|
| Medium natural humanoid | XP 300 |
| Initiative +6 | Senses Perception +3; low-light vision |

| Speed 6 (8 when charging) | |
| ⊕ Greataxe (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| +10 vs. AC; 1d12 + 8 (crit 1d12 + 20) damage. | |
| ↯ Wounded Retaliation (immediate reaction, when first bloodied; encounter) | |
| The half-orc scarthane makes a greataxe attack. | |
| ↯ Bloodfury Attack (standard; usable only while bloodied; encounter) ✦ Healing, Weapon | |
| +10 vs. AC; 2d12 + 2 damage, and the half-orc scarthane regains 10 hit points. | |
| Blood for Blood ✦ Healing | |
| When the half-orc scarthane hits a bloodied target, the attack deals 1d6 extra damage, and the scarthane regains 5 hit points. | |
| Furious Assault (free, when the half-orc scarthane damages an enemy; encounter) | |
| The scarthane's attack deals 1d10 extra damage. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Common, Giant |

| Str 21 (+8) | Dex 17 (+6) Wis 11 (+3) |
| Con 16 (+6) | Int 10 (+3) Cha 8 (+2) |
| Equipment greataxe | |

Half-Orc Scarthane Tactics

The half-orc scarthane focuses attacks on one creature if possible to get the foe to a bloodied state as quickly as possible, taking advantage of blood for blood. The scarthane uses bloodfury attack at the first possible chance.

Half-Orc Lore

Nature DC 12: Half-orcs combine the daring of humans and the ferocity of orcs. Proud of their strength and decisiveness, half-orcs are often impolitic in social situations.

The origins of half-orcs are mysterious. Some say they are the product of crossbreeding between savage tribes. Others point to an ancient program to create the ultimate warrior. Still others say their origins are divine. All or none of these explanations might be true.

Half-orc hunters are found among many communities. Half-orc scarthanes are most often found living savage lives alongside full-blooded orcs, bearing ritual scars that prove their ferocity and worthiness.

Encounter Groups

Half-orcs exist between two cultures, and they often walk the line between wilderness and settled lands. Thus, they're adaptable to a wide range of associates.

Level 6 Encounter (XP 1,400)
- ✦ 2 half-orc hunters (level 5 skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 human hexer (level 7 controller)
- ✦ 4 human berserkers (level 4 brute, MM 163)

Level 9 Encounter (XP 2,100)
- ✦ 4 half-orc scarthanes (level 7 brute)
- ✦ 1 orc chieftain (level 8 elite brute, MM 204)
- ✦ 1 orc eye of Gruumsh (level 5 controller, MM 204)

HAWK

When these feathered predators are on the hunt, the silent skies become a dangerous battleground.

Blood Hawk

Blood hawks are aggressive hunters that use their razor-sharp claws to deal grievous wounds.

| Blood Hawk | Level 1 Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Small natural beast | XP 100 |
| Initiative +5 | Senses Perception +1 |

MATIAS TAPIA

Hawk Lore

Arcana DC 19: Although they originate in the Elemental Chaos, frost hawks can be found in the high places and cold regions of the world. A frost hawk's screech can hinder the movement of opponents, making them more vulnerable to its attacks.

Nature DC 10: Blood hawks are deadly raptors trained as hunters by many races. Their lethal claws deal wounds that continue to bleed, and their flying attacks make them difficult to engage.

Encounter Groups

Like most raptors, blood hawks and frost hawks can be encountered among their own kind or as hunting birds trained by other creatures.

Level 2 Encounter (XP 725)
- ✦ 3 blood hawks (level 1 skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 bloodseeker drake (level 4 soldier)
- ✦ 2 elf archers (level 2 artillery, MM 106)

Level 6 Encounter (XP 1,400)
- ✦ 2 frost hawks (level 7 skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 orc bloodrager (level 7 elite brute, MM 204)
- ✦ 1 orc eye of Gruumsh (level 5 controller, MM 204)

HOMUNCULUS

Homunculi act as tireless guardians for specific locations, relics, or creatures. Their creators imbue these constructs with a singular purpose, but many homunculi have outlived their original masters.

Stonefist Defender

A driven and deadly foe, a stonefist defender serves a designated creature as a bodyguard and combat partner.

| Stonefist Defender | Level 2 Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Small natural animate (construct, homunculus) | XP 125 |
| Initiative +6 Senses Perception +4; darkvision | |

| Ranged 20/40; +11 vs. AC; 1d10 + 4 damage. | |
| Double Shot (standard; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃) | |
| The arbalester makes two bolt attacks, each against a different target. The targets must be within 5 squares of each other. | |
| Guard Area | |
| If an enemy is within an arbalester's guarded area (see the "Guard" sidebar) at the start of the arbalester's turn, the arbalester recharges double shot. | |
| Alignment Unaligned Languages – | |
| Str 15 (+4) Dex 18 (+6) Wis 15 (+4) | |
| Con 13 (+3) Int 5 (-1) Cha 8 (+1) | |

Encounter Groups

Homunculi can be found as servants and companions to spellcasters, or as tireless guards in ancient tombs and treasure vaults.

Level 3 Encounter (XP 750)
- 3 stonefist defenders (level 2 skirmisher)
- 1 arbalester (level 4 artillery)
- 1 dwarf hammerer (level 5 soldier, MM 97)

Guard

A homunculus can be attuned to a specific area or creature. Attuning the homunculus takes 1 minute and can be done only by the homunculus's creator or its new owner (as designated by its creator). The homunculus gains certain powers and benefits in this guard role.

Guarded Area: An area up to 5 squares on a side.

Guarded Creature: A creature, typically the homunculus's creator.

HUMAN

Diverse and multifaceted, humans possess the potential for both greatness and villainy.

Human Cavalier

Mounted on a warhorse, a human cavalier wears its enemies down with lance and broadsword.

Human Cavalier Level 7 Soldier (Leader)
Medium natural humanoid XP 300

Initiative +8 Senses Perception +9
Battle Acumen aura sight; each ally within the aura gains a +2 bonus to initiative.
HP 78; Bloodied 39
AC 23; Fortitude 20, Reflex 18, Will 19
Speed 5

⊕ Broadsword (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+14 vs. AC; 1d10 + 5 damage, and the target is marked until the end of the human cavalier's next turn.

↯ Champion's Retort (immediate interrupt, when an enemy marked by the human cavalier makes a melee attack against an ally adjacent to it; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Targets the triggering enemy; +13 vs. AC; 1d6 + 5 damage.

↯ Lancer (standard; usable only while mounted; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+14 vs. AC; 1d10 + 5 damage, and the target is knocked prone.

Hasty Parry (immediate interrupt, when an enemy marked by the human cavalier makes a melee attack against an ally adjacent to it; encounter)
The triggering enemy's attack targets the cavalier instead of the ally, and the cavalier gains a +3 bonus to AC against that attack.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common
Skills Athletics +12, Diplomacy +11
Str 19 (+7) Dex 13 (+4) Wis 12 (+4)
Con 14 (+5) Int 10 (+3) Cha 16 (+6)

Human Diabolist

The human diabolist is a practitioner of evil magic. A diabolist wields fire as its favored weapon.

Human Diabolist Level 20 Artillery
Medium natural humanoid XP 2,800

Initiative +14 Senses Perception +10
HP 147; Bloodied 73
AC 32; Fortitude 32, Reflex 31, Will 33
Speed 6

⊕ Kukri (standard; at-will) ✦ Fire, Weapon
+25 vs. AC; 1d6 + 4 damage plus 2d6 fire damage. The human diabolist rerolls any damage die result of 1 until the result is greater than 1.

⊕ Dark Fire (standard; at-will) ✦ Fire, Implement, Necrotic
Ranged 15; +27 vs. Reflex; 2d10 + 7 fire and necrotic damage.

Hell Blight (minor; at-will) ✦ Implement
Ranged sight; no attack roll; the target is hell-blighted (save ends). A hell-blighted target that takes fire damage from the human diabolist cannot spend a healing surge until the end of the diabolist's next turn. If the diabolist uses this power on a new target, the previous target is no longer hell-blighted.

Sulfurous Flash (standard; at-will) ✦ Fire, Implement
Ranged 5; +27 vs. Fortitude; 2d4 + 6 fire damage, and the human diabolist has concealment against the target until the end of the diabolist's next turn.

Darkfire Storm (standard; encounter) ✦ Fire, Implement, Necrotic
Area burst 2 within 20; +25 vs. Reflex; 2d6 + 7 fire and necrotic damage, and ongoing 10 fire and necrotic damage (save ends).

Infernal Deflection (immediate interrupt, when the human diabolist is hit by a melee or ranged attack; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Fire
The diabolist takes half damage from the triggering attack, and the attacker takes 15 fire damage.

Life from Fire
Whenever a human diabolist takes fire damage, it gains 10 temporary hit points.

Alignment Evil Languages Common

| Equipment leather armor, mace, scourge (whip) | |

Human Slaver Tactics

The human slaver focuses on a single target with slaver's tangle. The slaver then either moves on to other enemies or delivers punishing mace-and-scourge combos to immobilized victims with thump and lash.

Human Lore

Nature DC 10: Human cavaliers ride horses or griffons. Cavaliers are prized as battle leaders, and they are often hired to lead nonhuman troops.

Human gladiators are accustomed to fighting a wide array of combatants. Although some gladiators are kept as slaves, others become wealthy by defeating foes in arena matches.

Human nobles claim that their families' status grants them leadership skills. However, once in combat some nobles find that they are unable to cope with bloodshed, and freeze up or run away.

Pirate captains keep their rowdy crews in line with a mixture of threats and bribes. Humans who have run afoul of the law become pirates to avoid capture and to satisfy the human need for new experiences and adventures.

Human slavers are themselves slaves to greed and power. They have great influence over their slaves, but the promise of freedom sometimes causes those slaves to revolt and remove the slaver from the picture—by any means necessary.

Nature DC 15: Human diabolists trade their souls for power. Both humans and devils share a lust for power, and many of a diabolist's other traits might be considered infernal.

Human javelin dancers dance around foes, hurling javelins like thunderbolts with uncanny accuracy.

Human knife fighters, trained for battle in alley fights and tavern brawls, tumble around the battlefield to slip blades into just the right places.

Human mystagogues are often found at the centers of cults.

Nature DC 20: Human dire beast hunters can be bounty hunters seeking to capture exotic creatures and sell them to the highest bidder, or they can be pompous nobles seeking to one-up other members of the nobility by mounting bigger and more exotic heads in their great rooms.

Human hexers practice a mixture of arcane and primal magic. While some work in harmony with nature, others pervert primal magic to command the spirits of the earth against their will.

Encounter Groups

Humans are versatile and familiar. They have a knack for turning up nearly everywhere.

Level 6 Encounter (XP 1,350)
- ✦ 2 half-orc hunters (level 5 skirmisher)

⊕ Bite (standard; at-will)
Reach 2; +19 vs. AC; 1d8 + 4 damage, and the target takes ongoing 5 damage (save ends). If the razor hydra hits a target that is already taking untyped ongoing damage, that target's ongoing damage increases by 5.

⸸ Hydra Fury (standard; at-will)
The razor hydra makes four bite attacks, plus an additional attack for each head it has grown (see regenerating heads).

⸸ Ferocity (when the razor hydra drops to 0 hit points)
The hydra makes a hydra fury attack.

Blood-Hungry
A razor hydra gains a +2 bonus to attack rolls against bloodied creatures and creatures taking untyped ongoing damage.

Many-Headed
Each time a razor hydra would become dazed or stunned, it instead loses one attack while using hydra fury during its next turn. The hydra can be dazed or stunned multiple times.

Regenerating Heads
When a razor hydra first reaches 480, 320, and 160 hit points, a head is destroyed. At the start of the hydra's next turn after a head is destroyed, two heads grow in the lost head's place, and the hydra gains an additional bite attack with hydra fury.

⚕ Hydra Fury (standard; at-will)
The heroslayer hydra makes five bite attacks, plus an additional attack for each head it has grown (see regenerating heads). A target hit by more than one bite attack in a round takes 10 extra damage.

⚕ Rampage (standard; recharges when a critical hit is scored against the heroslayer hydra)
The hydra makes one bite attack against each enemy within reach. On a hit, the target takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends).

Heroslayer
While a heroslayer hydra is marked, it gains a +2 bonus to attack rolls and a +5 bonus to damage rolls against the creature that marked it.

Many-Headed
Each time a heroslayer hydra would become dazed or stunned, it instead loses one attack while using hydra fury during its next turn. The hydra can be dazed or stunned multiple times.

Regenerating Heads
When a heroslayer hydra first reaches 582, 388, and 194 hit points, a head is destroyed. At the start of the hydra's next turn after a head is destroyed, two heads grow in the lost head's place, and the hydra gains an additional bite attack with hydra fury.

⊕ Storm Bite (standard; at-will) ✦ Lightning, Thunder
Reach 3; +25 vs. AC; 3d8 + 5 lightning and thunder damage.

⚕ Hydra Fury (standard; at-will)
The chaos hydra makes a storm bite attack, a frostfire bite attack, and each additional attack it has gained through the growth of a head (see chaosborn).

⚕ Crushing Maw (standard; at-will)
Reach 3; +25 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage, and the target is slowed and takes ongoing 10 damage (save ends both).

⚕ Mind Bite (standard; at-will)
Reach 3; +25 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).

⚕ Paralyzing Fang (standard; at-will)
Reach 3; +25 vs. AC; 1d8 + 5 damage, and the target is immobilized and takes a -2 penalty to all defenses (save ends both).

⚕ Venom Tooth (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison
Reach 3; +25 vs. AC; 1d8 +5 damage, and ongoing 10 poison damage (save ends).

Chaosborn
A chaos hydra starts with two heads. When the hydra first reaches 636, 424, and 212 hit points, it grows an additional head. Roll a d4 at each increment to determine which attack the new head makes:
1–Crushing Maw, 2–Mind Bite, 3–Paralyzing Fang, or 4–Venom Tooth. A hydra can gain the same attack multiple times through this effect.

Many-Headed
Each time a chaos hydra would become dazed or stunned, it instead loses one attack, determined randomly, while using hydra fury during its next turn. The hydra can be dazed or stunned multiple times.

Threatening Reach
A chaos hydra can make opportunity attacks against all enemies within its reach (3 squares).

Alignment Chaotic evil Languages –
Str 26 (+19) Dex 20 (+16) Wis 19 (+15)
Con 28 (+20) Int 2 (+7) Cha 10 (+11)

Hydra Lore

Arcana DC 22: Originally a native of the Elemental Chaos, the chaos hydra has filtered into the other planes. A chaos hydra's two heads contain elemental energy, which its bite unleashes on enemies.

Arcana DC 27: As a chaos hydra is hurt, its body generates more heads. The bite attack of a generated head can vary randomly.

Nature DC 22: When one head of a razor hydra sinks its fangs into an enemy, the other heads become obsessed with the taste of that enemy's blood. Razor hydras are also known as blood hydras for their ability to detect the scent of blood.

Nature DC 27: Heroslayer hydras dwell in mountain caves. In early times, humanoids stalked razor hydras to collect the hydras' serrated teeth, which were valued as weapons because they cause victims to bleed long after receiving wounds.

Encounter Groups

Opportunistic scavengers, such as carrion crawlers and shardstorm vortex whirlwinds, follow rampaging hydras. A powerful creature such as a minotaur cabalist occasionally captures a hydra to guard its lair.

Level 16 Encounter (XP 7,800)
✦ 1 minotaur cabalist (level 13 controller, MM 190)
✦ 1 razor hydra (level 16 solo brute)

Kenku

Sly and secretive, kenkus thrive in the underbelly of the civilized world. Like the ravens they resemble, these avian humanoids are opportunistic. They do not allow laws or morality to stand in their way.

Kenku Ruffian

Kenku ruffians rely on numbers. They flock around their foes to take them down.

Kenku Ruffian Level 3 Minion Skirmisher
Medium natural humanoid XP 38

Initiative +4 Senses Perception +3; low-light vision
HP 1; a missed attack never damages a minion.
AC 17; Fortitude 15, Reflex 16, Will 15
Speed 6

⊕ Club (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+8 vs. AC; 5 damage.

Flock Effect
A kenku ruffian gains a +3 bonus instead of +2 while flanking, and it grants a +3 bonus instead of +2 while aiding another.

Mimicry
A kenku ruffian can mimic sounds and voices. A successful Insight check opposed by the ruffian's Bluff check allows a listener to determine that the effect is faked.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common
Skills Stealth +9
Str 12 (+2) Dex 17 (+4) Wis 14 (+3)
Con 14 (+3) Int 9 (+0) Cha 11 (+1)
Equipment leather armor, club

Kenku Ruffian Tactics

Before combat begins, one or two kenku ruffians go to get help. Once the fighting starts, ruffians use flock effect to boost their leaders' attacks and to make accurate attacks together.

Kenku Warrior

The kenku warrior practices a flitting martial art, dodging seemingly at random toward and away from foes.

Kenku Warrior Level 3 Skirmisher
Medium natural humanoid XP 150

Initiative +6 Senses Perception +3; low-light vision
HP 44; Bloodied 22
AC 17; Fortitude 14, Reflex 15, Will 14
Speed 6

⊕ Dagger (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+8 vs. AC; 1d4 + 6 damage.

⊛ Dagger (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Ranged 5/10; +8 vs. AC; 1d4 + 6 damage.

↯ Fluttering Attack (standard; at-will)
The kenku warrior shifts 4 squares and makes a basic attack during that movement.

Combat Advantage
A kenku warrior deals 1d6 extra damage on melee attacks against any target granting combat advantage to it.

Flock Effect
A kenku warrior gains a +3 bonus instead of +2 while flanking, and it grants a +3 bonus instead of +2 while aiding another.

Mimicry
A kenku warrior can mimic sounds and voices. A successful Insight check opposed by the warrior's Bluff check allows a listener to determine that the effect is faked.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common
Str 14 (+3) Dex 17 (+4) Wis 14 (+3)
Con 12 (+2) Int 9 (+0) Cha 11 (+1)
Equipment leather armor, 6 daggers

Kenku Warrior Tactics

The kenku warrior uses its mobility and fluttering attack to keep itself and its flockmates in flanking positions. The combination of combat advantage and flock effect then metes out the damage.

Kenku Ringleader

Kenku ringleaders lead small kenku bands on raids or heists, acting as muscle when stealth and trickery fail. If the city watch or a rival gang shows up, the ringleader signals the crew's retreat.

Kenku Ringleader Level 4 Soldier (Leader)
Medium natural humanoid XP 175

Initiative +8 Senses Perception +3; low-light vision
HP 54; Bloodied 27
AC 20; Fortitude 16, Reflex 16, Will 15
Speed 6

⊕ Spiked Chain (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; +11 vs. AC; 2d4 + 5 damage, and the target is marked until the end of the kenku ringleader's next turn.

⊛ Sling (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Ranged 10/20; +11 vs. AC; 1d6 + 5 damage.

↯ Press the Attack (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
Reach 2; targets an enemy marked by the kenku; +11 vs. AC; 2d4 + 5 damage, and the target is knocked prone.

⇄ Flock Reaction (minor; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃)
Close burst 3; targets kenkus; the target shifts 1 square as a free action.

Flock Effect
A kenku ringleader gains a +3 bonus instead of +2 while flanking, and it grants a +3 bonus instead of +2 while aiding another.

Mimicry
A kenku ringleader can mimic sounds and voices. A successful Insight check opposed by the ringleader's Bluff check allows a listener to determine that the effect is faked.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Common
Skills Bluff +10, Intimidate +10
Str 13 (+3) Dex 18 (+6) Wis 12 (+3)
Con 14 (+4) Int 10 (+2) Cha 16 (+5)
Equipment leather armor, sling, spiked chain

Kenku Ringleader Tactics

A kenku ringleader first advances upon and attacks the most dangerous-looking enemies. It then directs allies into flanking positions using the shifting ability granted by flock reaction. It uses press the attack at every chance.

Aware of the details of any situation, a ringleader withdraws if a battle goes badly for its crew. It does not surrender unless it must do so to survive.

Kenku Sneak

The kenku sneak lurks in hiding and strikes from the shadows.

| Kenku Sneak | Level 4 Lurker |
|---|---|
| Medium natural humanoid | XP 175 |
| Initiative +10 | Senses Perception +4; low-light vision |
| HP 42; Bloodied 21 | |
| AC 18; Fortitude 15, Reflex 17, Will 15 | |
| Speed 7 (4 while invisible) | |
| Dagger (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| +9 vs. AC; 1d4 + 6 damage. | |
| Dagger (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| Ranged 5/10; +9 vs. AC; 1d4 + 6 damage. | |
| Disappear into the Flock | |
| While it has cover from other kenkus, a kenku sneak can make a Stealth check to become hidden. | |
| Flock Effect | |
| A kenku sneak gains a +3 bonus instead of +2 while flanking, and it grants a +3 bonus instead of +2 while aiding another. | |
| Hidden Strike | |
| A kenku sneak deals 2d4 + 4 extra damage against any target from which it is hidden. | |
| Mimicry | |
| A kenku sneak can mimic sounds and voices. A successful Insight check opposed by the sneak's Bluff check allows a listener to determine that the effect is faked. | |
| Sniper | |
| A hidden kenku sneak that misses with a ranged attack remains hidden. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Common |
| Skills Bluff +8, Stealth +11, Thievery +11 | |
| Str 15 (+4) | Dex 18 (+6) | Wis 14 (+4) |
| Con 12 (+3) | Int 13 (+3) | Cha 13 (+3) |
| Equipment leather armor, 6 daggers | |

DAVE ALLSOP

Kenku Sneak Tactics

The kenku sneak uses disappear into the flock and focuses on enemies not in the main melee group that are close enough for the sneak to reach while hidden.

Kenku Wing Mage

The kenku wing mage uses air magic and glowing feathers of force to harm and hamper foes.

| Kenku Wing Mage | Level 5 Artillery |
|---|---|
| Medium natural humanoid | XP 200 |
| Initiative +3 | Senses Perception +3; low-light vision |
| HP 50; Bloodied 25 | |
| AC 17; Fortitude 15, Reflex 17, Will 18 | |
| Speed 6; see wings of the flock | |
| Dagger (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon | |
| +9 vs. AC; 1d4 + 3 damage. | |
| Murder of Crows (standard; at-will) ✦ Force, Implement | |
| Ranged 20; +10 vs. Reflex; 1d6 + 4 force damage, and the target grants combat advantage to the kenku wing mage (save ends). | |
| Hurricane Blast (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Force, Implement | |
| Close blast 3; +8 vs. Fortitude; 1d6 + 6 force damage, and the kenku wing mage slides the target 3 squares. | |
| Death Flock (standard; encounter) ✦ Force, Implement | |
| Area burst 1 within 20; +8 vs. Reflex; 1d6 + 6 force damage, and the target is dazed (save ends). | |
| Flock Effect | |
| A kenku wing mage gains a +3 bonus instead of +2 while flanking, and it grants a +3 bonus instead of +2 while aiding another. | |
| Mimicry | |
| A kenku wing mage can mimic sounds and voices. A successful Insight check opposed by the wing mage's Bluff check allows a listener to determine that the effect is faked. | |
| Wings of the Flock (minor; encounter) ✦ Force | |
| The kenku wing mage gains fly 6 (hover; altitude limit 4) until the end of the encounter. | |
| Alignment Unaligned | Languages Common |
| Skills Stealth +8 | |
| Str 9 (+1) | Dex 13 (+3) | Wis 13 (+3) |
| Con 14 (+4) | Int 18 (+6) | Cha 15 (+4) |
| Equipment robes, dagger, orb | |

Kenku Wing Mage Tactics

The kenku wing mage uses wings of the flock to move to a place with cover from where it can rain destruction upon its enemies with murder of crows, hurricane blast, and death flock. Rooftops and tree branches are ideal locations.

Kenku Assassin

Sly and deceitful, a kenku assassin favors poison. Unlike other kenkus, assassins rarely surrender.

| Kenku Assassin | Level 5 Elite Skirmisher |
|---|---|
| Medium natural humanoid | XP 400 |
| Initiative +8 Senses Perception +6; low-light vision | |
| HP 126; Bloodied 63 | |
| AC 19; Fortitude 16, Reflex 17, Will 16 | |
| Saving Throws +2 | |
| Speed 6 | |
| Action Points 1 | |
| Venomous Stab (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison, Weapon | |
| +10 vs. AC; 1d6 + 5 damage, and the target is slowed (save ends). | |
| Venomous Shot (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison, Weapon | |
| Ranged 15/30; +10 vs. AC; 1d8 + 4 poison damage, and the target is slowed (save ends). | |
| Fluttering Attack (standard; at-will) | |
| The kenku assassin shifts 4 squares and uses venomous stab during that move. | |
| Gouging Talons (immediate reaction, when an enemy attacks the kenku assassin; at-will) | |
| Targets the triggering enemy; +10 vs. AC; 1d6 + 2 damage. | |
| Feather Burst (minor; encounter) | |
| Close burst 2; targets enemies; no attack roll; the target is blinded until the end of the kenku assassin's turn. | |
| Flock Effect | |
| A kenku assassin gains a +3 bonus instead of +2 while flanking, and it grants a +3 bonus instead of +2 while aiding another. | |
| Mimicry | |
| A kenku assassin can mimic sounds and voices. A successful Insight check opposed by the assassin's Bluff check allows a listener to determine that the effect is faked. | |
| Alignment Unaligned Languages Common | |
| Skills Bluff +9, Stealth +11, Thievery +11 | |
| Str 13 (+3) Dex 18 (+6) Wis 9 (+1) | |
| Con 15 (+4) Int 13 (+3) Cha 15 (+4) | |
| Equipment leather armor, shortbow, short sword, 20 arrows | |

Kenku Assassin Tactics

The kenku assassin avoids melee until it hits at least one enemy with a venomous shot. Then it uses fluttering attack to poison more enemies. When necessary, the assassin uses feather burst to extricate itself, and possibly its allies, from melee. Kenku assassins fight to the death if escape is not possible.

Kenku Lore

Nature DC 12: These opportunistic avians live in tightly knit clans called flocks. Flocks are suspicious of outsiders, even other kenkus. They move in groups and are exceptionally good at working together.

Nature DC 17: Kenkus live predominantly in civilized regions but can be found throughout the world. Flocks live in or near major cities, often secretly. Flocks run a wide variety of criminal enterprises, favoring schemes and cons. They frequently use their ability to mimic sounds and voices. Violence is not their first choice, but kenkus can be formidable adversaries once steel is drawn.

Encounter Groups

Kenku flocks keep a wide variety of monsters as short-term company. Only those who overcome the kenkus' naturally suspicious nature remain part of a flock for long.

Level 2 Encounter (XP 700)
- 2 bloodseeker drakes (level 4 soldier)
- 2 kenku warriors (level 3 skirmisher)
- 1 pseudodragon (level 3 lurker, MM 91)

Level 3 Encounter (XP 779)
- 1 kenku ringleader (level 4 soldier)
- 8 kenku ruffians (level 3 minion)
- 2 kenku warriors (level 3 skirmisher)

Level 3 Encounter (XP 824)
- 2 blood hawks (level 1 skirmisher)
- 4 kenku ruffians (level 3 minion skirmisher)
- 1 kenku sneak (level 4 lurker)
- 3 spiretop drakes (level 1 skirmisher)

Level 4 Encounter (XP 922)
- 1 human berserker (level 4 brute, MM 163)
- 1 kenku ringleader (level 4 soldier)
- 6 kenku ruffians (level 3 minion skirmisher)
- 2 kenku sneaks (level 4 lurker)

Level 5 Encounter (XP 1,200)
- 1 half-elf bandit captain (level 6 skirmisher)
- 2 human berserkers (level 4 brute, MM 163)
- 1 kenku assassin (level 5 elite skirmisher)
- 1 kenku wing mage (level 5 artillery)

KRENSHAR

KRENSHARS ARE POWERFUL, CATLIKE CREATURES with faces that peel back to expose the bones and muscles of their skulls. This hideous sight, combined with a krenshar's savage roars, freezes its foes in terror.

| Krenshar | Level 4 Controller |
|---|---|
| Medium natural beast | XP 175 |
| Initiative +5 | Senses Perception +7; low-light vision |
| Fearsome Visage aura 5; each enemy within the aura takes a -2 penalty to saving throws against fear effects. | |
| HP 55; Bloodied 27 | |

KRENSHAR BLOOD SLAYER

KRENSHAR BLOOD SLAYERS ARE SLIGHTLY LARGER than their more common cousins. They lead krenshar prides, tracking prey with their uncanny ability to smell blood.

| Krenshar Blood Slayer | Level 5 Brute |
|---|---|
| Medium natural beast | XP 200 |
| Initiative +5 | Senses Perception +7; low-light vision |
| Fearsome Visage aura 5; each enemy within the aura takes a -2 penalty to saving throws against fear effects. | |
| HP 75; Bloodied 37 | |

KRENSHAR LORE

Nature DC 12: Krenshars roam hills, plains, and forests in small prides. Krenshars born with blood red spots on their hides become guardians of the pride. Other krenshars act as hunters and caregivers to young.

Nature DC 17: Gnolls, hobgoblins, and humans trap and domesticate krenshars. Trainers are often injured or killed while taming them, because repressing a stressed krenshar's instinct to reveal its skull is difficult.

KRENSHAR ENCOUNTER GROUPS

Krenshars are usually encountered with members of their pride or with humanoids that have tamed them.

Level 5 Encounter (XP 1,125)
- ✦ 2 deathpledged gnolls (level 5 brute)
- ✦ 3 krenshars (level 4 controller)
- ✦ 1 krenshar blood slayer (level 5 brute)

Level 6 Encounter (XP 1,450)
- ✦ 2 human javelin dancers (level 6 skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 human slaver (level 8 brute)
- ✦ 3 krenshar blood slayers (level 5 brute)

ADAM GILLESPIE

LIZARDFOLK

Poisonscale lizardfolk favor cruel toxins and relentless hit-and-run tactics. Swamps and jungles are the favored homes of the varied tribes of these scaled humanoids.

Poisonscale Magus

The poisonscale magus uses toxic magic to hurl death from a distance.

Poisonscale Magus Level 2 Artillery
Medium natural humanoid (reptile) XP 125

(Left to right) poisonscale myrmidon, savage, and magus

Poisonscale Myrmidon

Compared with other lizardfolk, the poisonscale myrmidon wielding a club is a disciplined combatant.

| Poisonscale Myrmidon | Level 3 Soldier |
|---|---|
| Medium natural humanoid (reptile) | XP 150 |
| Initiative +5 Senses Perception +2 | |

| Equipment club, turtle shell shield (light shield) | |

Poisonscale Lore

Nature DC 10: Although poisonscale slitherers are less hale than other lizardfolk, they have powerful tails that stabilize them in battle.

Poisonscale collectors are specially trained hunters with two important duties: collecting the toxic plants and creatures that poisonscales eat to produce their poison, and taking captives for slavery or sacrifice.

Among poisonscales, magi are honored advisors. Because of their toxic magic, they live short lives.

Poisonscale myrmidons lack other poisonscales' ability to produce poison, but they make up for it with greater strength and thicker scales.

Poisonscale savages enjoy "counting coup" by touching enemies with their tails. When they defeat their enemies, they take trophies from the bodies.

Encounter Groups

Lizardfolk hunt in mixed groups, taking roles in hunting parties according to their diverse talents.

Level 3 Encounter (XP 850)

LYCANTHROPE

Hereditary shapeshifters, lycanthropes are feared in communities both large and small. In its natural form, a lycanthrope appears as a blend of humanoid and beast, but it can choose to wear a humanoid disguise or an animal shape.

Wereboar

Wereboars are brutish humanoids that are easily angered and that transform into lycanthropic form when incited. A wereboar is a provocateur, and seeks out fights in taverns and on city streets, where it can use its size and strength in close quarters.

| Wereboar | Level 6 Brute |
|---|---|
| Large natural humanoid (shapechanger) | XP 250 |

Initiative +3 Senses Perception +4
HP 61; Bloodied 33; see also bloodied resilience and death strike
Regeneration 5
AC 17; Fortitude 21, Reflex 16, Will 17
Immune moontusk fever; Vulnerable silver (if the wereboar takes damage from a silver weapon, its regeneration does not function on its next turn)
Speed 6 (8 in boar form)

⊕ Maul (standard; usable only while in humanoid form; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+9 vs. AC; 2d6 + 6 damage.

⊕ Gore (standard; usable only while in boar form; at-will) ✦ Disease
+9 vs. AC; 1d8 + 6 damage, ongoing 5 damage (save ends), and the target is exposed to moontusk fever (see below).

⸸ Death Strike (when the werebear drops to 0 hit points)
The wereboar makes a gore or a maul attack.

Bloodied Resilience (while bloodied)
The wereboar gains a +2 bonus to all defenses and deals ongoing 10 damage with its gore attack instead of ongoing 5 damage.

Change Shape (minor; at-will) ✦ Polymorph
A wereboar can alter its physical form to appear as a dire boar (MM 35) or a unique humanoid (see "Change Shape," page 216).

Alignment Evil Languages Common
Skills Athletics +13, Endurance +11, Intimidate +8

| Con 16 (+6) | Int 10 (+3) | Cha 11 (+3) |

Equipment hide armor, maul

Wereboar Tactics

A wereboar looks for any opportunity to utilize its boar form. It engages in battle with minimal cause, charging opponents and using its gore attack.

| Moontusk Fever | Level 6 Disease | Endurance improve DC 17, maintain DC 12, worsen DC 11 or lower |

The target is cured.

◀ Initial Effect: The target takes a -2 penalty to saving throws while bloodied.

◀▶ While bloodied, the target can roll only one saving throw at the end of its turn, even if it is affected by multiple effects.

▶ Final State: When the subject rolls a saving throw while bloodied, it rolls two dice and takes the lower of the two results.

Weretiger

Weretigers are cautious combatants. A weretiger uses stealth to stalk an enemy, waiting for the opportune moment to strike.

| Con 15 (+7) | Int 12 (+6) Cha 13 (+6) |
| Equipment leather armor, 2 katars | |

Weretiger Tactics

A weretiger prefers to focus on one adversary at a time using feline fury and retreats if engaged by a second opponent. If this happens, the weretiger charges with pounce to reengage.

| Moon Rage | Level 11 Disease | Endurance improve DC 21, maintain DC 16, worsen DC 15 or lower |
|---|---|---|
| The target is cured. | Initial Effect: The target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls as its hands begin to grow fur and claws. | The target gains a Strength-based claw attack that deals 1d6 damage. The target can no longer wield weapons or hold implements. This effect remains as long as the subject is diseased. | Final State: The target's predatory instincts take over. When the target attacks a creature in combat, it can attack no other creatures until that target is dead or until the end of the encounter. |

Werewolf Lord

At the center of many lycanthropic clans, a werewolf lord calls the shots. The most feared of its kind, the werewolf lord is larger, stronger, and smarter than a werewolf and is a vicious adversary.

| Werewolf Lord | Level 13 Elite Brute (Leader) |
|---|---|
| Large natural humanoid (shapechanger) | XP 1,600 |
| Initiative +7 | Senses Perception +8; low-light vision |
| Blood Moon aura 5; the werewolf lord and any ally within the aura gain a +2 bonus to attack rolls and a +5 bonus to damage rolls against bloodied targets. | |
| HP 264; Bloodied 132 | |
| Regeneration 10 | |
| AC 25; Fortitude 27, Reflex 22, Will 24 | |

| ⊕ Bite (standard; usable only while in wolf form; at-will) ✦ Disease | |
| +16 vs. AC; 2d12 + 3 damage, and the target is exposed to greater moon frenzy (see below). | |
| ↓ Canine Fury (standard; at-will) | |
| The werewolf lord makes two melee basic attacks. | |
| ↓ Speed of the Wolf (standard; usable only in wolf form; recharge ⚄ ⚅) | |
| The werewolf lord shifts 6 squares and makes a bite attack. | |
| ⇙ Savage Howl (minor; encounter) | |
| Close burst 10; each ally in the burst gains 15 temporary hit points. In addition, each ally that has a bite attack makes a bite attack as a free action. | |
| Change Shape (minor; at-will) ✦ Polymorph | |
| A werewolf lord can alter its physical form to appear as a dire wolf (MM 264) or a unique humanoid (see "Change Shape," page 216). | |
| Alignment Evil | Languages Common |
| Skills Athletics +17, Bluff +14, Endurance +14, Intimidate +14 | |

| Con 17 (+9) | Int 13 (+7) Cha 16 (+9) |
| Equipment chain armor, falchion | |

Werewolf Lord Tactics

The impressive physique of a werewolf lord often leads foes to underestimate its cunning. A werewolf lord guides the attacks of its group, inspiring its allies to greater ferocity with its savage howl and its blood moon aura.

| Greater Moon Frenzy | Level 13 Disease | Endurance improve DC 23, maintain DC 18, worsen DC 17 or lower |
|---|---|---|
| The target is cured. | Initial Effect: The target takes a –2 penalty to Will. | While bloodied, the target must make a saving throw at the end of each turn. If the saving throw fails, the target makes a melee attack on its next turn against a random target within 5 squares of it. If no targets are within 5 squares, the target does nothing but move in a randomly chosen direction. | Final State: The target attacks the nearest creature in its line of sight. If it cannot see any other creatures, it does nothing but move in a randomly chosen direction. |

Lycanthrope Lore

Nature DC 16: Lycanthropy is hereditary, and lycanthropes mate with other lycanthropes to produce lycanthropic offspring. Some lycanthropes can also mate with humanoids, producing lycanthropic children. However, the blood is diluted in this way, and such children never change forms or instead become shifters.

Nature DC 21: Legend says that Melora created lycanthropes, and they are affected by the full moon and silver because of a feud between Melora and Sehanine. Lycanthropes are most active on nights with a full moon. Silver, the moon metal, cuts them to the quick.

Encounter Groups

As shapechangers, lycanthropes can be found with a wide variety of creatures. But only those who can keep up with the bestial fury of lycanthropes remain connected to them for long.

Level 6 Encounter (XP 1,200)
- ✦ 2 half-orc hunters (level 5 skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 human hexer (level 7 controller)
- ✦ 2 wereboars (level 6 brute)

Level 12 Encounter (XP 3,500)
- ✦ 1 eladrin bladesinger (level 11 skirmisher)
- ✦ 2 weretigers (level 11 elite skirmisher)
- ✦ 1 will-o'-wisp (level 10 lurker)

Level 13 Encounter (XP 4,250)
- ✦ 1 werewolf pack lord (level 13 elite brute)
- ✦ 3 werewolves (level 8 brute, MM 181)
- ✦ 4 worgs (level 9 brute, MM 265)

MAMMOTH

Mammoths are furry, elephantlike creatures that roam the freezing steppes. The furious Nyfellar mammoth, a creature made partially of ice, hits foes like an avalanche.

| Nyfellar Mammoth | Level 17 Brute |
|---|---|
| Huge elemental beast (mount) | XP 1,600 |
| Initiative +6 Senses Perception +10 | |
| HP 202; Bloodied 101 | |

| Resist 10 cold | |
| Speed 8 (ice walk) | |
| ⊕ Gore (standard; at-will) | |
| Reach 2; +20 vs. AC; 2d10 + 10 damage. | |
| ⚔ Stamp (standard; at-will) ✦ Cold | |
| +18 vs. Fortitude; 2d6 + 10 damage plus 1d6 cold damage, and the target is knocked prone. | |
| ⚔ Blizzard Trample (standard; recharges when the Nyfellar mammoth is first bloodied or when it takes cold damage) | |
| The Nyfellar mammoth moves 8 squares and can move through enemy-occupied spaces, making one stamp attack against each of those enemies. | |
| ⚔ Tusk Toss (standard; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃) | |
| Reach 2; +18 vs. Fortitude; 1d10 + 5 damage, and the mammoth slides the target 5 squares. The target falls from a height of up to 30 feet (6 squares) into the space where it ends the slide and takes falling damage, if applicable. | |
| Bitterwind Charge (while mounted by a friendly rider of 17th level or higher; at-will) ✦ Mount | |
| When charging, the Nyfellar mammoth can use blizzard trample or tusk toss instead of a melee basic attack. After the mammoth's attack, its rider makes a melee basic attack as a free action. | |
| Icebound Footing | |
| When an effect pulls, pushes, or slides the Nyfellar mammoth, the mammoth moves 2 squares less than the effect specifies. The mammoth can make a saving throw to avoid being knocked prone. | |
| Alignment Unaligned Languages – | |
| Str 30 (+18) Dex 10 (+8) Wis 18 (+12) | |
| Con 22 (+14) Int 2 (+4) Cha 9 (+7) | |

Nyfellar Mammoth Tactics

The Nyfellar mammoth charges enemies with a stamp and then uses tusk toss. It fights until those threatening it flee or until it dies.

TOMÁS GIORELLO

Mammoth Lore

Arcana DC 20: The massive Nyfellar mammoths have their origins in Nyfell, the frozen land in the Elemental Chaos from which frost giants hail. Frost giants brought these beasts to the world. Because Nyfellar mammoths can subsist on a variety of food and ice, they can live in inhospitable frozen regions.

Encounter Groups

Frost giants use Nyfellar mammoths for warfare and raids. A favorite frost giant tactic is to ready an attack against the victim of a tusk toss.

Level 17 Encounter (XP 9,200)
- ✦ 2 frost giants (level 17 brute)
- ✦ 2 Nyfellar mammoths (level 17 brute)
- ✦ 1 rimefire griffon (level 20 skirmisher, MM 147)

MARUT

Valuing order and oaths of service, a marut hones its skills for a particular purpose. Maruts serve other entities as mercenaries or serve their own mysterious ends.

Marut Castigator

Marut castigators identify those who violate the law, subduing them for judgment.

Marut Castigator Level 21 Skirmisher
Medium immortal humanoid XP 3,200

Initiative +19 Senses Perception +21; truesight 10
HP 146; Bloodied 73
Regeneration 10
AC 35; Fortitude 33, Reflex 34, Will 33
Immune sleep; Resist 10 thunder
Speed 8, fly 4 (hover), teleport 4

⊕ Double Sword (standard; at-will) ✦ Lightning, Weapon
+26 vs. AC; 3d8 + 5 damage. The marut castigator can choose to have the attack deal lightning damage.

Double Attack (standard; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃)
The marut castigator makes two double sword attacks.

Punisher's Lash (standard; at-will) ✦ Lightning
Reach 2; +23 vs. Reflex; 2d6 + 7 lightning damage, and the target is slowed and cannot teleport until the end of the marut castigator's next turn.

Thunderbolt Strike (standard; recharges when both attacks of double attack hit) ✦ Teleportation, Thunder
The marut castigator teleports 4 squares and makes a double sword attack that deals 2d6 extra thunder damage.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Supernal
Skills Acrobatics +22
Str 22 (+16) Dex 25 (+17) Wis 22 (+16)
Con 20 (+15) Int 14 (+12) Cha 15 (+12)
Equipment double sword

Marut Prosecutor

A marut prosecutor's word is marut law. Woe to any who fail to obey that law when a marut is near.

Marut Prosecutor Level 21 Controller (Leader)
Medium immortal humanoid XP 3,200

Initiative +13 Senses Perception +21; truesight 10
HP 147; Bloodied 73
Regeneration 10
AC 35; Fortitude 32, Reflex 33, Will 33
Immune sleep; Resist 10 thunder
Speed 8, fly 4 (hover), teleport 4

⊕ Slam (standard; at-will) ✦ Thunder
+26 vs. AC; 1d10 + 4 damage plus 1d6 thunder damage, and the target is slowed (save ends).

Dictum (minor; at-will)
Ranged 10; +22 vs. Fortitude; the target is immobilized (save ends).

Biting Testimony (standard; at-will) ✦ Psychic
Close burst 10; targets one enemy; +25 vs. Will; 3d6 + 7 psychic damage, and the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls, skill checks, and ability checks (save ends).

Sigil of Indictment (minor; usable only when no creature is affected by this power; at-will) ✦ Psychic
Close burst 10; targets one enemy; +25 vs. Will; until the end of the marut prosecutor's next turn, the target grants combat advantage to the prosecutor, and the prosecutor and its allies deal 5 extra psychic damage against the creature. Sustain Minor: The effect persists.

Justice Restrained
A slowed, immobilized, or restrained creature takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls against a marut prosecutor.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Supernal
Skills Insight +21, Intimidate +22
Str 18 (+14) Dex 16 (+13) Wis 23 (+16)
Con 21 (+15) Int 23 (+16) Cha 24 (+17)

Marut Prosecutor Tactics

The prosecutor singles out one enemy—preferably one who has violated the marut's creed—and places a sigil of indictment on it. The prosecutor then uses dictum to prevent escape and biting testimony to break the enemy's spirit by shouting out the enemy's crimes, failures, or flaws.

Marut Executioner

The marut executioner slays those who oppose marut actions or who do not repay maruts for aid.

Marut Executioner Level 22 Brute
Medium immortal humanoid XP 4,150

Initiative +17 Senses Perception +13; truesight 10
HP 205; Bloodied 102
Regeneration 10
AC 34; Fortitude 34, Reflex 33, Will 34
Immune sleep; Resist 10 thunder
Speed 8, fly 4 (hover), teleport 4

⊕ Double Axe (standard; at-will) ✦ Thunder, Weapon
+25 vs. AC; 2d10 + 4 damage plus 2d8 thunder damage. On a critical hit, the target is also knocked prone.

Warranted Stroke (standard; recharges when first bloodied) ✦ Thunder
Targets a bloodied creature; +27 vs. AC; 4d6 + 8 damage plus 2d8 thunder damage, and the target is knocked prone. If this attack reduces the target to 0 hit points or fewer, the marut executioner gains 1 action point.

Execution's Call (standard; encounter) ✦ Thunder
Close blast 5; targets enemies; +23 vs. Fortitude; 2d6 + 7 thunder damage, and the marut executioner pulls the target into a space adjacent to it. Miss: Half damage.

Slayer's Fury (standard; encounter) ✦ Thunder, Weapon
Close burst 1; targets enemies; +23 vs. AC; 2d10 + 4 damage plus 2d8 thunder damage. On a critical hit, the target is also knocked prone.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Supernal
Skills Endurance +23, Intimidate +23
Str 26 (+19) Dex 23 (+17) Wis 15 (+13)
Con 25 (+18) Int 14 (+13) Cha 24 (+18)
Equipment double axe

Marut Lore

Religion DC 22: Maruts require no sustenance. Maruts take no slaves, but they sometimes have mortal servitors in their astral fortresses. They do accept or request services as payment for completed tasks—so maruts might accept indentured servitude or other compulsory services. Although maruts rarely mistreat their servants, they are strict and uncompassionate taskmasters.

Religion DC 27: Although maruts are thought of as a unified race, they divide themselves along ethical and militaristic lines into units they call cadres. Marut cadres dedicated to philosophies other than the upholding of oaths and the fair dispensing of justice also exist. A few cadres serve the Raven Queen.

Bargaining with Maruts

A marut is an inscrutable being of cosmic balance. It is insightful and careful, but it is fallible. While under contract, a marut acts in its employer's interests. Only a reasoned appeal to a marut's beliefs, proof that a contract contains falsehood, or a mission of greater importance can cause a marut to abandon its task. Maruts might undertake tasks that support their beliefs without requesting payment.

Religion DC 29: Maruts favor strict interpretation of laws and contracts and the upholding of oaths. The love of order and battle they share with angels is more than coincidental. Maruts consider themselves to be astral spirits of the air, despite the fact that they appear to be made of solid stone and to be clad in metal. The designation makes sense. Maruts fly without wings, and they live and roam about in mobile fortresses floating on the Astral Sea.

Encounter Groups

Maruts of various cadres work together and with other races when a task furthers their overarching beliefs. They do so under contract.

Level 21 Encounter (XP 17,500)
- 1 djinn vizier (level 20 artillery)
- 2 marut castigators (level 21 skirmisher)
- 2 marut executioners (level 22 brute)

Level 23 Encounter (XP 27,750)

Myconid

Insidious fungal menaces from Feywild caverns polluted by the fomorians, myconids strive only to spread across their territories, contaminating those places with their presence.

Myconid Rotpriest

The myconid rotpriest is the colony's healer and scapegoat, taking the damage of others so that the colony as a whole can survive.

Myconid Rotpriest Level 3 Brute (Leader)
Medium fey humanoid (plant) XP 150
Initiative +2 Senses Perception +3; tremorsense 10

Regeneration 5
AC 15; Fortitude 16, Reflex 13, Will 16
Vulnerable radiant (if the myconid rotpriest takes radiant damage, its regeneration does not function until the end of the rotpriest's next turn)
Speed 5
⊕ Stipe Staff (standard; at-will) ✦ Weapon
+6 vs. AC; 2d10 + 3 damage.
✧ Decomposing Spray (standard; at-will) ✦ Necrotic
Close burst 3; +6 vs. Fortitude; 1d10 + 3 necrotic damage.
✧ Life Burst (when reduced to 0 hit points) ✦ Healing
Close burst 1; targets living creatures; the target regains 10 hit points.
Roots of the Colony (free, when the myconid rotpriest is hit by an attack while a myconid ally is within 5 squares of it; at-will)
The rotpriest takes half damage from the attack, and the myconid ally takes the same amount of damage.
Sacrifice for the Colony (free, when a myconid ally uses roots of the colony to deal damage to the myconid rotpriest; at-will)
The rotpriest takes the damage dealt to the ally, and the ally takes none.
Alignment Unaligned Languages –
Str 10 (+1) Dex 12 (+2) Wis 15 (+3)
Con 18 (+5) Int 10 (+1) Cha 18 (+5)
Equipment quarterstaff

Myconid Rotpriest Tactics

A rotpriest positions itself among allies in combat, absorbing their damage with roots of the colony and sacrifice for the colony and then regenerating. It uses decomposing spray when it can hit multiple targets. Otherwise, it uses its stipe staff to bludgeon enemies into submission.

Myconid Sovereign

The myconid sovereign commands the allegiance of its colony. This towering fungal leader holds silent court over its underlings.

Myconid Sovereign Level 4 Controller (Leader)
Large fey humanoid (plant) XP 175
Initiative +2 Senses Perception +0; tremorsense 10
HP 58; Bloodied 29
AC 18; Fortitude 18, Reflex 14, Will 15
Speed 6
⊕ Slam (standard; at-will)
+9 vs. AC; 2d6 + 3 damage.
✧ Spore Burst (standard; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃) ✦ Poison
Close blast 3; targets nonplants; +8 vs. Will; 1d8 + 3 poison damage, and the target is dazed until the end of the myconid sovereign's next turn.
✧ Commanding Spores (standard; at-will)
Close burst 5; targets one plant ally in burst; the target shifts 1 square.
Roots of the Colony (free, when the myconid sovereign is hit by an attack while a myconid ally is within 5 squares of it; at-will)
The myconid sovereign takes half of the damage from the attack, and the myconid ally takes the same amount of damage.
Alignment Unaligned Languages telepathy 5
Str 7 (+0) Dex 11 (+2) Wis 8 (+1)
Con 18 (+6) Int 7 (+0) Cha 12 (+3)

Myconid Sovereign Tactics

A myconid sovereign fights behind other myconids, relying on them for protection. It uses commanding spores to create a defensive wall of myconids. Because other myconids are immune to spore burst, the sovereign uses that attack against enemies that are engaged in melee with its allies.

Myconid Guard

Myconid guards are a colony's protectors and shock troops.

Myconid Guard Level 4 Soldier
Medium fey humanoid (plant) XP 175
Initiative +5 Senses Perception +3; tremorsense 10
HP 56; Bloodied 28
AC 18; Fortitude 17, Reflex 16, Will 14
Speed 6
⊕ Spiny Strike (standard; at-will)
+11 vs. AC; 2d6 + 3 damage.
✧ Pacification Spores (standard; encounter) ✦ Poison
Close burst 1; +9 vs. Will; 1d6 + 3 poison damage, and the target cannot take a standard action until the end of the myconid guard's next turn.
Roots of the Colony (free, when the myconid guard is hit by an attack while a myconid ally is within 5 squares of it; at-will)
The myconid guard takes half damage from the attack, and the myconid ally takes the same amount of damage.
Alignment Unaligned Languages –

Con 16 (+5) Int 8 (+1) Cha 10 (+2)

(Left to right) myconid guard, rotpriest, sovereign, and guard

Myconid Guard Tactics

When a colony comes under attack, myconid guards charge into combat. They use pacification spores to incapacitate enemies, and they attempt to subdue other enemies with spiny strike attacks.

Myconid Lore

Arcana DC 12: Myconids are plant creatures touched by the madness of the fomorians. Although not necessarily evil, myconids strive to expand their territory and numbers, which pits them against other creatures competing for the same resources. Myconids like dark places and often prefer the Underdark and the Shadowdark to their home plane.

Because of the inherent resilience of a colony of myconids, other races cultivate them for cheap labor or enslave them. Drow, fomorians, and shadar-kai command myconids in great numbers.

Arcana DC 17: Vast mushroom forests sprawl over tracts of the Feywild and areas of the Underdark and the Shadowdark, providing myconids with ideal conditions under which to thrive and to multiply. Other fungal creatures represent a full range of predators of and prey for myconids.

Arcana DC 19: Myconids communicate with each other by releasing spores. These spores convey raw emotions such as fear, satisfaction, and desire. A colony's sovereign is the only myconid that can communicate with other types of creatures, which it does by using its telepathy.

Encounter Groups

Shadowfell- and Underdark-dwelling civilizations co-opt myconid colonies. Myconids can thrive in a wide range of places, including forest glades, deep dungeons, and the strange landscapes of the Feywild.

Level 3 Encounter (XP 850)
- 1 deathjump spider (level 4 skirmisher)
- 2 myconid guards (level 4 soldier)
- 1 myconid rotpriest (level 3 brute)
- 1 myconid sovereign (level 4 controller)

Level 4 Encounter (XP 875)
- 2 arbalesters (level 4 artillery)
- 1 green slime (level 4 lurker)
- 2 myconid guards (level 4 soldier)

Level 5 Encounter (XP 1,100)
- 1 geonid (level 6 lurker)
- 2 myconid rotpriests (level 4 brute)
- 2 rust monsters (level 6 skirmisher)

NEOGI

Neogi see the world in terms of ownership. The strong rule and possess the weak. Slavery and trade form the foundations of neogi culture, making neogi reliable merchants to devils, giants, drow, and other dark forces.

Neogi Slaver

The neogi slaver seeks to bring foes to their knees rather than kill them. Dead slaves aren't worth much on the market.

Neogi Slaver Level 10 Controller (Leader)
Medium aberrant magical beast XP 500

Initiative +7 Senses Perception +8; darkvision
HP 106; Bloodied 53
AC 24; Fortitude 21, Reflex 22, Will 23
Immune dazed
Speed 8, climb 6 (spider climb)

⊕ Bite (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison
+14 vs. AC; 1d6 + 3 damage, and ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target is slowed (save ends).

Charm Bolt (standard; at-will) ✦ Charm
Ranged 12; +15 vs. Will; the target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls on attacks that include the neogi slaver as a target (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target treats the slaver as invisible (save ends).

Psychic Shackle (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Psychic
Close blast 3; +15 vs. Will; 3d6 + 2 psychic damage, and the target is dazed until the start of the neogi slaver's next turn.

Thrall Goad (minor; encounter)
Close burst 6; targets allies; the target makes a saving throw with a +5 bonus.

Alignment Evil Languages Common, Deep Speech, telepathy 12
Skills Bluff +20, Diplomacy +20, Insight +18, Intimidate +20
Str 11 (+5) Dex 14 (+7) Wis 17 (+8)
Con 18 (+9) Int 19 (+9) Cha 21 (+10)

Neogi Slaver Tactics

The neogi slaver fights just behind the front line, using charm bolt to reduce the threat from any enemy targeting it. Psychic shackle softens groups of enemies for capture.

Neogi Spawn Swarm

A swarm of neogi spawn moves toward anything that is neither neogi nor marked as the slave of one, and then tries to eat it.

Neogi Spawn Swarm Level 10 Brute
Medium aberrant magical beast (swarm) XP 500

Initiative +9 Senses Perception +8; darkvision
Swarm Attack aura 1; each enemy that starts its turn within the aura takes 5 poison damage.
HP 131; Bloodied 65; see also psychic scream
AC 23; Fortitude 22, Reflex 21, Will 22
Immune dazed; Resist half damage from melee and ranged attacks; Vulnerable 10 against close and area attacks
Speed 6, climb 6 (spider climb)

⊕ Bite (standard; at-will) ✦ Poison
+13 vs. AC; 2d6 + 4 damage, and ongoing 5 poison damage (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target is also slowed (save ends).

Psychic Scream (when first bloodied and again when the neogi spawn swarm drops to 0 hit points) ✦ Psychic
Close burst 1; targets enemies; +11 vs. Will; 2d6 + 2 psychic damage, and the target is dazed (save ends).

Alignment Evil Languages Deep Speech
Str 18 (+9) Dex 19 (+9) Wis 17 (+8)
Con 21 (+10) Int 5 (+2) Cha 21 (+10)

Neogi Spawn Swarm Tactics

These partially formed slugs have no higher goal than to sate their endless hunger and no tactical plans beyond consuming the flesh of any creature present.

Neogi Great Old Master

Unquestioned rulers of their trade clans, great old masters are living brood nests. Each carries within itself the fertile eggs of a whole neogi clan, as well as larval masses developing into neogi spawn.

Neogi Great Old Master Level 16 Controller
Large aberrant magical beast XP 1,400

Initiative +10 Senses Perception +12; darkvision
Thrall Field aura 1; each enemy within the aura takes a -4 penalty to saving throws.
HP 157; Bloodied 78; see also larva burst
AC 30; Fortitude 27, Reflex 28, Will 29
Immune dazed
Speed 6, climb 4 (spider climb)

⊕ Scythe Claw (standard; at-will)
Reach 3; +21 vs. AC; 2d8 + 7 damage, and the target is knocked prone.

Enslaving Bolt (standard; at-will) ✦ Charm, Psychic
Ranged 12; +20 vs. Will; 2d6 + 7 psychic damage, and the target is slowed (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target takes a -2 penalty to attack rolls on attacks that include the neogi great old master as a target. Second Failed Saving Throw: The target is dominated (save ends). Third Failed Saving Throw: If the target is bloodied, it is dominated until it takes an extended rest.

Larva Burst (when first bloodied; encounter) ✦ Zone
Close burst 2; targets enemies; +20 vs. Reflex; 2d10 + 5 damage, and the target is slowed (save ends). Effect: The burst creates a zone of squirming grubs and larvae that lasts until the end of the encounter. The zone is difficult terrain.

Psychic Shackle (standard; recharge ⚅ ⚄ ⚃) ✦ Psychic
Close blast 4; +20 vs. Will; 3d6 + 7 psychic damage, and the target is dazed until the start of the neogi great old master's next turn.

Alignment Evil Languages Common, Deep Speech, telepathy 12
Skills Bluff +20, Diplomacy +20, Insight +18, Intimidate +20
Str 20 (+13) Dex 14 (+10) Wis 18 (+12)
Con 21 (+13) Int 22 (+14) Cha 24 (+15)

Neogi Great Old Master Tactics

When forced into battle as the leader of its clan, a neogi great old master moves to the center of conflict, uses its long, scythelike legs for scythe claw attacks, and uses enslaving bolt to dominate its enemies.

Neogi Lore

Dungeoneering DC 16: Neogi see everything in terms of ownership and lay claim to everything not already claimed by a creature more powerful than they are. Travelers of dark lands and strange realms, neogi embark on trade missions to barter with powerful evil creatures. They buy and sell slaves, exotic goods, and odd magic baubles.

Dungeoneering DC 21: Neogi originate in the Far Realm. They avoid the deadly mind flayers. Once owned by illithidlike beings in the Far Realm, neogi also avoid entanglements with illithids in the world.

Great old masters rule every neogi trade clan. Drooling horrors, they brim with vile intellect and the unborn spawn of their clans.

Neogi spawn are adolescents with small brains to match their relatively tiny bodies. They tumble about neogi colonies under the watchful eyes of their guardians.

Encounter Groups

Neogi rarely appear without slaves in tow. Some slaves fall so fully under neogi control that the slaves willingly aid their masters in combat.

Level 13 Encounter (4,800 XP)
- ✦ 3 neogi slavers (level 10 controller)
- ✦ 1 neogi spawn swarm (level 10 brute)
- ✦ 2 umber hulks (level 12 elite soldier, MM 256)

Level 15 Encounter (6,150 XP)
- ✦ 5 kuo-toa guards (level 16 minion, MM 172)
- ✦ 2 kuo-toa harpooners (level 14 soldier, MM 172)
- ✦ 1 neogi great old master (level 16 controller)
- ✦ 2 neogi slavers (level 10 controller)

WARREN MAHY

(Back to front) neogi great old master and neogi slaver

Aberrant creatures carried to the planes on drifting pieces of the Far Realm, nothics have fragmented intellects strung together by tenuous sanity. Typically controlled by a more powerful master, a nothic's propensity for random, seemingly insane actions makes it more like an amusing pet than a servitor.

Nothic Cackler

The nothic cackler gibbers and capers madly about, hardly seeming to care about foes even in the midst of combat.

Nothic Cackler Level 15 Artillery
Medium aberrant humanoid XP 1,200

Initiative +11 Senses Perception +9; darkvision, truesight 10
HP 116; Bloodied 58
AC 27; Fortitude 28, Reflex 29, Will 25
Speed 6

⊕ Claw (standard; at-will)
+21 vs. AC; 1d6 + 5 damage.

Mind Rot (standard; at-will) ✦ Charm, Psychic
Ranged 10; +20 vs. Will; 2d6 + 3 psychic damage, and the nothic cackler slides the target 6 squares. The target then makes a melee basic attack against a target of the cackler's choice.

Rotting Gaze (standard; at-will) ✦ Necrotic
Ranged 10; targets one, two, or three enemies; +18 vs. Fortitude; 2d6 + 5 necrotic damage, and the target takes a -2 penalty to all defenses (save ends).

Maddening Cackle (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Fear, Psychic
Close burst 3; targets enemies; +18 vs. Will; 2d8 + 6 psychic damage, and the nothic cackler pushes the target 2 squares. At the start of the target's next turn, the cackler slides the target 2 squares.

Distorted Visage
When a nothic cackler moves at least 4 squares during its turn, it gains a +2 bonus to AC and Reflex until the end of its next turn.

Alignment Unaligned Languages Deep Speech
Skills Stealth +16
Str 19 (+11) Dex 19 (+11) Wis 14 (+9)
Con 20 (+12) Int 9 (+6) Cha 10 (+7)

Nothic Mindblight

As morose and sedentary as the nothic cackler is crazed, the nothic mindblight uses the dizzying effect of its single eye to disorient enemies and sow chaos among their ranks.

Nothic Mindblight Level 19 Controller
Medium aberrant humanoid XP 2,400

Initiative +14 Senses Perception +11; darkvision, truesight 10
Eye Lure aura 3; the nothic mindblight slides each creature that starts its turn within the aura 2 squares.
HP 180; Bloodied 90
AC 32; Fortitude 32, Reflex 32, Will 29
Speed 6

⊕ Claw (standard; at-will) ✦ Necrotic
+24 vs. AC; 2d6 + 3 damage, and ongoing 5 necrotic damage (save ends).

Eye of Insanity (standard; recharges when no creature is dominated by the nothic mindblight) ✦ Fear
Ranged 5; +23 vs. Will; the target is dominated (save ends). Aftereffect: The target is dazed until the end of its next turn.

Necrotic Eye (standard; at-will) ✦ Necrotic
Close blast 5; +23 vs. Fortitude; the target takes ongoing 10 necrotic damage (save ends).

Mesmerizing Visage (standard; recharge ⚄ ⚅) ✦ Charm, Psychic
Area burst 2 within 10; targets enemies; +23 vs. Will; 2d8 + 6 psychic damage, and the target takes a -1 penalty to saving throws (save ends). First Failed Saving Throw: The target takes a -3 penalty to saving throws instead of -1 (save ends).

Alignment Unaligned Languages Deep Speech
Skills Stealth +19
Str 21 (+14) Dex 20 (+14) Wis 15 (+11)
Con 20 (+14) Int 10 (+9) Cha 12 (+10)
